To keep up its determined fight for democracy for all the peoples of the world; to draw together all American women in a spirit of better understanding so that through common action they can more effectively carry on their common work in dealing with community, state and national problems—these will continue to be the primary objectives of the National Council of Negro Women.

The Negro: His Future in America

A Special Section

ONCE AGAIN the race question is in a state of crisis. Within the space of a few war years we are making decisions, establishing policies, crystallizing our individual attitudes toward the issue in a manner that will determine whether America will witness a maximum or a minimum degree of racial turmoil in the coming decades. Whether as a people we proceed now in a moment of enlightenment, on a high level of humanism and intelligence, or whether we yield to the dark and primitive residues in our national spirit, attempting to ride roughshod over the Negro problem and over the Negro, is a decision which can bring to America a post-war era of internal healing and recovery, or a time of border fighting on the frontiers between the races, and involvement in an expanding conflict which might eventually precipitate the third world war.

The American race question is no longer a matter of domestic politics. Even in the middle years of the last century, when the controversy did assume this characteristic, it produced a destructive war. Then it was a two-part conflict between white Americans over the disposition of the Negro as property, but today the Negro is attempting to wrest the question of his own destiny from white hands, and only violence and main force will deter him in his efforts. Knowing this, American Negroes in recent years have begun to feel an esprit de corps with the other colored races whose numbers constitute an overwhelming majority, and the American race question has become an integral part of the colonial crisis throughout the world. The white majority in America must decide now what it intends to do about this crisis. Though the ultimate consequences of the decision will not confront them within the month or possibly even the decade, they belong inexorably to the future and some day they must be faced.

White America has two approaches to the problem; the first is an official approach through governmental acts and policies; the second approach is through the private acts and attitudes of citizens. An enlightened, courageous federal program could go far in conditioning the attitudes of citizens. But, unfortunately, we live in a day of official expediency, and actually it has been the attitudes of private citizens and their pressure groups which have given direction to the government.

The history of the President's Fair Employment Practice Committee is a case in point. It was formed by presidential proclamation only after Negroes had threatened a march on Washington unless something were done to ameliorate widespread discrimination against them in war industries. Then a counter pressure was initiated by Southern industry and politicians and the President permitted himself to be pushed in the other direction: the committee and its scheduled railroad hearings were abandoned. But now many white progressives joined with the Negro groups and a still more persistent pressure was brought to bear on the President; the committee was reëstablished and the hearings opened.

In this respect it appears that initiative in the field of race relations has been defaulted by the administration and has passed to private citizens and pressure groups: to the Negro and his organizations on one hand, and to anti-Negro white groups on the other.

There is a third group which must interest itself in the problem, for its stake in the solution is as great as any. This is a large passive group of white Americans who consider themselves loyal supporters of the principles of American democracy, and who have some actual sense of the meaning of the term. It is the reading, thinking, reasoning group in America who, though at present uneasy about the mounting race conflict, desires at least to understand it and to act with intelligence and fairness, and with effect. It is to these people primarily that this special supplement of The New Republic is addressed.

White America has a record of bad faith, ignorance and cruelty toward the Negro and, on the whole, the historic liberal movement shares this record. The anti-slavery agitation of the pre-Civil War era is tainted with economic implications. Though many of the agitators were sincere men, and some were even great men, it was not humanism that gave their movement its real weight so much as the greedy rivalry for the control of national policies which existed between Northern industrialism and Southern agrarianism. In the decades following the war, industrial exploitation became the beating heart and lifeblood of the Republican Party. Continued strife with the South was now bad for business, and the South remained unyielding in its demand for political and economic debasement for the Negro. The North was now faced with the choice of Southern markets, or continued interest in the Negro's welfare. Very quickly, and with thoroughness, the Negro's welfare was sacrificed. Under the inspiration of its industrial masters, rather than in a spirit of justice and sound law, the Supreme Court in the 1870's began a series of narrow and crippling interpretations of the Civil War amendments and the congressional acts which had been passed to ensure political suffrage for the Negro. The black man was turned back to his former masters; and in 1876 the deal was anointed forever. In this significant year the Northern democrats who were supporting Garfield in a close contest for the presidential candidacy made a cold-blooded bargain with the Southern states by which, in return for their support of Garfield, they were assured a free hand for all time in their dealings with the Negro.

The most shameless aspect of this trading was the arrant hypocrisy of the liberals of that day. After 1876, in the words of Charles A. Beard, "agitation of the Negro question became bad form in the North." Most of the leading anti-slavery agitators who were still living—men of such stature as Carl Schurz, E. L. Godkin, James Bryce and Thomas Wentworth Higginson—piously condoned the deal and began to express their belief that Southern Negroes were unworthy of political suffrage.

In this manner, throughout the history of the race question, the "Negro's friends" both North and South could be counted on eventually to take the path of least resistance; to pursue some policy that would create a minimum amount of inconvenience, and of fundamental readjustment, for the white race, and a minimum amount of progress for the black; and they could be counted on also to rationalize this betrayal of principle in whatever happened to be the current name for expediency—gradualism, realism, common sense. Militant women who could march in suffragette parades could also find it in themselves to accept customary or legal discrimination against Negroes without batting an eye; men who could write tracts in behalf of the eight-hour day could also fly with their neighbors to a city council for restrictive ordinances if a Negro residential section encroached upon their property; and labor unions, founded to resist the exploitation of the working classes, could be depended on to deny their communal fraternity to Negro workers, to aid and even insist upon their exploitation by the bosses.

The reason for this historic white faint-heartedness grows out of the omnipresent, insistent anti-Negro propaganda inherent in every facet of our culture. Sometimes it sprang from a conscious and cynical intention to keep the Negro a peasant, an unskilled worker, a low-wage labor source open to exploitation by white ownership; but just as often it grew out of a deep psychological fear of a "strange" race, a race with superficial markings dramatically differing from the white norm; and deeply involved in this fear was a case of bad conscience. The white soul is saturated with fear; white culture embedded within itself, and perpetuated at all cost, every educational device that was possible to teach this fear of the stranger, and buttress it through customs, myths and old wives' tales. And white America as well as black America was victimized in the process.

There is not space in this supplement to bring to bear the resources of modern science against the vast and ramifying color prejudice. Modern studies in all fields which bear upon the subject—anthropology, psychology, sociology, history—have placed on endless rows of library shelves throughout the world (removed and burned for some years now in Germany) an impressive mass of data which demonstrate the mythical nature of these race beliefs. Scientists in each field have reinforced the findings of those in others.

In America no subject has been written on more prolifically than the race question. Much of it unfortunately has been bitter and violent exposition of the race myth; much of it is negative, hypocritical and evasive. In the words of Carey McWilliams,[1] "there is actually something rather unwholesome about the accumulation of such a bulky literature on a particular problem when that writing is so barren, as it happens to be in the case of the Negro, of definite suggestions for social action." The best of the literature on the race question has appeared in very recent decades. Many good books are now being issued as a result of mounting crisis.

Under separate headings, we shall discuss outstanding phases of the problem as it exists today. The discussion necessarily must deal primarily with current aspects rather than with history and anthropology, but a discussion of a few outstanding findings of the modern race scientists is properly first in order.

Race Science

A JESUIT PRIEST who teaches a course in race relations in an American university, an authority in the field, asserted in a recent discussion of modern anthropological studies that "once you grasp the central idea you've got the whole thing." By central idea he meant the concept that, though races exhibit obvious and measurable physical differences, there are no inherited intellectual or moral superiorities. Leading anthropologists are overwhelmingly in agreement on this point.

A century ago it was the fashion of head-measurers and anthropologists in Europe to cling to the theory of the master race, with a list of descending races who were graded, in most cases, by the colors of their skin. And almost without exception the particular anthropologist found that the master race happened to be his own. Count Arthur de Gobineau formulated and was the first great propagandist of the master-race theory—in a book called "Les Races Humaines." It was copied by many others, among them Houston Chamberlain, a Germanophile who some fifty years ago was known as the Kaiser's private anthropologist. Gobineau's theory was the inspiration of Hitler's master-racism; and thus a piece of evil ignorance which is ridiculed by modern scientists—and rejected by most churches as heresy—inflamed the mind of a mean and thwarted psychopath and enabled him to drive a world to war largely through the manipulation of the latent prejudices and hatreds that exist in the masses of unthinking people.

This is a list of a few of the anthropologists, unquestioned leaders in this field, whose books and monographs through the years have taken the race myth apart piece by piece and laid it forever, like witchcraft, in the graveyard of primitive superstitions: Franz Boas, Ales Hrdlicka, Melville Herskovits, Ruth Benedict, Earnest Hooton, Carlton Coon, Otto Klineberg, M. F. Ashley-Montagu. There are many others.

Climate, geographical background, diet and breeding in isolation are most frequently advanced in theories concerning the explanation of physical racial differences. The folk belief of many whites that the Negro stands at a lower stage of development away from apes has long ago been brushed aside. To many intelligent people it may seem superficial even to bring this point into the discussion; but it is not, for these are the beliefs which still, at this late date, bolster the dark, subjective prejudices in many white minds, even those which have been exposed to education. The point is covered briefly in a pamphlet by Ashley-Montagu:

> If some of our racists would take the trouble to visit their local zoo, and for a moment drop their air of superiority and take a dispassionate look at either one of these apes [gorilla or chimpanzee], they would find that the hair of these creatures is lank, that their lips are thin, and that their body is profusely covered with hair. In these characters the white man stands nearer to the apes than does the Negro. Is the white man then, for this reason, to be judged inferior to the Negro? Surely not.

The pro-slavery literature of America is laden with the persistent tortuous argument that the Negro is a primitive—incapable of learning the white man's culture, incapable of appreciating it when he does make a show of learning it. Racists speak the same language; in "Mein Kampf" one runs across Hitler's violent resentment against the groups in Great Britain who give legal training to Negroes and then believe that they have actually made barristers out of "apes." Just as Hitler would have remained unconvinced by a citation of the brilliant legal work of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the American racists who today couch the old slavery argument in current terms remain adamantly unconvinced in the face of abundant evidence of Negro achievement. One hears this argument frequently from old-American Anglo-Saxon Southerners, whose forebears gave it currency in the beginning. There is a passage in a letter that Cicero wrote to Atticus which should come as a jolt to such people, for it reveals that once their own ancestors were considered the primitives of Europe, and Cicero's language is exactly their own. It is quoted by Ruth Benedict in "Race: Science and Politics": "Do not obtain your slaves from Britain because they are so stupid and so utterly incapable of being taught that they are not fit to form a part of the household of Athens."

Environment has played a tragic part in retarding the Negro's progress in America. In the South this has been done with calculation, and the Negro's resultant ignorance has been offered as evidence of his unfitness—a trap from which there was no means of escape. In the North, anti-Negro prejudice has differed from that in the South only because of the fact that the fewer numbers of Negroes have kept this prejudice in a state of relative passivity. The Negro has been discriminated against and he has been subjected to customary, and sometimes to "legal," Jim Crow.

But one great advantage he has had in the North has been better schooling. In intelligence testing, when the Negro's environment has been related to the environment of the white children whose tests were used for comparison, the results have been similar. There is one brief table in Otto Klineberg's book, "Race Differences," which shows in a penetrating manner the influence of environment on intelligence. It is based on army intelligence-testing records in the last war which demonstrated the fact that Negroes who had been educated in the schools of progressive Northern states had higher intelligence scores than white recruits from a number of Southern states. The table is reproduced here:

SOUTHERN WHITES AND NORTHERN NEGROES, BY STATES, ARMY RECRUITS

Whites		Negroes
State	Median Score	State	Median Score
Mississippi	41.25	Pennsylvania	42.00
Kentucky	41.50	New York	45.02
Arkansas	41.55	Illinois	47.35
Georgia	42.12	Ohio	49.50

The white intellect that will unshackle itself from a cultural residue of race myths can find abundant evidence in modern scientific literature of the equality of men; not equality between any two given men—the point on which little intellects are wont to quibble—but men in general, regardless of skin color, nose width or eye slant. Even better evidence is available outside of libraries, for white people who can learn to look upon Negroes with a free and open mind; and with good will instead of fear or malice in their hearts.

The bugaboo of intermarriage, which lurks in even the most civilized white minds, could as well be forgotten. People are going to mate with whom they please, as they have in the past, and laws to prevent it are futile. For the white people who fear intermarriage, there is literally no problem; they will never be forced to submit to it. Marriages, to quote Henry Fielding, are made of "high and tender friendship," and such an emotion does not grow from a feeling of repulsion. Nor have the South's strict anti-miscegenation laws prevented a constant lightening of the Negro's skin. There have been many mixed couples, legally married in Northern states, whose lives would put to shame the clandestine carnality of the white men who have created the generations of mixed-blood Negroes—to whom they have repudiated all the obligations of parenthood.

Of the thirteen million Negroes in America, six millions are light-skinned mulattoes. Melville Herskovits estimates that less than a quarter of all Negroes are pure-blooded. A good portion of the mixture comes from American Indian stock; but a considerable portion comes also from whites. It is ironic that those who cry loudest against "social equality," by which they mean intermarriage, hail from the states, counties and townships where white blood, regardless of the law, flowed in the heaviest volume into Negro veins. These protestants should know, if anyone should, that people mate with whom they please; it is a very personal and private decision.

The Negro in Industry

In 1940 the Negro woke up to the fact that white America had just about decided not to give him a job in any of the profitable fields of employment. The story has been well told in a recent column by P. L. Prattis in The Pittsburgh Courier:

> Negroes did not know that they were being methodically and consciously driven out of industry. They knew that certain labor unions were excluding them, but they did not understand that management desired to get along without the black worker. Of course, there had always been bars of a kind against the Negro worker. But this same worker had been hopeful that these bars were relics of slavery and the Reconstruction period and that they would wear away. He had no idea that custom was going to depress his status with the same certitude as the infamous Black Codes. He had had some experience losing jobs after the World War. That period gave currency to the expression that "the Negro is the last hired, the first fired." The black worker always hoped to beat the tragic implications of that expression. He simply did not want to believe that a time might come when no Negroes would be hired.
> Then came the depression, with millions of jobless Negroes. Even in the South, where certain classes of menial jobs had by custom been yielded to him, the Negro found himself displaced by the poor white who needed work. Closer and closer to the periphery of economic desperation the Negro was pushed. Some Negroes regarded their plight philosophically. There weren't enough jobs to go around. Whites needed jobs. Certainly, the whites would get most of the jobs first. But, as more and more jobs became available in better times, the Negro would be given a fair share of them too. That is what the average black worker hoped.
> Up until 1940, the black worker really had not sensed what had taken place. He didn't realize that there had been a sort of meeting of minds throughout America and that there existed a cold-blooded understanding not to use the hands and skills of Negroes in the vast majority of gainful pursuits. That only became apparent with the approach of the war emergency and the call for workers. Black workers thought they would be called, too, but they weren't. Vast industrial enterprises went into operation, employing thousands and thousands of workers, but the doors were slammed hard in the face of the black man. . . .

In the years immediately preceding the First World War the United States was receiving annually about a million and a quarter immigrants, who supplied the bulk of the unskilled labor needed by industry. This tide was diminished, and then almost completely checked, as America closed the gates and as the countries of Europe kept their nationals home to work or fight. Mounting industrial production in America created a manpower vacuum and into it eventually was sucked the surplus white and Negro labor of the fecund South. Nearly two million Negroes left Dixie during the war years. They were drawn not only by the lure of high wages but also by the greater freedom and educational opportunities offered in the North.

The Negro was hit severely in the depression of 1923, and the depression of 1929 brought him economic devastation. In the North he had been forced into run-down, overcrowded residential sections, and during the depression the rates for disease, crime, death and delinquency began to soar. Desperate, the Negro sought escape from his problems in various ways. Some of these were gaudy and impractical, like the Marcus Garvey movement to found a "homeland" in Africa. During the days of mounting relief rolls —more than half the adult population of Harlem was on the dole—Negroes in large numbers began to follow the Communist Party line. Communist exploitation of a number of celebrated issues like the Scottboro case also proved effective propaganda. But an overwhelming majority of Negroes continued to cling stubbornly to a belief in the promise of America, and a hope that sooner or later the great day would come when it would open to them.

It is difficult to determine exactly why the Negro found himself persona non grata when industry began to boom in 1940, even in many fields where before he had been accepted. Certainly he had not become a poorer worker in the interim. Perhaps he had become a different person. His race consciousness and militancy had been growing since the depression years. Probably the Negro had become identified in the thinking of industrial management as a point of focus for restlessness and agitation.

A brief listing of the FEPC's findings in Los Angeles in October, 1941, illuminates the manner in which American industry had begun to freeze the Negro out: Douglas Aircraft employed 33,000 workers—10 of them Negroes. North American Aviation employed eight Negroes—all janitors; the company president announced publicly that Negroes were unacceptable in any other capacity. Bethlehem's San Pedro shipyard had two skilled Negroes working as common laborers, both hired on the morning of the hearing. Lockheed-Vega Aircraft had 54 Negroes out of 48,000—all hired in recent weeks, under threat of the hearing. Consolidated Aircraft of San Diego had 225 Negroes in custodial capacities out of 28,000, but claimed this was the fault of the International Association of Machinists (AFL). Boeing Aircraft had no Negroes among 41,000 at Seattle—and also blamed the Machinists.[1]

Negroes by their own efforts had forced the creation of the FEPC in Executive Order 8802, which prohibited racial discrimination in war industry. Picket lines, mass demonstrations, delegations to Washington had been organized all over the country. Faint-hearted Negro leaders who cautioned "patience" were brushed aside as "Uncle Tom's" and "handkerchief-heads" and "pussyfooters." For the first time an aggressive spiritual unity appeared in all sections of the country and in every stratum of Negro life. Under the leadership of A. Philip Randolph of the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, a leader with a reputation for personal integrity and with a long history of effective militancy, a number of organizations united in a proposed "March-on-Washington" movement. The plan —probably too ambitious for actual realization—called for the march of 100,000 orderly Negroes down the streets of Washington.

At first it was derided by official Washington, and then taken seriously when it became apparent that the protestants were in earnest. It was not difficult to imagine what headlines such a demonstration would produce in Berlin or Tokyo. Under this sharp, persistent pressure—the Negro's own creation, it must be remembered—the administration acted and the FEPC was created to ameliorate such flagrant discriminations as the first hearings uncovered on the West Coast.

So long as the committee confined itself to investigations in Northern and Western areas, it encountered only normal opposition. As soon as it scheduled hearings in Birmingham, Alabama, the Dixie bloc in Washington swung into action. A campaign of protest and propaganda—much of it inspired by Northern-owned subsidiaries in the South—swept through the Southern press and industries and soon the inevitable charge that the committee was attempting to foster "social equality" was raised. Jew-baiting, Negro-baiting racists like Rep. John Rankin of Mississippi, both behind the scenes and on the floor, assailed the committee savagely. Erstwhile Southern liberals, who in the past had been spokesmen for mild race reforms, made a complete about-face now that they were confronted with a decision that had more than superficial meaning. They began to speak and write about shelving all discussion of the race problem until after the war. Nevertheless the hearings were held, and they received sincere support by a number of Alabama newspapers and progressive citizens' groups.

The howl raised over the Birmingham session proved only the first stirring breeze to the storm that greeted the FEPC's scheduling of hearings into the firmly entrenched discriminatory practices exployed by a number of railroads and railroad unions, particularly in the South. Skilled Negro railroad workers, the highest-paid Negroes in the country, were being systematically and brutally excluded from employment by an agreement between the railroads and the unions. The first victims of the exclusion were 2,400 Negro firemen. Very simple means provided for the exclusion. The Interstate Commerce Commission had ruled that steam engines must be replaced by Diesel or by stoker-fed engines by July 1, 1943. An agreement signed on February 28, 1941, by the Southeastern Carriers' Conference Committee and the Brotherhood of Locomotive Firemen and Enginemen made it impossible for a Negro fireman working on a steam or stokerized engine to be switched to a Diesel engine. It limited these jobs only to "promotable men," which in an earlier agreement had been defined as white men only. Thus Negroes with long seniority, who had taken firemen's jobs on railroads twenty and thirty years ago when shoveling coal was hard and dirty work, at low pay, were now being summarily forced out because the work on Diesel engines was easy and comparatively pleasant, and desired by white men.

Negro railway employees had been completely deprived of any effective means of raising objections to this agreement. By the Railroad Labor Act, the Brotherhoods assumed the right to act as sole bargaining agent for Negro employees. But the same employees are excluded from membership in the "bargaining agent," which holds a closed-shop contract.[1]

Here was discrimination in a virulent form.

A delegation of six of the most reactionary Southern Senators hastened to the White House and laid down an ultimatum that unless the hearings were canceled, the administration could not enact any of its legislation. The President, by now yielding to the Southern bloc almost through force of habit, yielded again. On the night before he left for the Casablanca conference he ordered "indefinite postponement" of the hearings.

The FEPC's budget was held up. Strangulation of the FEPC began, at first subtly, and then ruthlessly.

But the President had made a mistake. The committee had worked well during the months of its existence and had turned up malodorous discriminatory conditions that had affronted white noses as well as Negro. A nationwide protest of minority groups followed, and the March-on-Washington threat was again revived. But perhaps more effective than anything else in impelling the President to revive the committee and reissue an anti-discrimination proclamation was the bald and indisputable fact that for a signer of the Atlantic Charter and as the leader of world democracy, he had acted with extraordinary weakness in canceling the railroad hearings.

On September 15, under the guidance of a new FEPC headed by Msgr. Francis J. Haas, the hearings were resumed with a vigorous presentation of the case against the railroads. The results of this hearing are being watched closely by Negroes and white groups throughout the country. They will give a sign whether or not the administration, after months of stumbling, appeasement and indirection, now actually realizes that the question of Negro employment is a grave matter which requires an honest, capable program instead of vacillation and expediency.

The railroad cases illustrate a widespread pattern of discrimination practised by various unions, the great majority of them AFL. Another far-reaching case, now before the National Labor Relations Board, involves the Bethlehem Shipyard at Alameda, California, and the Bay Cities Metal Trades Council. The AFL Boilermakers' Union, principal member of the council, set up auxiliary locals for Chinese and Negro workers, collected dues, restricted them to the poorest jobs, but gave them no say in union affairs. The council's jurisdiction has been challenged by the CIO steelworkers' and welders' unions, which do not bar Negroes. The NLRB decision, which directly involves union discrimination, will have far-reaching effects.

It is true, however, that on the whole Negroes by now have been able to get work in wartime industry. They are still barred from most of the most desirable job classifications, and are denied upgrading according to their skills, largely through threats and resentful attitudes on the part of white workers. And, although the FEPC did unusually effective work on its meager budget, largely by bringing the pressure of publicity to bear upon industry, it is the cold, mathematical need for manpower which has been chiefly responsible for giving the Negro employment. And the Negro knows he faces one of the stiffest fights of his history to keep any appreciable amount of his gains.

In time of war and crisis, he makes his gains. In depressions, and post-war eras of shrinking industry, he loses ground; the blows fall first and heaviest upon him. He remembers the First World War, and what came after. The only answer he can have to "white friends" who enjoin him to put away any thoughts of race reforms until after the war is first to try to swallow his disillusionment, and work with greater determination for his share of democracy—now.

The Negro has two means of preparing himself for the post-war crisis. One is to try to nail down every gain he has made by getting formal rulings from law courts and governmental agencies. This phase is important, but it is not enough. The Negro must also try by good work to fit so well into industry that management will see no economic advantage, and perhaps even disadvantage, in laying him off because of the color of his skin.

In driving this vital fact into the minds of Negro workers, the Negro press and a number of other organizations, hammering away week after week, logically, compellingly, are performing one of the most constructive educational tasks in American history. While the race press has been widely attacked for its militancy, white critics at the same time have consistently overlooked or failed to understand this important work.

While Negro leadership can accomplish much by attempting to create a prideful race consciousness on the part of poorly educated masses of workers—maintaining a constant din of propaganda against absenteeism, drinking, vulgarity, uncouthness in dress or manner —sermonizing alone cannot do it. Characteristics which grow up in any exploited peasantry or slum population, white or black, as a form of rebelliousness and release, cannot be completely eradicated by a period of momentary prosperity, especially when the prosperity is only relative. Oppression and discrimination must cease and slums must be obliterated before their effects upon a people can be obliterated as well

Last July in Detroit, Vice President Wallace gave voice to a heart-lifting view of America's post-war assets; he described a world in which the Negro would have an excellent chance to hold his wartime gains, and to advance them, along with workers in general:

> When the guns stop, America will find itself with the following assets:
> 1. Manpower by the million; skilled workers from war industries, military manpower and young people coming of working age.
> 2. The largest industrial plant capacity in the world.
> 3. The greatest resources, both natural and artificial, to make peacetime products and thousands of new inventions waiting to be converted to peacetime use.
> 4. The largest scientific arms plant in the world.
> 5. The largest backlog of requirements for housing, transportation, communications and living comforts.
> 6. The greatest reserve of accumulated savings by individuals that any nation has ever known.
> With such wealth, who says this nation is now bankrupt, if industrial management can bring the same wisdom for producing for peace that it has shown on many production fronts in the supply program for war?

The whole nation has a stake in bringing about full use of these assets. Most of the planning going on in Washington today is directed toward this end. But certainly a special and adequate type of planning is needed to assure the Negro's participation in this world on a broadening basis of equality. The Negro has always had two strikes against him economically; if no special effort is made by the administration to prevent it, the first pitched ball of the post-war era once again will strike him out; the first post-war jolts to the full-employment war economy will result in nationwide lay-offs of Negro workers; an inevitable reappearance of malcontent and unemployed slum populations; an inevitable heightening of race conflict; inevitable riots. This is a problem for the administration to think about. It is a problem too for industrial management, which certainly has much to lose in an America swept by race tension and rioting. And, of paramount importance, it is a problem that the individual white American must concern himself with and attempt to ameliorate through enlightened attitudes and deeds.

Negroes in the Armed Forces

COMPARED WITH HIS EXPERIENCE in the last war, the Negro soldier has a better time of it in this one. But one thing must be borne in mind in such comparisons: the Negro's maturing need for justice has outstripped his gains in all fields. This was an act of human nature; of intellects that learned, of eyes that observed, of native intelligence and manhood and human hungering rising over caution. There are a number of white men who try by tortuous, deceiving argument to attach some sort of blame to the Negro people for this development. In doing so, they reveal their own spiritual and intellectual inertia; no onus can be placed on a people for being alive and human and having the capacity to learn and hunger.

In the First World War, less than a thousand Negroes were trained as officers, in a segregated camp at Des Moines, Iowa. The training given them seemed at times as though it were designed to ensure their failure as officers. After he had received his commission, the Negro officer found himself subjected to a disheartening variety of humiliations. When he reached France he found that official United States Army orders and advices had been issued warning the French people not to associate with Negro officers or soldiers, and barring Negroes from restaurants and public places. Yet despite all this, Negro troops exhibited an ironclad resistance to German propaganda which sought to capitalize on their experiences in the army and at home.

Many of the Negro regiments distinguished themselves. One of them, the 369th of New York, served under fire longer than any other regiment and achieved the distinction of never having yielded an inch of ground. Because it was brigaded with French troops, who treated its soldiers more decently, the 369th was given opportunity to show its mettle as was no other Negro unit.

But the experience of Negro troops on the whole was humiliating:

> To the Service of Supply regiments [writes Carter G. Woodson] most Negro draftees were sent. Not less than three-fourths of the 200,000 of the Negroes sent to France were reduced to laborers. It resulted that one-tenth of the population of the nation was compelled, by a country fighting for democracy abroad, to supply three-fourths of the labor of the expeditionary force. They were commanded moreover largely by illiterate, prejudiced white men, and finally all but enslaved in the Service of Supply divisions abroad by unsympathetic whites, the majority of whom were Southerners on the order of slave drivers.

Abolition of segregated officer training has been the most liberal advance in army race policy between the wars. During the present war, without difficulty or conflict, Negroes in considerably larger numbers have been trained with white soldiers in officer-candidate schools, the majority of which are in the South. But after training, the officers return to duty with segregated troops—not all, it is hoped, to forget the lessons of democracy and mutual respect learned through association in the schools.

Large numbers of Negro troops still go to labor battalions, but here too, by comparison with his First World War experience, he is getting a better break.

The Air Forces at first refused to accept Negroes in any capacity, but after the appeals and criticism of Negro and white groups had been focused on the War Department, the Air Forces established a training school for a limited number of pursuit pilots at Tuskegee Institute, in Alabama. These pilots have been in action since the Sicilian campaign. The War Department, apparently convinced that Negroes make satisfactory airmen, has announced that Negroes will be trained for bombers also, as pilots, navigators and bombardiers, in an unsegregated school at Del Rio, Texas.

The navy, in which the Negro had served almost exclusively as a mess attendant, held out for a long time against enlisting Negroes as general seamen, but it announced last year that Negroes would now be used in this classification and assigned to navy yards and shore installations. The Coast Guard and Marine Corps, also initially prejudiced against Negroes, finally let down the bars and manifested an encouraging willingness to admit Negroes and to permit their advancement as combat personnel.

In their comparative effects upon Negro morale, these relative gains in military status have been more than invalidated by the constant humiliations suffered by Negro soldiers at the hands of sheriffs, police, bus drivers, railway conductors, shopkeepers and, to a lesser extent, by white commanding officers and military police. There have been about a score of race riots, ranging from small localized outbreaks to pitched battles in which a number of lives were lost. These involved Negro and white troops, and some times white municipal police. A growing number of Negro soldiers have been beaten or murdered in the vicinity of Southern training camps. The inflexible pattern of local authorities has been to put the blame for aggressiveness on the victims. The record of the War and Justice Departments in these cases has been one of constant evasion of their democratic responsibilities, and surrender to Southern racial patterns. It must be remembered that in almost all of these cases, regardless of how the blame has been fixed officially, it is inconconceivable that a white soldier could have been shot for the same reasons, or that wanton slayings of white personnel would be ignored by the federal government as they have been ignored in the case of Negro troops.

It is true that the army (like America) has been confronted with an extraordinarily difficult dilemma. At the beginning of the war in Europe we were caught with probably less than 100,000 fully equipped troops. The General Staff faced staggering tasks: of creating divisions literally overnight; of transforming America from a comatose peacetime nation into a great military power. Draft machinery had to be set up. Cantonments and other centers by the hundreds had to be planned, ordered and built in a matter of weeks and months. The army's task was enormously complicated by the confusion in domestic politics; by habitual obstruction and an incredible lack of realism—or worse—on the part of men who seemed almost willing to see America eventually humiliated and defeated. To top it all, the army was forced to maintain our fiction of neutrality and to train men for hypothetical battles with unnamed enemies, rather than for a certain death struggle with Germans, Italians and Japanese.

No necessity was as urgent as the necessity for speed. One decision made instantly was that a large proportion of the camps had to be built in the South. The milder climate afforded more days for outdoor physical work by green civilians in uniform. The open spaces, the forests, the cut-over pinelands afforded room for maneuvers, resulting in the least damage and delays for farming and other civilian pursuits. In the milder climate camps could be built with a smaller proportion of vital building materials, such as heating equipment and insulation.

In the face of these monumental tasks, the army apparently decided that it must accept the Southern Jim Crow patterns for the Negro troops which would be trained in the South. The army itself, furthermore, was built of America's components, and the principle of segregation was embedded in it. There were large proportions of Southern officers of all ranks, from top to bottom; as military resources the army relied heavily on them. Southern states had the highest rates of enlistments. Because of the relative poverty of the South, a greater proportion of its young men had been trained in the state-supported institutions which conducted reserve-officer-training programs as a function of their land-grant charters, in return for state and federal support. Huge Texas A and M, for example, has sent more officers to the war than has West Point. Because of all these factors, the student of contemporary America, even though deploring the tragic national background which produced it, must nevertheless understand the inevitability of the army's decision not to buck the Southern race pattern, or comparable bi-racial patterns wherever they manifested themselves, North or South.

By now it must have become apparent to the army that a mistake has been made, a mistake judged not on the basis of ethics, but on the basis of military logistics. The mistake was not in its failure to choose completely to override the South's Jim Crow patterns—for that could not be done—but in the excessive degree in which they have been observed. As a result, the morale of Negro soldiers is one of the major background problems which confront the army—probably the most important; and the morale of Negro civilians—who number a tenth of the nation—has suffered its severest damage through the experiences of Negroes in the army.

For three years now, the letters of Negro soldiers have flowed homeward; month by month the volume has mounted; year by year the information which they contained has been digested and disseminated through the Negro population; until at last, in this brief space, they have created an actual folkway, to use the term of social scientists, among the Negro people. It is an ominous folkway.[1] Its basis is a belief that sons and husbands and loved ones are subjected to humiliation and injustice in the army of American democracy. It is a belief also that Negroes in army camps, particularly in the South, are in constant physical danger at the hands of white authorities, principally civilian.

The Negro press has disseminated much of this information. A number of white critics, with utter disregard for elemental considerations of justice, have accused the press of reckless and hysterical agitation. It is fallacious to accuse the Negro's newspapers and his leaders of having created this folkway; they have done no more than report and react—with indignation, it is true—to actual instances of cruelty and brutality to Negro soldiers by civilians, or discriminatory treatment of them in the army. The folkway has been created by the Negro soldier's experiences.

[1] This fact is recommended to the attention of those sociologists, most of whom are Southerners, who argue that the South can be expected to make no rapid readjustment in its archaic relationships with Negroes because these relationships are rooted in folkways, which by their slow growth and inertia cannot be altered except through continuance of the slow evolutionary process. A counter-folkway has grown up in the Negro people; on the side of this folkway reposes elemental justice, and the weight of modern world history. Intransigence on the part of white Southerners breeds intransigence on the part of Negroes; a genuine and meaningful effort to adjust the Southern pattern would greatly diminish the ominous and fatalistic element in the Negro attitude. Only in this way can the present tragic attrition and mounting clashes be brought to a halt, and a period of actual interracial progress be ushered in.

Anyone who has had access to large numbers of the letters of Negro soldiers knows their tone: bitterness and disillusionment, often accompanied by macabre humor. Their experiences have an impressive uniformity. They are put off buses to give white soldiers or civilians a seat; they are beaten, or their friends are beaten, for speaking out sullenly or bitterly to bus drivers; merchants insult them and keep them out of their stores; townsmen refer to them commonly as "nigger"; white policemen threaten them or beat them with little provocation; the army refuses to stand up for them in controversies with local authorities; there is little to do when they go into the towns on passes but walk around aimlessly trying to keep out of trouble —feeling like unwanted pariahs even though clothed in the uniform of a soldier. There are many other complaints; sometimes bloody violence figures in them.

There is no use quoting these letters, or raking over the details of riots and shootings. This supplement is not intended as an exposé but as exposition and analysis of the problem.

It must be observed also that the morale of many white troops, many who have an actual philosophical understanding of the principles of a democracy, and a belief in them, and a desire to fight for them but not for fascist principles, has been damaged by observing the undemocratic indignities suffered by Negro soldiers. It is significant that at least three-fourths of the articles and letters sent to The New Republic by soldiers deal with the problem. This does not mean that three-fourths of the white personnel of the army is concerned about it—far from it; soldiers who read journals of opinion in preference to magazines with pin-up girls must be in a very small minority. But it is nevertheless a fact of significance; it argues that there must certainly be elements of native democracy and decency in the army on which a more enlightened, and less dangerous, race policy could be built by the commanding generals.

A reading of Southern newspapers discloses the fact that the South is laboring under the illusion that race clashes are caused almost exclusively by "uppity" Negroes in Northern units who don't know their place like Southern Negroes. A study of the facts of these clashes disproves this. A listing of the home towns of Negro soldiers involved in riots discloses a large number of them, probably a majority, to be from Southern states. And it is also true that the folkway of discontent is firmly embedded in Southern Negro civilians whose men are in the army. This forebodes a tragic day for the South when white troops and Negro troops are mustered out and return home. It is impossible for the army to take a Negro youth and make a soldier out of him, teach him how to kill on a battlefield, how to defend himself, how to sustain himself in crisis through courage, daring and skill, and then expect him to slip back easily into his former role of complacency, servility and caution. Clearly the only way to avoid the tragic results that are looming in Southern history is for the South to learn—for the South's leaders to teach it—that the Negro, by all the rights of democracy, by all the ethics of Christianity, by all the arguments of prudence and common sense, must be accorded a greater measure of freedom and respect than he has known before. For the South to develop some techniques of actual coöperation with Negroes would be a way out; but coöperation does not mean patronizing—the subtle, dictatorial arrogance which has often passed by this name in the past. The only other answer is to hold the Negro to the old pattern by force and violence. The South's history stands proof that it can be done, for a time at least; but it also suggests what the ghastly cost will be.

It is a known fact that the army is gravely concerned with its race problem as a military factor. Some of the top command are convinced that segregation is uneconomical, militarily wasteful and harmful. Much attention is being given to the problem—but, unfortunately, with the field of remedial action always limited, perhaps in the long run fatally so, by the swollen power of Southern politicians.

The single, dramatic, sound and clear-cut act by which the army could give an incalculable lift of spirit to its Negro troops, to thousands of white troops, to Negro civilians and to millions of white ones, is the creation of a voluntarily mixed division of white and Negro soldiers. Responsible Americans in great numbers have petitioned the War Department to take this step. The division could undoubtedly be filled instantly with volunteers; many soldiers, including numbers of liberal Southerners, have already made known their wishes to serve. Undoubtedly, the division would draw an intelligent, high-type personnel. But the army will probably not take this step (in the American race question it often seems that the right steps are the ones which must be summarily ruled out). From the army's point of view, there are two obstacles: the inevitable opposition from the South, even though the enrolment would be on a voluntary basis; and second, the army's own innately reactionary wish to keep enlightened liberal white troops and Negroes far apart, lest they give one another "subversive" ideas. The consideration that a division motivated by intelligence and a creative ideal would probably be a splendid division for hazardous fighting will hardly enter into the matter.[1]

[1] There is a forgotten Civil War story in the army's archives which is timely today, and which would have been well worth study by the ranking officers who laid down the army's race policies in the present war.

It concerns Gen. Benjamin F. Butler and his use of Negro troops in defense of the Mississippi Valley in 1862. Butler, commanding general at New Orleans following the city's capture, was at first contemptuous of the Negro's military potentialities. A congressional

A mixed division would be the best thing; the next best things are remedies of limited nature. Yet it is important to try them. The army shows signs of making some progress. Thus far, however, the emphasis has been on minimizing race prejudice among troops in foreign service among dark peoples. The Office of Special Services of the War Department has prepared excellently written guides for troops in countries where skin color, traditions, history, language, clothing and religion are markedly different. They include valuable instructions on what to do and what not to do, among them injunctions concerning race prejudice itself. But the point is not labeled, and in some of the guides the issue is treated so delicately as to be of doubtful efficacy. Some passages, however, offer arguments which the army might well present to its own white troops training in America, and to civilians in cantonment areas. Here is one from the guide to West Africa:

> Race prejudice against the African or against American Negro troops in Africa would be a good way to turn the African against us. Everyone is entitled to his own prejudices, but it would be only sensible for those who have them to keep them under cover when such high stakes as the war and men's lives are on the table. None of us wants to aid Hitler.

After a regrettable and costly delay, the army apparently has begun to realize the necessity for some sort of domestic program. In September the Army War College made excerpts of a clear-cut military analysis of race prejudice from the August issue of the highly respected Infantry Journal. These excerpts, and others from The Journal, were supplied to officers along with a selected reading list of articles and books dealing with the race problem. A few queer books like the racist tract "The Rising Tide of Color," by Lothrop Stoddard, were included, perhaps through an ill considered effort to give a rounded picture. But on the whole the material was excellent. It is also rumored that the War Department is planning to include courses of instruction in all army camps—presumably illuminating the military cost of aggressive racism—under the direction of Lt.-Commander Herbert Agar.

If passages from the Infantry Journal article could be impressed upon all commanding officers, and if these would thereby stand up for the human dignity of their troops in uniform, Negro as well as white, in the face of frequently wanton aggression and brutality on the part of civilian authorities and occasionally white military police, they would go a long way toward solving the mounting problem of Negro morale; on the home front as well as in the army. One passage reads:

> Sometimes the prejudice against the Negroes flares up in the army. It is not a problem, however, in a camp where it is well understood that a soldier in the United States uniform is a soldier, not a white or Negro, Christian or Jew, rich man or poor, but a soldier, and as such is worthy of respect.
> And not everyone feels race prejudice. There are plenty of white men who are constantly meeting and working with black, brown and yellow men of brains, education, culture and ability. These white men know that skin color is not a sign of inferiority or superiority, and they tend to forget about it. . . . Those white men are numerous in Europe, South America, Asia and Africa, where the races are mixed up in business and politics.
> In the United States we are more used to seeing large numbers of men with dark skins who are uneducated. We do not often meet the scholars among the Chinese, Negroes and other dark-skinned peoples. The two oceans have in the past prevented most of us from becoming acquainted with the more able and successful men of Africa and Asia. So we keep our prejudices. Nowadays, with the great American enthusiasm for the bravery of our Chinese allies, this prejudice is less than it was, but it is still very strong.
> Now, however, the American soldier is going among people who do not share his prejudices. These unprejudiced white men may find it hard to understand if he shows antagonism toward other Americans or our allies on account of their color, just as the Americans may be surprised at these more liberal attitudes.
> If, however, the American soldier understands the basis for his own feelings, as well as those of the men he meets, he can avoid friction and embarrassment to America.
> And he must come to understand and learn to respect their manners. Only then will he realize that national differences in manners and customs are mostly due to differences of tradition, climate and religion.

"A soldier in the United States uniform is a soldier, not a white or Negro, Christian or Jew, rich man or poor, but a soldier, and as such is worthy of respect." Here is the mandate of common sense, of morality, of history, to the army of American democracy.

resolution furthermore had restricted Negro service to labor battalions "for the purpose of constructing entrenchments, performing camp service, or any other labor in the military or naval service for which they may be found competent." But eventually, having been denied reinforcements from Washington and proceeding under orders to hold New Orleans "by all means and hazards," he mustered into service a self-drilled corps of Native Guards numbering about five thousand Negroes. In the course of time his prejudice moved to another extreme and he wrote of his Negro troops that "better soldiers never shouldered a musket." Later he wrote a report excoriating Gen. Nathaniel P. Banks, who succeeded him at New Orleans and reinstituted retrogressive policies toward the black troops. While Butler's personal character has been discredited, this following opinion of the service of Negro troops (a clear foreshadowing of the army's race problem today) cannot be deprived of its military significance:

"After I left New Orleans, Gen. Banks enlisted many more of them [Negroes] but was weak enough to take away from them the great object of their ambition, under the spur of which they were ready to fight to the death, namely, equality with the white soldiers. He was also unmanly enough to add injustices to that folly by taking the commissions from their line officers, which I had given them, and to brand their organization with the stigma of a designation as the Corps d' Afrique. Yet in spite of this unwisdom, they did equal service and laid down their lives at Port Hudson in equal numbers comparatively with their white brothers in arms."

Today, eighty years later, the progressive attitude toward the conditions of Negro service, which General Butler found militarily sound policy and for which he argued, is still denied by the army.

18 Wins in 19 Tries and Every Victory a Blow for Democracy!

Of the 19 cases its legal staff has carried to the U. S. Supreme Court, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People has compiled the enviable record of winning 18—every victory a hammer blow in the cause of American Democracy!

These victories have established precedent, for ALL citizens, that:

- No person may be convicted on a confession obtained through torture.
- No person may be deprived of life or liberty without "due process of law."
- Convictions by courts dominated by mob sentiment are not "due process of law."
- Residential segregation by municipal ordinance is unconstitutional.
- No sentence imposed by a jury from which systematic exclusion of Negroes has been practiced is valid.

To carry on the civil rights phase of its work the NAACP maintains a full-time Legal Staff whose chief traveled a total of 50,000 miles in 1942; a National Legal Committee of 29 lawyers, white and colored, located in 18 cities; and, in each of its 546 Branches in 41 states and the District of Columbia, a standing Legal Redress Committee usually including in membership at least one attorney.

The Negro and Politics

LEGAL AND EXTRA-LEGAL DISFRANCHISEMENT of some nine million Negroes—and millions of whites—who live in Southern states is one of the chief pieces of unfinished business before American democracy. Among progressive Americans everywhere a priority must be given to all efforts to broaden the basis of suffrage. This must be done through the support of federal measures like the perennial anti-poll-tax bill, which sooner or later will be passed, and through educational programs to bring home to the understanding of the white masses that the Negro is a potential ally and not an enemy. It is only through broadening the base of suffrage that the South can escape from its long and costly imprisonment by the industrial and agrarian plutocracy. Once, in an access of enlightenment and affirmation, white men rose in a populist political rebellion against their masters. Fear of the Negro in the long run proved their fatal weakness, for it was manipulated with skill and ruthlessness by the plutocracy; it was used to divide and confuse, and eventually to crush the movement. The impetus which moved them half a century ago must be again awakened by organized labor and other progressive groups in the South, and this time the Negro must be an ally. History teaches this lesson.

Over and over again, one hears in the wartime declarations of Southern politicians a curiously twisted argument; an argument which is not without grim humor. "While our boys are fighting and dying for democracy on Guadalcanal," one Southern legislator said some months ago, "democracy is being betrayed at home by these anti-poll-tax agitators, who are trying to destroy our principle of white supremacy." In one version or another, this statement has been made many times. One runs across it in a recent one-man declaration of secession from the Democratic Party by Gov. Sam Jones of Louisiana, who conducted his unilateral revolt in the pages of The Saturday Evening Post:

> White Southern boys in the armed services, who, perhaps have an understanding and affection for the Negro race not shared by their comrades from other sections, do not improve in morale when they are told that one of the things they are fighting for is social equality of the Negro. They would renounce any such war aim, rightly or wrongly.

For "social equality" it is more accurate to read "political equality." This is the real fear of Southern reaction for which Governor Jones in recent months has been a confused but active spokesman. It is true that most white Southerners in the army would renounce such a war aim, for they are heirs to the prejudice against the Negro, and have had little opportunity to learn its cost to their impoverished land and exploited people. But wars wrench men out of their backgrounds, and jolt their thinking, and white soldiers and others in the post-war South are going to have a chance to learn some of the political facts of life. For one thing, the labor movement has made significant inroads into the growing industrial populations of a number of the states. On the waterfront of New Orleans, in the mines and mills of Alabama, in the war plants of Tennessee and Texas and Georgia, progressive groups of organized labor are growing. There has been a long and significant list of NLRB elections in Southern industry. Those centers of the growing labor movement are proving invaluable bases of operation in the agitation for broadened suffrage. These are the realities which have the plutocracy's spokesmen, like Governor Jones, musing in a disquieted frame of mind about domestic war aims and democracy.

Here is a paragraph from an interesting letter sent some months ago to The New Republic which suggests the strong labor undercurrent in the South today:

> When last I was in Birmingham I talked to a Negro named ——, and though it was a brief conversation, I will not forget it. He was an officer of one of the mine-union locals, a local with white and Negro membership. He had a lot of servile mannerisms like "yassuh" in his talk still, but the words that came out of his mouth were pure militant trade unionism. It was a curious thing to see this ideology matched up with this soft-spoken cornfield Negro, to use the old term. He had a pleasant, humorous, direct manner—and he gave the impression that there was plenty of guts below the surface. If there are very many more Negroes like him in the South today—and the number must be growing—I know some white folks who are going to be in for a rude awakening when they try to continue with the old line about "we know what the nigger wants; he wants the white man to tell him what to do."

Elimination of the poll tax will not of course assure the Negro suffrage; other techniques, ranging from discriminatingly administered qualification tests to threats of violence, will continue for the time being to keep him from the polls. But the poll tax is the principal buttress between the Southern Negro and the ballot and its removal will bring him pressing ever nearer to political emancipation. One by one these buttresses will go down. Four states already have repealed the tax, Louisiana, North Carolina, Florida and Kentucky. Tennessee would have made the fifth, but the repealing act of the legislature was ruled unconstitutional by a state supreme court which took the all but incredible position that a legislature could not repeal its own act. The seven other states in which the tax remains are: Alabama, Arkansas, Georgia, Mississippi, South Carolina, Texas and Virginia.

The poll tax is badly on the defensive. It has important and influential enemies among Southern people of prestige. The most effective argument against it, in the South, is that it disfranchises more white people than it does Negroes. The statistics of this disfranchisement are startling and effective. Southern Senators and Representatives are elected by proportions of voters

The Negro People and the Fight for Freedom

THE NATIONAL NEGRO CONGRESS is dedicated to the promotion of unity among individuals and organizations in the common struggle toward securing the full rights of citizenship for Negro Americans.

During its brief seven years of history it has given leadership in such campaigns as those for adequate relief assistance during the depression, in promoting trade unionism among Negro workers during the CIO organizing drives, against police brutality in several major cities, and against discrimination in industrial and federal employment and in the armed forces.

In waging these struggles on various fronts, the National Negro Congress has always stressed the relationship of the specific problem of Negro rights to the general question of advancing the democratic rights of all Americans. In so doing, the Congress has won the support of white liberal forces, particularly among organized labor. And, even more important, it has helped signally to prevent distortion and misconception of the "Negro problem" in the minds of both Negroes and whites.

THIS contribution notwithstanding, one finds even now, when the maximum unity and effort of all people are needed to win victory over fascism, that there is a great deal of distorted and misguided thinking about Negro rights current in the land.

Some of this thinking is naïve and based simply on limited perspective; some is of the prejudice-as-usual-come-hell-and-high-water type; and some is deliberate fifth column propaganda. All of it is suicidally dangerous.

The National Negro Congress has one answer for those who declare that the struggle for Negro rights must be deferred because it will interfere with the war effort, as well as for those who insist that the Negro must win his rights at home before joining in the fight to liberate other people.

The answer is that the struggle for Negro rights must go hand in hand and is inseparably bound up with the Negro's participation in the winning of the war. This principle applies with equal force to the struggle of the Indian, African and Caribbean peoples for freedom.

AS THE Negro takes his place on a completely equal basis with other Americans in the armed forces, in war industries, and in all home front services, both the cause of democracy and the furtherance of the national war effort will be served. The fight for greater democratic opportunities is today no mere humanitarian issue, nor an issue affecting only the Negro, the Jew, or colonial peoples; it is the struggle for a sound political policy which permits of no compromise in the achievement of a people's victory, the achievement of absolute and speedy defeat of the fascist enemy.

There are only two possible paths of political action in the world today: the anti-fascist and the pro-fascist. There is no middle or third path. The destiny of the Negro people along with the destiny of the world will be determined by whether the strength of the anti-fascist forces is greater than the strength of the pro-fascists.

The extent to which Negro Americans now unite their collective might with that of organized labor and the majority of progressive white Americans in support of the fundamentally sound war policies of the administration will determine the extent to which the war-time gains of Negroes and other minorities will be preserved in the post-war period. If the poll-tax Congressmen, the Klan and its friends, and other reactionary forces are decisively beaten now by a united array of democratic forces, a full anti-fascist victory and people's peace can and will be won.

SUCH a decisive defeat of domestic reaction entails the exposure and isolation from public influence of those who oppose the full participation of all the people and the full mobilization of the national economy for the winning of the war; those who block the prosecution of full coalition warfare by means of a whispering and slandering campaign against the Soviet Union, and continue to repeat the same threadbare arguments against the opening of a full-scale second front in Europe by the Anglo-American forces and their allies; and those who would employ any expedient to prevent the decisive defeat and unconditional surrender of the fascist enemy.

The Negro people must not and will not be deluded into giving their support to such enemies of the people. The Negro's stake in victory dictates that he take neither a negative nor "neutral" position on the prosecution of the war, but a positive one in alliance with all the forces of progress.

THE NATIONAL NEGRO CONGRESS stands pledged to the task of cementing the fullest possible unity among the Negro people and unity of Negroes with labor and other progressive forces in achieving the maximum collaboration between the United States, Great Britain, China, the Soviet Union and the other United Nations; in supporting the administration's war policies; and in furthering all measures which will contribute to the absolute defeat of the fascist axis at the earliest possible moment.

The specific home front measures which the Congress regards as indispensable for winning a people's victory include:

- Immediate abolition of segregation and discrimination against Negroes in all branches of the armed services and the women's services.
- Full integration of Negro men and women into industry without discrimination.
- Support for the administration's program of rationing and other measures to defeat the high cost of living—an increased Federal child-care program, more low-cost housing projects, and extension of public health and educational services.
- The arrest and prosecution of leaders of the Ku Klux Klan, Black Legion, and other anti-Negro, anti-Semitic organizations.
- Curbing the propagation of racial theories through the medium of degrading representations of Negroes in motion pictures, stage plays, radio and press.
- Immediate passage of the Anti-Poll-Tax Bill by the Senate of the United States.
- Registration of every Negro voter for the 1944 elections to vote out of office the appeasers, pro-fascists, poll taxers and anti-labor officeholders.

commonly ranging from two to seven or eight percent of the potential voters; outside the South the average ranges from 45 to 60 percent. In comparable states like Wisconsin and Georgia, each with a population of three millions, 1,500,000 vote in Wisconsin compared with 300,000 in Georgia. Rep. Martin Dies of Texas and Rep. Warren G. Magnuson of Washington come from districts about equal in population. Dies was elected by 12,824 voters, Magnuson by 147,061.

Huey Long, who was supported by the common people of Louisiana with a fanatical loyalty, abolished the poll tax to enable more of them to go to the polls and swell the margins of his victories. Ironically, it was this very expansion of the electorate that resulted in the defeat of the Long ring after his death; it no longer could hold the masses enthralled and, though a mighty effort was made, it could no longer steal enough votes to turn the tide of reform sentiment.

Under a rotten-borough political system which deprives nine people in ten of the ballot, a congressman can get elected term after term with monotonous ease; a coalition of a few plantation owners, or factory owners and the business cliques in the towns, can make him a political invincible. He is their tool for the duration of the arrangement, which is commonly twenty to thirty years in many Southern districts. Under the antiquated seniority rules of Congress, Southern members—almost inevitably reactionary—win their ways to the all-important chairmanships of more than half of the powerful committees, although they represent scarcely a quarter of the population.

There is little wonder, in the light of this record, that legislation desired by minority groups such as the Negro and labor face almost hopeless obstacles. This is the unanswerable argument for Southern electoral reform. It is the argument that the expanding labor movement and other progressive forces in the South will be making with increasing effectiveness in the years immediately ahead.

It would be idle to deny that many Negroes at present are deeply dissatisfied with President Roosevelt. Probably some of them will vote for the Republican candidate next year, whoever that candidate may be. It is regrettable of course that any Negro should vote on a single issue, that of race equality; that he should not consider all the elements in the situation, including the kind of America the Republican Party wants to make if it gets into power. It is indicative, however, of the seriousness with which the Negroes take the race issue that many of them will vote on a basis of this matter alone.

The growing power of former Mr. Justice Byrnes in his capacity as "assistant President" is a manifestation which Negroes consider ominous. There has obviously been an amount of serious consideration on the President's part of the possibility of running Byrnes as Vice President in 1944. Negroes remember him for his hostility when he was a high-grade political trader in the Senate. They recall and cite the fact that when he was a Representative from South Carolina he consistently fought appropriations for Howard University. Negroes would deny their vote to any ticket which placed Byrnes and others like him in power. Negro leaders point out that the migratory shift of some three million Southern Negroes, in the past quarter-century, has built up Negro populations which all but hold the political balance of power in states like New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Ohio, Illinois and Indiana.

The two most clever and aggressive Republican hopefuls, Willkie and Dewey, have been cruising around with hungry eyes on the Negro vote. Willkie's outspoken liberal views of the race issue have made him an object of sincere appreciation and even affection. Like white progressives, Negroes have been suspicious of Dewey on the whole; but Dewey not only is hopeful, but smart, and his recent nomination of a Negro attorney for a $17,500 judgeship—the most remunerative public office ever given a Negro—is an indication that he will make an effective bid for Negro votes.

Negro Progress

NEGROES HAVE GAINED much in America, and, though race reform is still the great lag in our democracy, the story of Negro progress does not give cause for despair.

Negro gains in the field of higher education have been impressive. In 1916 all the Negro colleges in the country showed a total enrolment of only 2,637. Six years later the figure had doubled; by 1927 it had more than doubled again. In 1932 the figure reached 22,000; in 1938, 34,000; in 1941, more than 45,000.[1] In the eighty-odd years since emancipation, literacy has risen from 5 to 85 percent. Negro ownership of property had risen in the same time to $2,500,000,000; annual purchasing power in the last normal year before the war was $2,000,000,000.

Fifty years ago the annual death rate was 33 per 1,000—comparable to the death rates in the worst sections of China and India. Great improvement in health facilities and modes of living have cut the rate to an estimated 14 per 1,000—32 percent above the annual death rate of 10.6 for the country as a whole.[2]

These gains are important and impressive. They are proof of a fact which Negroes understand even in a mood of agitation and spiritual revolt, that it is in America where their hope of greatest progress lies.

But lest these statistics become a cause for complacency, and an argument for the status quo in race reform, they must be compared with comparable white statistics rather than with what the Negro had fifty or eighty years ago. Eighty years ago he had nothing. The real question is not how much freedom or education or food the Negro has, but what are America's resources, and does he get his share. In the ideal democracy, health and education are not largess to be doled out benevolently through the years, but rights and privileges shared in equally by all.

There are many more agencies at work educating public opinion than there were at the close of the last war. Few churches do not make some form of educational effort on the race problem. Increasingly, leading magazines open their pages to thoughtful treatment of the problem of race. Many colleges, universities, high schools and even grammar schools give it consideration today. A gradually improving treatment of the Negro in movies and radio will help to destroy the old stereotype of the Negro as a comic or menial figure exclusively, and picture him as he really is.

Fortunately, the United States Supreme Court in recent years has consistently handed down decisions in cases brought before it dealing with the Negro which have enormously improved his status. Among these have been the Negro's and any other citizen's right to a trial in a court not dominated by mob violence; the right to a trial before a jury from which members of his race have not been excluded; the right of equal pay for equal work by teachers; and various other rights dealing with the franchise. These are decisions which, more than being merely preventive, have given pause to those who would depress the Negro's status still further.

To individuals The New Republic recommends that they join at least one of the various organizations which are tackling this question directly or indirectly. To those who are church members and would prefer working through these organizations, there are several departments, such as the Race Relations Department of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, and the Catholic Interracial Council, which are doing effective work on this question. Those who are connected with the labor movement can work through their local and international units. It is particularly important that members of the Railroad Brotherhoods and of those AFL unions which by constitutional provision, ritualistic practice or custom bar Negroes from membership, should work within the ranks to change these policies. There are many other organizations, such as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the National Urban League, the Council Against Intolerance in America, the March-on-Washington Movement, the Union for Democratic Action and others, which are tackling the problem.

Readers of newspapers and magazines can help by challenging biased or inaccurate news or editorial treatment of the Negro question. It is especially important to express approval when newspapers or magazines carry thoughtful and intelligent articles or editorials. Moviegoers should express disapproval of ridicule or biased treatment of the Negro or other minorities in the moving pictures, and express approval and support of films which depict the Negro and other minorities in normal and decent fashion.

Particularly important to the solution of the race question is the necessity for the American electorate to beat back reaction, especially in the 1944 election. It is unfortunate that today many liberals are either disheartened or weary. To them we repeat a passage from a recent issue of The New Republic:

> . . . The vote which put Mr. Roosevelt into power and has kept him there . . . is not the Solid South, which will support any Democratic nominee but falls far short of a majority. It is not the Republican conservative backbone, which will vote the Republican ticket come hell or high water, and also fall short of a majority. It is the Northern industrial workers, the dissatisfied or progressive farmers, the lower or middle-income classes, the Negroes and the independent progressives who find natural allies in these groups, and have done much to provide leadership of their opinions. These voters also would fall short of a majority if they voted alone, but they can pile up an overwhelming majority if they vote together for any Democratic or Republican candidate.

In race persecution, white America has learned to play a dangerous game, and must unlearn it. Two can play at any game, races as well as individuals.

This supplement, and all such writing like it, will be accepted by the racists of America as an attempt to whitewash the Negro's rebelliousness. By any enduring standards of truth and ethics, the Negro's cause is just. Justice cannot be whitewashed. It is a tragedy that a vast number of Caucasians have learned to live by the lie of racism; it is true that inherited beliefs cannot be changed overnight; it is true that an amount of understanding, of pity, of commiseration must be placed in the scales in favor of even white oppressors who are suffering today beneath the weight of their own tragic folkways. But this cannot halt the expression of extreme criticism of these folkways; it cannot invalidate the obvious fact that extreme reforms are needed. Everything the white man suffers because of his tragic racial folkways, the Negro suffers a hundredfold; everything the white man gains in privilege, prestige, laborious services, material wealth, the Negro loses. Who will justify this?

There is something pitiable in the folly of white men who issue fiats and moratoriums and unilateral prohibitions against race reform. It seems a very simple thing to them to slam the door of white America in the Negro's face. They are quick with accusations of blindness, while in their own blind arrogance they attempt the impossible, and believe that they carry it off. Humanity has its shoulder in that door. No door can be slammed against its weight.

which shall it be, America?

Negro uprising, Negro unrest, Negro resentment—America's enemies are telling the world that these disturbing facts prove the insincerity of our democratic claims. White America faces a real dilemma here. No longer can we ignore the differences between what we preach and what we do. We must face the facts—of discrimination, of low income, of segregation and all the rest.

This series of books holds the mirror up to nature and reflects the shortcomings in our relations with the Negro—shows the reasons why disunity has become the fact, how we can proceed to practice the democracy we profess.

THESE VOLUMES SUPPLY THE ANSWERS TO SUCH QUESTIONS AS—

Has the Negro a past of which he can be proud?

How have Negroes enriched American culture?

Are Negroes lazy, docile and inferior as whites have been led to believe?

How have many so-called "authoritative" works of social scientists bolstered Negro race prejudice?

How does the Negro react to discrimination and segregation? (First-person accounts.)

What social forces are arrayed against Negroes?

What civil, ethical, occupational, legal, educational rights are denied the Negro?

What wide discrepancies exist in the attitude of whites toward Negroes?

What is the Negro able to earn and what is he able to get for it in terms of housing, food, recreation, medical care, education, etc.?

What is his share, compared with whites, of social welfare and other community benefits?

How is the Negro attempting to better his status?

What important responsibility have whites for overcoming race prejudice against the Negro?

MYTH OF THE NEGRO PAST

By Melville J. Herskovits, Ph.D.
Professor of Anthropology, Northwestern University
$4.00

OVERWHELMING evidence growing out of extensive anthropological field studies and other scientific analyses is here presented to refute widely accepted beliefs concerning Negro inferiority, a myth which the author contends is due chiefly to failure to appreciate the past of Negro civilizations in its true light. The author has had the unusual advantage of first-hand study of native Negro life, and he uses this knowledge in a novel and realistic way in analyzing their cultural heritage. PATTERNS OF NEGRO SEGREGATION

By Charles S. Johnson
Dean of Social Science, Fisk University

HERE is a forthright, comprehensive and revealing assembly of disturbing facts about discrimination against the Negro in various aspects of American life—in the armed forces and war industries, in commercial and professional occupations, education, etc. Overwhelming evidence of its extent is presented dispassionately but damningly. Dr. Johnson traces the historical development of racial segregation, analyzes the ideology used to rationalize the irreconcilable conflict between democratic doctrine and the practice of discrimination, and suggests what government could DO, if it would, to ameliorate race relations and make democracy a real and living thing. "Scholarly and alive."—Survey Graphic. "Objective."—New Republic.

THE NEGRO'S SHARE

By Richard Sterner
Noted Swedish Social Scientist

THIS is an account of the extent to which Negroes share in the good things of America life. It analyzes the job opportunities for Negroes as they leave agriculture in increasing numbers to enter industry. It discusses family income and how this income is converted to consumer goods. Housing conditions, both rural and urban, are dissected. The second half of the study is devoted to a discussion of the extent to which public assistance has been made available to Negroes. Numerous tables reenforce the shocking revelations. BROTHERHOOD of SLEEPING CAR PORTERS Pioneers

The Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters was organized on August 25, 1925, in New York City. It began with six porters. Today its membership is ten thousand or more. It is thoroughly international. It includes among its members Filipinos, Mexicans, Chinese, white and Negro workers, as car cleaners, sleeping car porters, attendants and maids, both men and women. This is in keeping with the Brotherhood's constitution which admits to membership any worker in the sleeping car industry without regard to race, creed, color or national origin.

After a long, hard, difficult struggle, continuing over a period of twelve years, the Brotherhood in 1937 won a representation election conducted by the National Mediation Board, and negotiated its first contract with the Pullman Company. From a minimum wage of $67.50 a month the Brotherhood has lifted porters' pay to the present minimum of $113, and maximum of $158, a month. But the increase in monetary compensation for the porters, while important, is of far less significance than the sense of dignity and worthwhileness, of organizational solidarity and fraternity which the Brotherhood has brought to its members.

The Pullman porter is not only a pioneer in the organization of the Negro worker, but his moral and spiritual mentor as well. For the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters sponsors, supports and cooperates with all of the progressive and liberal forces in the country seeking to preserve democracy and destroy totalitarianism.

Contracts are presently held by the Brotherhood with practically all of the great railroads of the country employing sleeping car, train, chair, coach, parlor and buffet car, porters. The membership of the organization is now being increased by the admission of the Canadian Pacific sleeping car porters, among whom an election will soon be held to determine their collective bargaining agent. In addition the Brotherhood is currently conducting a nation-wide campaign to organize the Pullman car cleaners because of their occupational closeness and interchangeable work-relations.

Moreover the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters has organized a great majority of the Colored Locomotive Firemen into the Provisional Committee, which was largely responsible for building up the main case on racial discrimination in the railroad industry that was presented to the President's Committee on Fair Employment Practice in Washington, September 15-18.

Through the fight conducted by the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters, the Railroad Labor Act, which provides the basis for the direct representation of railway workers before the National Railroad Adjustment Board, was amended to include sleeping car porters and dining car employees.

Another important part of the Brotherhood's activity is the things it does for Negro workers as a whole. It was responsible for the organization of the first Red Caps' locals in the Brotherhood headquarters of New York and Chicago. It was the chief force in setting up an international union of Red Caps in Chicago. It was the main factor in establishing the Joint Council of Dining Car Employees whose headquarters are in Chicago. And it was also largely instrumental in organizing the March on Washington Movement, in coordinating the work of Negro church, civic, labor and fraternal organizations, which resulted in the issuance of the Executive Order 8802 establishing the FEPC.

And when it comes to the war effort, the Brotherhood of Sleeping Car Porters is backing the attack to the limit to bring victory over the Axis to the United Nations. The Brotherhood itself has purchased fifty thousand dollars worth of War Bonds. Brotherhood members are likewise backing the attack to the limit of their resources. They are buying millions of dollars worth of Bonds on the payroll deduction plan.

CERTAINLY there are easy going, slow drawling southerners, cast in the manana mold—but Virgil M. (Red) Newton Jr. is not among them. Southerner, yes, born in Atlanta, Ga., and educated at Gainesville, Fla. If you think there's anything easy going in Red's make-up, however, have a look at "A Growing Threat to Democracy—Secrecy in Government" (page 7). He's been a busy guy!

Red's been going at a pace like that ever since he worked his way through the University of Florida as correspondent for eight newspapers, played four years of varsity basketball and worked as sports editor of the Gainesville Sun during his senior year.

After his graduation in 1926, he moved over to Tampa as reporter and sports editor of the Tampa Daily Times. In 1930 he became sports editor of the Tampa Tribune. Five years later he was assistant managing editor, and for the last decade he has been managing editor.

He's also chairman of the Sigma Delta Chi Committee for the Advancement of Freedom of Information, a member of the Freedom of Information Committee of the Associated Press Managing Editors Association, and treasurer and a member of the board of directors of the ASNE.

He's vice president of the Tampa Community Chest, vice president of the polio foundation, a member of the Red Cross board of directors, and a member of the executive council of the Tampa Boy Scouts. He is active on the Florida Governor's Safety Council.

He was president of the Hillsborough County Alumni and Florida West Coast Alumni of the University of Florida in 1948, and a member of the executive council of the state alumni association of the University of Florida in 1949-50. He was chairman of Tampa's Community Chest drive in November, 1949; chairman of the polio drive in January, 1950; and co-chairman of the Red Cross drive in March, 1950—the first time in Tampa's history that all three went over quota.

He belongs to the University Club of Tampa; the Tampa Yacht & Country Club, and Ye Mystic Krewe of Gasparilla. He's married and the father of one son, Virgil M. 3d, 15.

Whew!

HOLLYWOOD and movie-goers may be agog over "3-D" as a new factor in the presentation of entertainment on the screen. But the men who are seeking more vivid ways of presenting the world's news pictorially also have a stake in this new dimension, John Durniak points out in "3-D: A Gimmick Today, Journalism Tomorrow" (page 8).

Now an assistant editor of Photography, Durniak has both a varied practical background and an academic one in pictorial journalism. He was graduated in journalism at Bowling Green State University and took a master's degree in pictorial journalism at the State University of Iowa.

He worked as a photographer's assistant at Life and was sports editor of the Bronxville (N.Y.) Reporter. He also wrote television picture scripts for United Press Pictures in New York before joining Photography.

AMONG the 500 present at Sigma Delta Chi's national awards dinner this year in Chicago was Dick Cheverton, news director of WMT, Cedar Rapids, Iowa. His station that night received the professional journalistic fraternity's bronze medallion for the most distinguished public service in radio journalism during 1952.

DICK CHEVERTON

The editors of The QUILL asked Dick just what WMT did—and how and why—to serve its listeners with such distinction. "Politics Is Your Business" (page 11) is his story of the series of broadcasts designed to educate WMT's audience in government from the precinct level up.

Dick did his first reporting for the Parkchester Review, in New York City's Bronx, after attending Monmouth College in Illinois. That was in 1940. From there he went to Newport News, Va., returned to New York to work on PM and help start Parade. He came out of the Navy and entered radio news in Iowa, working first at Muscatine and Mason City.

H. I. FONTELLIO-NANTON, author of "The Negro Press and Its Obligations" (page 10), writes both sympathetically and critically of a field he knows as a Negro newspaper man, government and commercial publicist and journalism educator.

He is now head of the department of journalism at Texas Southern University in Houston and part owner of Tony Associates, only Negro public relations firm specializing in the Negro market in the area.

He came to the States from the Canal Zone, he reports, with "all good intention" of studying medicine. While a student at Wesleyan University in Middletown, Conn., he became interested in journalism, did various newspaper jobs and took a few courses at Columbia University. Finally he bacame editor and publisher of the Carolina Tribune at Raleigh, N. C.

While there he served on the state housing survey and published the only minority report on housing in the South on "Negro Housing in North Carolina." Service with the National Youth Administration followed—he was deputy administrative assistant in charge of Negro affairs.

Desiring more education, he returned to classes at the State University of Iowa in the postwar years to earn his M.A. in journalism and his Ph.D. in journalism and sociology.

THE United States' sister republic south of the border had the Revolution which Mexicans spell with a capital "R" back in 1910-17. But a quieter and more constructive revolution has been continuing over the air during recent decades in a land whose difficult distances are tied together by a series of powerful radio stations.

Marvin Alisky's "Mexican Newscasts Link a Nation in a Peaceful Revolution" (page 12) coincides exactly with Mexico's current celebration of its first thirty years of broadcasting. It is based on a professional background of radio and television in this country, special studies at the University of Texas and the Instituto Technologico de Monterrey.

Marvin last wrote for The QUILL in November, 1950, when he described a television format developed when he was news editor of San Antonio's KEYL. Since that time he has taken his Ph.D. at the University of Texas' graduate Institute of Latin-American studies. He recently joined the journalism faculty at Indiana University, where he is an assistant professor and news director of Indiana's WFIU.

He has traveled in Mexico since boyhood and speaks fluent Spanish. Living in San Antonio and Austin, he has frequently dialed Mexico's powerful stations—XEW, XEX and XEQ. And he reports that since 1950 he has collected data on Mexican radio in earnest, working behind the scenes in Mexico City television operations and visiting every type of village.

Gains accomplished in the last 126 years and a probability of even greater progress are pointed out by this journalist in analyzing

The Negro Press and Its Obligations

By H. I. FONTELLIO-NANTON

WHEREVER enlightened people are found, one can expect to find a free press. It therefore follows that we must and do have a free press in America. And because the fulfillment of its task must be accomplished through the indispensable ingredient of freedom, the American newspaper is an institution of great responsibility, power, and prestige.

As part of the press of the nation, the Negro newspaper too, has a great responsibility, and today, thanks to the increasing number of competent men and women engaged in this field, the Negro press offers organizational and personal opportunity.

Why is it then that many criticize the Negro press for not being representative of the Negro citizenry, claim that it is not free to express itself and that in many instances it serves only to magnify the race's inadequacies, or maintain that it is inflammatory, sensational, and irresponsible? Whether these critics are right or not, this criticism results from the fact that the Negro press falls in a special class, and too often publishers lose sight of the overall function of the newspaper in their zeal to defend the Negro's rights.

The Negro newspaper of today might be compared to the newspapers of the days of Dana, Greeley, and Bennett, when the main purpose of a newspaper was to sell as many copies as possible, and the end justified the means. In other words, Negro newspapers are going through a metamorphosis, and those of us who are concerned with the press are hoping that it will emerge right side up and functioning as it should, an organ designed to entertain, influence, and primarily to inform the general public.

However, the Negro newspaper has made some outstanding contributions to the advancement of the race. Since the establishment of the first Negro newspaper in America 126 years ago, on March 16, 1827, the Negro press has made commendable progress in spite of the obstacles which beset it.

Little by little it has advanced from the realm of "yellow journalism" to its present state of comparative respectability. Because of the recent recognition accorded the Negro press by national advertisers, it has been able to purge its advertising columns. This same advertising has helped the development of more efficient writers and business executives, resulting in a much better product.

The day is not far distant when we will look upon all Negro newspapers as being in the modern or semi-modern class. When the Negro newspaper publisher realizes that in his every day task of examining the glut of public occurrences, ideas, and situations, he must determine which is of most interest to his reading public, he will also come to the realization that he can do this only by measuring these in terms of their significance for the Negro community.

HE will also realize that factual presentation of the day's news is not enough. Complex situations require interpretation and explanation. Background information must be provided to supplement the news, and in order to provide this material as enrichment for the news story, he may have to serve as an avid student of history and geography.

No group faces a bigger job than do the Negro citizens of this country. It is here that the Negro press is related to the Negro problem. It has become the oracle of the colored people. More than that, it is the defender of their rights against encroachments of the ambitious and coveteous.

H. I. Fontellio-Nanton heads the department of journalism at Texas Southern University in Houston and is active in a public relations firm.

Only those who understand fully the contention of the Negro for fair play and the magnitude of the forces against him can have a correct idea of the great work which the Negro press can do. Even the Negro himself cannot appreciate this, for from time to time, even Negroes cry out against the so-called radicalism of the Negro press. What they fail to realize, is that the greatest argument for the justification of the existence of the Negro press, is an intelligent militancy in the fight for justice.

The Negro newspaper is duty bound to disseminate news, yes, but it seldom is in a position to cover important happenings as effectively and as rapidly as the general press. It is in the fight for Negro rights that it grows in stature and influence. These people also have failed to realize that as long as men are oppressed they will cry out in protest or indignation. What better weapon has the Negro to fight inequities than the Negro press?

AS the Negro press reaches maturity, it can perform its duty for its readers. It can join in the press effort to give man everywhere knowledge of the world and of one another and to promote comprehension and appreciation of the goals of a free society that shall embrace all men.

I do not subscribe to the idea that the Negro press is not free. Although we have much to be desired from our publishers, it is safe to say that most, if not all of them recognize that freedom of the press is essential to political liberty. Where men cannot freely convey their thoughts to one another, no freedom is secure.

Freedom of action must be based upon free access of truth. A prominent American once said, "to a free society a free press is as essential as the legislative, executive, and judicial department of representative government." To the Negro press and to the Negro citizenry this is of utmost importance.

must be one that can readily be shown anywhere. The whole film industry must, sooner or later, decide on one film system and perfect it.

What has Hollywood been saying about the journalistic possibilities of 3-D and wide screen processes? Little from what this writer has seen.

Paramount is doing some experimenting on newsreels in 3-D and wide screen processes, but nothing definite has been scheduled.

Three-dimensional television is also a reality. Advocates of one system of 3-D telecasting say a slight change, which costs some $10, is all that is necessary to convert a "flat" TV set into a "3-D-TV" receiver. Spectators must wear glasses. Where will this type of television go? It is difficult to speculate about its future.

THE medium can be only as great as the men who use it. The still picture in the hands of a competent photographer like Life magazine's David Douglas Duncan could hit hard when he reported the Korean war. Edward R. Murrow and his CBS "See It Now" television staff could take the same Korean war and make it dynamic through the "flat" TV motion picture. Who will take a similar subject and report with new force in 3-D or wide screen pictures?

Let your imaginations go. Look at Cinerama, CinemaScope and the various 3-D processes. What could you do with each method while covering a forest fire, or other disaster?

But these are all spectacular. Could you cover a speech by a dictator with dimension pictures and do more than the still camera could?

Could you take a thousand people on a jet flight, forcing their backs against their chairs and let them share a feeling only a few on earth have ever had?

Time and testing will narrow the field and establish a direction, but the picture journalist must be thinking along with every step in the new business because the tools that are finally accepted will be more for him than anyone else. Documentary and newsreel reporting will have a vitality they have never enjoyed once the journalist visualizes the potential of this new picture medium.

Hollywood will have its fling with horror movies, "colossal spectacles" and other tricks. But the real importance of this new method of communication more likely will be in journalistic realism. It can carry impact for enlightenment as well as entertainment. First hand participation in who, what, where, when and how will come with every admission

Cinerama brought a new front and overflow crowds to New York's Broadway Theater (above). David Douglas Duncan of Life Magazine carried the impact of the Korean War with remarkable force in such still pictures as those below. Could an added "dimension" in news and documentary films give journalism an even more potent means of making current history real?

COURTS STUDY

INTRODUCTION

The study upon which this report is based was undertaken in the summer of 1954 by representatives of the Southern Regional Council. The major focus of the project was to determine whether or not there is a bias in the sentencing of Negro, as compared with white, offenders in the criminal courts of the Southeast. At the outset of the research, it was recognized that the dispensation of justice is a social process with several major stages. At each of these stages there is a real possibility that unequal treatment will be given to the members of racial minority groups.

Several scholars have directed their attention to the analysis of this process. In an article in the Annals (September 1941), Johnson reports evidence which indicates that on the average, Negroes tend to receive harsher sentences than do whites for comparable types of crimes committed. He points out that a major variable in the administration of justice is the race, not only of the offender, but also of the adverse party in a criminal case. This latter consideration stems from the insistence that it is in the general structure of social relationships, the caste system, of the nation that we find many of the causes for differential crime rates between Negroes and whites.

Garfinkel, in an article published in Social Forces, adds documentation to the contention that there exist inequalities of treatment among different classes of offenders in the courts of North Carolina. He suggests the hypothesis that court situations involving Negroes are defined as different kinds of situations from those involving whites. Such situations call into play special sets of attitudes towards justice on the part of the court. The major differences in the four types of situations (i.e., Negro vs. Negro, Negro vs. white, white vs. Negro, and white vs. white) are primarily traceable to attitudes arising from the caste structure of American society.

The studies of both Johnson and Garfinkel were concerned with restricted areas of the Southeast and the statistics which were used are now out of date. For these reasons it seemed profitable to carry out further research, expanding the areas covered by the study and making use of more recent data.

At the outset of the study we were faced with a choice between two alternative methods of approach to the problem. Obviously, more information was needed concerning the situational variables discussed by Garfinkel. This could best be gotten by an intensive study of a small number of cases or courts. On the other hand, no reliable estimates of the scope and extensity of the problem were available. Because of our interest in the applied aspects of the findings, we chose to attempt an estimate of the magnitude of the problem.

Thus, the survey method was chosen and a sample of six counties in the Southeast was selected. The counties were picked so as to be roughly representative of the several sub-regions of the area and three were rural counties while three were urban.

Rural	Urban
Bartow, Georgia	Montgomery, Alabama
Bamberg, South Carolina	Forsyth, North Carolina
Attala, Mississippi	Caddo, Louisiana

The field work for the study was carried out by six field workers who, after a short period of training, each spent approximately four weeks in the field. The investigators were instructed to record all convictions for felonies which were recorded in the superior courts of the counties studied. An information schedule was provided for the recording of each separate case. A sample of this data sheet is included in Appendix A of this report.

Records were to be collected for all convictions recorded for a five-year period extending from 1949 through 1953. A brief discussion of some of the difficulties encountered by the field workers while collecting and checking their data is given in Appendix D. Appendix C provides a discussion of the sample finally achieved in the study.

FINDINGS

Data Analysis

A total of 1267 cases were secured from the total number of cases submitted by the field investigators. An analysis of the distribution of these cases by the various sampling dimensions is included in Appendix C.

In view of the fact that the primary emphasis of the analysis in this study has been to estimate the bias in sentencing which was exercised by the courts in the six counties under consideration, one of our main problems was to determine a measure which could be used for this purpose. Two measures have been used in the study. These include: (1) the mean or average sentence, and (2) the per cent distribution of sentences by class of offender. In cases of crimes against persons, the mean number of years of sentence was not an adequate measure due to the wide dispersion of the sentences and also to the difficulty of assigning any number of years to life and death sentences. We experimented with the use of the median in these cases, but the small frequency of cases rendered this measure unstable.

In all cases where major breakdowns have been made, Chi square was used to test the significance of differences.

Type of Crime

In general, it was impossible to break the sample down both by the class of offender and by the type of crime committed. The specific crimes listed do not (except in the case of burglary and larceny) include enough cases to make such an analysis fruitful. The general procedure was to break the type of crime down into two classes. These were: (1) crimes against the person, and (2) crimes against property. This procedure seems to be satisfactory both from the point of view of the adequacy of the data and for purposes of statistical analysis.

We can now take a brief look at how the cases were distributed according to class of offender and the type of crime. It will be noted from Table 1 that the majority of crimes were not interracial in character. Furthermore, the largest percentage of such crimes were committed by Negroes against other Negroes. As is to be expected, a small percentage of the crimes against property were committed against Negroes.

The Findings

Table 2 presents the distribution of crimes by type, by county. In the total sample, about seven-tenths of the crimes were crimes against property. This figure was relatively constant for the four counties in which over 100 cases were obtained. On the other hand, in the two counties with less than 100 cases, about half of the crimes reported were crimes against property. This may reflect real differences in the incidence of convictions by county, but it may also reflect a bias on the part of the field worker in recording the crimes.

Table 3 is designed to indicate the type of offence characteristic of each class of offender in the two counties producing the largest number of cases. It can be seen from an analysis of this Table that the types of crimes characteristic of the two counties varied with the class of offender. About three times as many crimes were committed in Forsyth County in situations where Negroes were stealing from Negroes than was the case in Caddo County. On the other hand, twice as many crimes against persons were committed by Negroes against whites in Forsyth County as compared with Caddo County. This perhaps reflects a redefinition of the sentencing situation by the judges in Forsyth County induced by the rise in socio-economic position of the Negroes in that area. Note, however, that the differences are small and the number of cases represented is also small.

Of all the findings presented in this analysis, possibly the most startling from the point of view of our focus on "bias in the sentencing procedure" is to be found in what has been termed the "disposition of the sentence". This refers to the reported actual, final disposition of the sentence once it has been decided upon. It may take one of a number of forms. First, and most frequent, the sentence may be passed "to be served in full" with no part of it suspended. Second, part or all of the sentence may be suspended. Finally, in place of a jail term, the offender may receive a fine.

Table 4 and Figures A, B, and C indicate the experience of the individuals studied in this investigation as to this item of disposition of the sentence. The findings are presented broken down by class of offender.

It is evident that the Negroes received a substantially higher number of sentences which were to be served in full than did the white offenders. This was true regardless of whether the crime was committed against a white person or against another Negro. In the total sample for all types of crimes, the white offender against a Negro adverse party received the least number of sentences to be served in full.

If we consider the per cent of sentences which were suspended, either in part or in full, it is evident that here again the Negro benefits least from this provision for leniency in the dispensation of justice. The highest percentage of suspended sentences was given to white offenders against Negro adverse parties, whereas the lowest percentage was given to Negro offenders against white adverse parties. It may be noted that when a Negro is the adverse party, the defendent, Negro or white, is likely to receive a suspended or partly suspended sentence. Thus in this sense, Negroes appear to obtain less protection from the law than do whites.

The use of fines as an alternative type of sentence seems also to be reserved for whites. (See Figure C) This is true particularly in cases where whites have committed crimes against other whites. 25% of the sentences meted out to whites in cases where the adverse party was also white, were made up of this type of penalty, whereas the comparable figure in cases where Negroes were concerned against Negroes was 5%.

The character of the sanctions involved when a white commits a crime against a Negro may explain the relatively small number of fine sentences given to whites under these circumstances. On the other hand, in such cases a white man is more likely to obtain a suspended sentence than is a Negro. The fact is that a relatively small number of the cases reported were interracial in nature where the defendant was white. Thus, the figures on this portion of the sample are subject to a high degree of random variation.

Crimes Against Property

As was indicated in Table 2 above, about seven-tenths of the crimes reported in this study were classed as crimes against property. For this reason, the findings concerning crimes of this class offer the most reliable material in the investigation.

Two measures have been used to describe the relationships which have emerged from our analysis of this type of crime. First, the mean or average length of sentence has been used. And second, the percentage distribution of sentences by the number of years of the sentence has been used.

Per Cent Distribution by Length of Sentence

Table 5 indicates that where crimes against property are concerned, the heaviest sentences are given to Negroes when they commit crimes against whites, and the lightest sentences are given to whites committing crimes against other whites. The highest percentage of penalties in the six-year-and-over category and the lowest percentage of one-year penalties was given to Negroes in crimes against whites. The highest percentage of one-year sentences (41%) was given to whites in crimes against other whites. The relationships indicated in this Table are significant at the .05 level of confidence.

Mean Length of Sentence by Class of Offender

The lowest average sentences for crimes against property were given to whites in crimes against other whites. The highest average sentences were passed on Negroes in crimes against whites. Here, however, the differences are relatively small and probably not statistically significant.

If we compare the two counties that provide the largest number of cases as to the mean length of sentence in the cases under their jurisdiction for each class of offender, some interesting differences appear. In Forsyth County, N.C., the heaviest average penalties were given out in crimes where whites were involved against other whites. On the other hand, in Caddo Parish, La., the heaviest average penalties were given to Negroes who had been convicted of crimes against whites.

In Caddo Parish, the lightest average penalties were given to Negroes in crimes against other Negroes. This was also true of Forsyth County. In general, the penalties in Caddo were lighter for all classes of offenders than they were in Forsyth.

These differences between the two counties could be interpreted such that Negroes obtain the least protection from the courts in both counties when they are the adverse party in crimes against property. These relationships are graphically presented in Figure D.

Crimes Against the Person

Due to the relatively small number of cases of crimes against the person obtained in this sample, it is difficult to assess the meaningfulness of the findings from the analysis of this type of crime. It appears, however, from a study of Table 6 and Figure H that for the total sample where crimes against the person are concerned, Negro offenders tended to receive the heaviest penalties. By far, the greatest numbers of crimes against the person were committed by Negroes against other Negroes. Of the 191 such cases, 33% received a penalty of less than one year. On the other hand, of the 54 such cases in which whites were involved against other whites, over half (52%) received penalties of less than one year.

Although there are too few cases of murder to justify placing much confidence in the findings of this study, it appears that in cases where Negroes murdered other Negroes there was a greater likelihood that the sentence would be other than a life or death sentence. In cases where whites were involved as the murdered person, the sentence was almost always life or death. Thus, not only does it appear that Negro property is receiving less protection from the law than is white property, but the Negro person is also receiving less protection. In one county, a field worker reported a clerk of the court as having sais, "I never heard of a nigger getting the death penalty for killing another nigger in this County".

Because of the small number of violent crimes in the sample and the extreme dispersal in the length of sentences, the figures on mean or median length of sentence do not provide a stable enough measure to be satisfactory for purposes of analysis. These figures have been computed but are not included in this report.

Sentences Under One Year

Due to the special considerations concerning the cases in which the sentences received were under one year, a special analysis of these sentences was done. The following tables represent the findings from this analysis.

The findings in Table 9 indicate that there is a mild relationship between harshness of penalty and the race of the offender. However, it is not high enough to be considered statistically significant. The relationship is such that Negroes tend to receive harsher penalties than do whites for crimes against the person in this penalty category.

Note: Chi square was 3.6901 with 2 degrees of freedom. This is significant at between the .01 and .2 levels of confidence.

In the case of the sentences under one year for crimes against property, there seems to be no significant bias in the sentencing procedure; in fact, the correspondence between the distribution of sentences for the three classes of offenders calls for comment. This agreement could be attributed to chance or it might possibly reflect the operation of a constant factor such as an emphasis, on the part of the judges, on equal penalties. It seems likely that if this movement were to be showing some success, it would be in this type of crime that it would first become evident.

SUMMARY

We can now turn to a brief over-view of the findings from this analysis. In brief, there is evidence of not inconsiderable racial bias in the legal processes of passing sentence on convicted felons in the six counties studied.

In general, the Negro offender was less likely to receive the lighter types of sentences including suspended sentences and fines. On the other hand, the whites who committed crimes against Negroes tended to receive a disproportionately high percentage of suspended sentences.

If consideration is given to the protection offered to the adverse party in the cases studied, it is apparent that here again the Negro received less than his share of protection from the courts.

In the case of both crimes against the person and crimes against property, the Negro offender received harsher treatment at the hands of the court than did the white offender. This was particularly marked in crimes against property where the crime involved a Negro offender and a white as adverse party.

In an analysis of two of the counties in the sample -- Caddo Parish and Forsyth County -- one can see a somewhat different pattern of sentencing. In Forsyth County, the Negro offender appears to receive penalties quite similar to those given to white offenders in that area. On the other hand, Caddo is marked by a high degree of differentiation in the sentencing procedure in this respect. The tendency there was to give the Negro offender higher penalties than were given to the whites. This was particularly marked in cases where the adverse party was white.

In general, these findings are consistent with those reported in the studies by Johnson and Garfinkel cited above.

IMPLICATIONS FOR FUTURE RESEARCH

Two major conclusions as to methodology can be drawn from this study. Each of them has implications for further research in this area. The most important conclusion -- and one that may seem trite -- is that this is an area of exceeding complexity. Not only is the administration of the law itself a highly specialized field, but the process of such administration in a rapidly evolving caste structured society makes the research problems seem almost insurmountable.

On the basis of this consideration of the complexity of the problem and of the number of variables to be measured and/or controlled, the second conclusion is drawn. It is this: A further investigation in this area should be made based upon an understanding of the importance of a wide variety of factors which enter into the administration of justice. It would be advisable to control as many of these variables as possible in the introductory stages of the research process. Therefore, the most suitable technique for the early investigation will be the case method. One particular area, preferably one county, might be chosen in which to carry on a case study. In this way some of the following variables could be controlled: differences in the law itself, differences in the processes leading up to the final conviction and sentencing, differences in the social structural characteristics from one area to another (i.e., differences in the caste structure), and differences in the general socio-economic characteristics of the population being studied.

It seems probable that one of the primary variables which should be studied in this area of equal penalties is the class-status variable. It is possible that a legitimate bias exists in the administration of justice. Such a bias, when pointed out to a jurist, would be defended as basic in our system of law. It is probable that in sentencing a convicted criminal, the judge takes into account factors other than the simple criminal act itself. Thus, he may be concerned with the probabilities that any given prisoner will return to his community as a law-abiding citizen. If these probabilities are different, or are thought to be different, for different socio-economic groups, then it is likely that differences in harshness of sentences will be related to them. In other words, if the incidence of recidivism were higher among the members of the lower socio-economic class, then a judge would be likely to take this into account in the sentencing of these people. He would defend this practice in the light of the norms of the existing legal system. Thus, in order to establish bias in the sentencing process, it would be well to plan to take into account this factor of socio-economic differences and match the Negro and white portions of the sample on this variable.

A major focus of such a case study might well be on the situational definitions hypotheses of Garfinkel and upon the factors which pose and modify these definitions.

APPENDIX B

The Sample

The sample design used in this study included three major variables or dimensions. These were: (1) an areal dimension -- six southeastern counties in as many different states, (2) a temporal dimension -- sentences passed in the five-year period from 1949 through 1953, and (3) a sample of courts in each county. The latter aspect of the sample design was included to insure the fairly complete coverage of felonies for which convictions were secured in each county.

Some estimate as to the representativeness of the sample in these three dimensions may be made. The following Table represents the distribution of useable cases which were finally included in the total sample.

Frequency and Per Cent of Cases of Convicted Felons

Forsyth, N.C.	243	19	66	16	177	20

Obviously, the six counties are not equally represented in the sample. The three rural counties of Bartow, Ga.; Bamberg, S.C.; and Attala, Miss., add a total of 19% of the cases to the sample. Even more striking is the fact that Caddo County provided almost half of the total number of cases. Whether or not these unequal returns from the six counties represents some under-enumeration of cases in some of the counties cannot be established, but we may conclude that our findings are based largely on the returns from Caddo and the other urban counties.

Table 12 indicates the distribution of crimes in the time dimension. Here it may be noted that the sample seems to be biased in the direction of having more of the cases reported for the earlier years, 1949 and 1950. 66% of the total number of cases reported in the sample were recorded in these years. This may be explained, in part, by the fact that some of the field workers experienced difficulties in securing and recording all the data required and thus, recording the data from the earlier years, biased the sample in this direction.

It is difficult to assess the importance of this bias in the sample. However, if there is any reason to believe that the conditions of sentencing in the courts have changed during this period, then the bias may be important. It is reported that one of the communities under investigation in this report recently experienced a community self-survey. One of the foci of this self-survey was on the problem of the courts and equal penalties considerations. It may be that the sample fails to represent adequately this change.

The final consideration in this section is concerned with the selection of the courts from which the data were to be gathered. The investigators consulted the records of the superior courts in each of the counties studied. In addition, in the urban counties, the city court records were consulted. In view of the fact that a rather large proportion of the sentences studied were under one year, it is probable that a large number of non-felony cases have been included in the sample. The state laws generally define a felony as any crime which is punishable by a minimum of one year in the penitentiary or a fine of $500, or both. Thus, the above mentioned cases probably include some non-felonies.

In most states, simple assault is not considered a felony although the actual distinctions along this line are not clear. The only way to remedy the problem of the inclusion of these cases in the sample would have been to delete them. This procedure would have shrunk the size of an already too small sample and would have rendered statistical testing of the findings virtually impossible. In view of the fact that all of the cases in which the offense was known to have been a misdemeanor were removed at the outset of the analysis, it is felt that there was justification for including these under-one-year cases in the analysis.

In treating the sample for analysis, it was discovered that in a number of cases a man had been tried and convicted of several crimes at a single trial.

Some of the field workers treated each count as a separate trial, even though a composite sentence had been passed. In order to minimize the bias from this source, each man was included in the sample only once unless he had been tried for two different crimes on two separate dates.

INSTRUCTIONS TO RESEARCH ASSISTANTS

1. The left-hand corner of each schedule contains a space for your name and for the dates on which you examine each set of records containing information about the case described on the schedule. The docket and the indictment and certain other public records are listed. If you consult additional records, list them separately, in all cases noting the date you examined each record. It is important that we have a record of each source that is consulted, and that we know when you consulted each source.

2. Fill in the county on each schedule, giving abbreviation of state after county, as "Bartow, Ga."

3. In the space after "No." enter the number of the case as shown on the docket or calendar kept by the clerk of the court.

4. The offender's name will appear in the docket book, though the name of the adverse party may not. If there are several offenders involved in the same case (all entered under one indictment), fill out a separate schedule for each person who pled guilty or was convicted. Personal data are needed for each individual, and a different disposition may be made of each person's charge. The name of the adverse party may appear on the indictment. If not, consult other records listed on questionnaire.

5. Spaces are allowed for the date the crime was committed, the date of the indictment and the date of the sentence. You may not be able to secure all these dates, but should attempt to do so, particularly as to sentence.

6. In the table provided for "Description of parties",

   a. Indicate race or color by the letter N for Negro, W for white. This information may not appear in obvious form on the docket or indictment. There is sometimes a coding system on indictments whereby a "c" for colored or "n" for Negro, likewise a "w" for white, indicates the race of the offender. This code letter may be found in the corner of the indictment or in some other relatively obscure part of the indictment or other documents. You may get race only through prison records.

   b. Six may be indicated by M for Male and F for Female.

   c. Age at time of sentence is desired. If age should appear in warrant, indictment, or other record incident to trial, allowance may have to be made for lapse of time until imposition of sentence. Indicate source of information as follows: Warrant - 20 yrs. (PR) or (CGR), verbal statement - 20 yrs. (VS). If other records are used, indicate likewise.

   d. Marital status is indicated by Married, Divorced, Single, Widowed, or Unknown. Status at sentence is desired.

   e. Literacy is indicate by illiterate, 3rd grade, 2 yrs. high school, grad. high school, 2 yrs. college, AB degree, etc.

   Note that less information is sought for the adverse party. If the adverse party should be a partnership or corporation, as may happen in cases of larceny, embezzlement, etc., write under "Race", "white partnership", "Negro corporation", as the facts may justify. You then omit "Age" and "Sex" for the adverse party.

7. Under "Offense as defined by", it may be noted that the warrant may describe the crime in one way, the indictment in another and the plea or verdict in still another. For example, the warrant may charge assault and battery with intent to kill, the indictment assault and battery of a high and aggravated nature, but the verdict may be guilty of simple assault. Each step should appear in the schedule.

If there is more than one count in the indictment, the most serious should be taken. For example, a murder indictment will often have a separate count charging carrying a concealed or unlawful weapon. The latter may be ignored unless it appears in plea or verdict. If abbreviations are used, please make them sufficiently full as to be intelligible. State either the "Plea" or the "Verdict" in the case. If the offender enters a guilty plea, strike out the inapplicable word. State the plea or the verdict in the space provided completely as it is ascertained from the indictment: "Guilty of assault and battery of a high and aggravated nature", or whatever the form.

8. There will be no entries regarding "Property involved" except in crimes against property, such as burglary, housebreaking, larceny, embezzlement and breach of trust. In any event there will be no entry except where the nature or value of property involved appears.

   Actual value, if established, is desired. This may appear in verdict, testimony, indictment or warrant -- in descending order of significance.

   Give source, as verdict, testimony, etc. Frequently the only obtainable figure will be "more than $20".

   In larceny cases, the nature of the property may appear, as government bonds, automobile, hog, etc. This nature should be reported.

9. State the terms of the sentence fully, including suspension, if any, or other conditions. Use numerals instead of written words to conserve space.

10. Under "Notes and Remarks" write any information of significance not otherwise disclosed, or comments on records used.

SCOPE OF STUDY

The study will be limited to:

1. Homicide, including murder, manslaughter, involuntary manslaughter, murder in the first degree, murder in the second degree, and all other offenses in which death has resulted.

2. Felonious assault, including assault and battery with intent to kill, assault and battery of a high and aggravated nature, simple assault, mayhem, and assault with a deadly weapon.

3. Sex offenses, limited to rape, assault with intent to rape, and indecent assault upon a female.

4. Crimes against property, including burglary, house breaking, larceny, embezzlement, and breach of trust.

For your convenience, an alphabetical list of these crimes is attached.

The period to be covered (using dates of imposition of sentences) begins January 1, 1949, and ends December 31, 1953.

The court records involved will be those pertaining to the state courts of general criminal jurisdiction. In some counties, there may be additionally a county court having general criminal jurisdiction. If so, its records also will be examined. We will undertake to give you the titles of the relevant courts in the counties you will study. Courts of mayors, recorders, magistrates, justices of the peace, etc., have no jurisdiction over the crimes with which we are concerned.

SUGGESTED METHOD OF WORK

1. First consult the court criminal docket or calendar, by whatever name called. Cases are listed in chronological order, according to the date on which they were heard. Turn to the point where imposition of sentence is January 1, 1949, or to the next subsequent date. That will be your starting point.

2. Take the column of the docket headed "Crime" or "Offense" or some similar term and go down this column carefully until you find "Murder", "Larceny" or one of the other crimes in which we are interested. Transcribe to your schedule all the information revealed by the docket. Continue in this manner, entering all those crimes with which we are concerned, one to a schedule, through December 31, 1953. If the verdict is "Not guilty" or the case is nol prossed (mistrial), transferred to an inferior court or placed on the contingent docket, disregard the case. Fill out schedules for all cases transferred to a higher court or court of equal jurisdiction. An inferior court is usually a court of magistrate, justice of the peace, mayor, or recorder. A higher court or court of equal jurisdiction will probably be a county court or superior court. You may find that the docket entries are in highly abbreviated form. The "Crime" may be described as "a to m" or "1 of a" meaning "assault with attempt to murder" and "larceny of automobile". If this is true, master the "code" for recording items in the docket before attempting to fill out your schedules. A general term such as "felony" may be used on docket. A more specific charge will be found in other records.

3. The docket will not begin to yield all the information in which we are interested. But it will probably give the number of a roll or file in which are kept the warrant, indictment, bond, testimony, coroner's report, correspondence. The docket number itself may be the file number. Systems of filing the pertinent records vary, but you will be able to trace the cases appearing on the docket to these records. The file or roll will fill in some gaps. But there may remain many others.

4. Some of the remaining questions may be answered by consulting the records suggested in item 1 on the schedule. In some states there will be records in the state department of prisons or attorney general's office. Unanswered questions should be held and grouped to be answered by one trip to the necessary department or institution. Trips to state institutions or archives outside your assigned county must be cleared in advance through the Atlanta office.

5. After all records have been consulted, there will probably remain certain unanswered questions, particularly as to the adverse party. You will have in hand the name of the offender, the crime, the date of crime and sentence and probably the name of the adverse party. Files of local newspapers around the date of the crime may give you additional answers, although this will probably be true in only the more spectacular crimes. We suggest that these be consulted and that the sheriff, clerk or other court officials may give from memory facts which nowhere appear on the public records. Newspapers, and persons outside the family of persons involved should be consulted last, as they are generally less reliable. Please indicate any source outside official records upon which you rely, as "newspaper", "court official", "member family", etc., in the space for notes. If you feel the matter needs some comment, as when relying on a person who strikes you as vague or unsure, make a note of this also.

   We are aware that, after all sources have been exhausted, in many instances you will not be able to supply all the information desired. We ask that you exhaust only the reasonable possibilities.

6. Please fill out all schedules in duplicate, using a good, clear carbon. Print with a pencil, as you will have to make erasures. When you have completed a schedule or entered all the information that can be gotten, the original can be mailed to the Atlanta office. We ask that you mail the first few you complete immediately, so that we can see how much of the information you are able to secure. After that, you can mail a batch at the end of each week. Carefully preserve the carbon copy so that, if necessary, correspondence may be easily conducted.

7. Bear in mind that you have access to these records through the courtesy of their custodian. He should be informed that at any time he or any one else wishes to examine the records which you are examining, his prior claim will be cheerfully recognized.

8. Lawyers using the clerk's office will generally be glad to be helpful. Do not hesitate to ask for their advice or information.

9. Please advise the Atlanta office immediately as to how you may be reached by mail, telephone or telegraph.

10. Keep accurate records of any expenses directly related to the research project, including travel to your assigned county, any trips back to Atlanta for conference, or trips to prisons and other institutions, authorized by the Atlanta office. There will also be incidental expenses, such as stamps, carbon paper, envelopes, etc., which come under the research budget. You may send itemized bills to the Atlanta office and be reimbursed for these necessary expenditures. Telephone calls and wires to the Atlanta office can be made collect. All your personal expenses -- room, food, laundry, recreation -- must be taken care of by the stipend which the Atlanta office will send you every week.

    Upon completion of the work we will pay transportation charges back to Haverford or your place of residence, assuming such place involves substantially no more expense than the trip to Haverford.

11. You will be expected to work a forty-hour week. It is contemplated that your services will be required for a minimum of four weeks, not necessarily in the same locality.

NOTE: If the crime is described on the docket as "misdemeanor", the case is of no interest to this study. If, however, the crime is described as "felony", the specific description of the offense should be obtained from other pertinent records to see if it falls within the scope of the study, since "felony" is a general term descriptive of many offenses.

APPENDIX D

Some Observations by the Field Workers

In view of the fact that several serious difficulties were experienced by the field workers in the process of data collection for this project, and with an eye to future research ventures in this area, this Appendix has been compiled to indicate some of the major problems in this regard. The problems specifically mentioned by the field workers may be listed as follows:

a. orientation to the field situation

b. the heavy load of cases to be recorded

c. the multiplicity of sources of data

d. the lack of adequate data

A brief comment on each of these points is in order. One of the field workers reported that he encountered hostility and suspicion upon entering into contact with one key community representative. This individual questioned the field worker's authority to see his records and made it exceedingly difficult to obtain the required data.

Another field worker reported that the number of cases he was required to record was so large that at the rate he was working it would have taken him several months to complete the assignment. An additional problem which complicated the data collection process was that the records from which data were to be gathered were scattered over the community and were under the control of several authorities. In some cases, it was necessary to work back and forth from one set of records to another which proved to be a complicated and time-consuming process. In one or two instances, the field worker was not authorized to use a source of data and, therefore, could not gather the required information. Again, adequate data on some of the schedule items were not available; a fact often not known until the field worker entered the community.

Some of these difficulties are expressed in the following excerpt from a letter to Dr. Mitchell from Otis Johnson, dated July 1, 1954:

> Our general system on the project started with the judgment docket from which we got the file number, defendant's name, date of sentence, and whether the defendant pleaded guilty or was tried and found guilty. With the file number we then found the packet containing the warrant, indictment, usually the prison commitment, and a number of other papers connected with the case. This gave us all the information we needed with the exception of the sex, age, and race of the adverse party, and the marital status, literacy, and previous convictions of the defendant. Referring to the alphabetical list of past offenders, we then found previous convictions.
> At this point our troubles started. We were not allowed access to the draft records, and the V.A. said their records would be of no help. Voting registrations were not available to us unless we hired a member of the Board of Elections to be with us all the time and the helpfulness even then was doubtful. The school records for the county (except the city) are only available back to 1947, and in the city school records, only about one person out of ten was listed when I went over about sixty persons we were interested in. County tax records are kept for all those people paying taxes on property or paying a poll tax (which is just a head tax on every adult male with no penalty for non-payment). These gave sex, age, and race (all by code), but even the ratio of those listed to those looked up was about one to four or five. Apparently there are many people avoiding the poll tax. As a last resort we turned to Hill's City Directory for the years 1947-1948, 1949-1950, and 1953, but although the older ones (not 1953) gave marital status and race, many persons live outside the city limits. In order to make sure we had the right person, we had to refer back to the warrant for the address of the offender and adverse party.
> As a result of all this you will find many blank squares under age, sex, race of the adverse party, and marital status of the offender. In no records at all could we find any mention of literacy.

Another problem not specifically mentioned by the field workers, but indirectly inferred from their letters, involved the definition of legal terminology and specific crimes to be included in the sample.

There are several suggestions for future research in this problem which may be derived from these experiences. First, the number of decisions and time-consuming investigation and clearing of sources for data could be reduced if the director of the project were to visit each community prior to the field worker obtaining the required information concerning sources and also the necessary clearances. This could save hours of unproductive field work and in addition aid in the preparation of the schedule itself. Some estimate of the number of cases might be made, thus providing the basis for an estimate of the amount of field work time required in each community.

This information would make it possible to draw up a set of instructions for each community to be studied. These could be made available for use by the field worker.

Some preliminary experience in the data collection might be planned to train the field workers and also to test the research instrument which has been developed. During this period, and actual trial run might be arranged in some easily available community and carried out under the guidance of the project director.

SURVEY SHOWS TOTAL OF 41 STATE LAWMEN

A roundup of Negro law enforcement personnel employed in South Carolina by the Lighthouse and Informer shows that within the last six months no less than 41 persons were believed in use in an unofficial total.

Reports from reporters for the newspaper include a number of persons given temporary duty powers to keep order at football games, for example, but this number is not included in the forty one officers reported here. In several communities colored men are employed for a day in the case of a county fair, for longer periods, to report for arrest trouble makers. Such temporary officers do not usually carry a gun. Nightsticks are their principal weapons; however, in some of the communities now using colored officers, it is not usual to see a temporary officer patrolling streets wit[illegible] r[illegible]lar policeman.

Could Be More

Reports from Darlington, Columbia, Spartanburg and a few other centers indicate that more colored officers would be employed if good applicants turn up. Several other communities have approved employment of colored policemen but say they haven't been able to get even an applicant.

Charleston has the distinction of employing half a dozen women who direct traffic at "school" intersections. But they also have full power to make arrests. Horry county employs one Negro as a deputy sheriff ,as does Beaufort county. Charleston, for several months, has been shifting one of its men to plainclothes attire and using him as a detective. Charleston is reported as having nine patrolmen. It uses approximately 32 percent of all such law enforcement personnel in South Carolina.

The roundup, which is entirely unofficial, follows

Darlington, Florence and Marion counties, each, have two communities using such officers. Horry's deputy sheriff lives in Conway, but patrols areas over the county where his services are deemed most needed.

Columbia patrolmen Mims, Pearson (who has since resigned from the force) and Eleazer. Columbia employed two officers in 1949. Since then it has used as many as four on two or more occasions, the number it now uses. Three of its men have resigned for other positions, which means it has employed a total of seven men since 1949.

ed from the force) and Eleazer. Columbia employed two offi- or more occasions, the number it now uses. Three of its employed a total of seven men since 1949.

Florence has added a third officer since this picture was made about three years ago, All are soundly praised by city officials.

Sumter, last year, hired officers Gailliard and Burns, who work the Manning avenue section and whose services are lauded by the community.

Deputy Buxton Brown of Horry county, now in his fourth year of service. His main work is patrol at Atlantic and Myrtle Beaches. Conway hired two officers in 1944. Summerton hired the first, Dave Lawson, who calls himself "Dean of them all."

August 21, 1953

Chief of Police
Durham, N. C.

Dear Sir:

For several years now, the Southern Regional Council has kept as accurate a record as possible of the employment of Negro policemen in Southern cities. This information has been much in demand. It has proved particularly helpful to chiefs of police and other officials in those cities considering adding Negro policemen as an aid to law enforcement in the Negro community.

According to our records, your city is one of those using Negro policemen. To insure that our list is correct, it is our policy to request official confirmation each year from the chiefs of police concerned.

We shall greatly appreciate your cooperation in filling out the attached questionnaire and returning it in the enclosed self-addressed envelope.

Sincerely yours,
Harold C. Fleming

Comments If the right type negro is employed - which is entirely up to the employer, a negro officer can be one of the best, most reliable and respected on any department. In my tenure as chief of police we have had two different negro policemen; the first one was not reliable in any way, was not respected and we had a lot of trouble with our negro people(there are approximately 1000 of them); At the present time we have a highly respected negro officer and have had very little trouble with our negro population in the 6 years he has been employed; his own personal conduct is beyond reproach and he is firm and impartial in his enforcement. I would recommend a negro officer anytime, if he is the right type to earn and keep the respect he deserves.

Comments The First Colored Policeman was named Emzy Harrell and was hired by The City about 1903. The records of that period are not complete on personnel so we are not sure of the exact date. Colored Policemen have been employed by the City since that time. One Policeman, Ananias James was employed by the City in Jan. 1924 and retired in 1952. He is now employed as a civilian School Crossing Guard. Another Policeman, Charles Walsh has been with the Police Dept. since 1933. He will retire in Jan. 1954. Our plans are to replace him as soon as possible. Entrance to the Dept. is by competitive examination under the State Civil Service Law. Five of the present Colored Policemen now employed by the Police Dept. entered by this examination.

Two Negroes Are Given Positions On Police Force

Monroe (La) News-Star

"In view of the fact that the chiefs of the police department are in favor of the appointment of two Negro officers to work the Negro section of Monroe solely, and also in view that these men have been cleared through the Civil Service, I hereby authorize their appointments," spoke Mayor John E. Coon in behalf of the Monroe city council, which met in his office at 10 a.m. Tuesday.

The Negroes appointed were Ansley Reed and Roosevelt Hattan. Also appointed to the Monroe police department was Joseph A. Battaglia.

This issue, which has been under consideration of the city council, brought much discussion from the floor. Chief of Detectives Hugh Tolbert stated "I feel that these Negroes would be very beneficial to the police department. Numerous times we have had to rely on the Negro population for information, which has led to the apprehending of criminals. I feel that the city of Monroe could use them very successfully. Also, in other communities in Louisiana such as New Iberia and Lafayette, the use of Negro policemen has proved very helpful."

Also in favor of their appointment was Assistant Chief of Police George Woods. "I feel that it would be very wise to employ the Negroes often and they could better obtain information than a white officer. Also the use of Negro policemen would relieve the white officers on duty there now," the assistant said.

Stating in final accord for the Negro appointment, Chief M. L. Peters said, "Our Negro population is large enough to justify the use of Negro officers, and it would be wise to employ them.

In answer to the question of whether they would be assigned to the Negro section alone, which was submitted by Mayor Coon, Chief Peters stated that he felt that it would be the only way he could approve the appointments.

Also passed in City Council, before it recessed until 2 p.m. Tuesday was the payment of some bills, submitted by Frank X. Cline, commissioner of Finance and Utilities.

1953 Negro Police Survey
Comments from Southern Chiefs and Sheriffs

Hot Springs, Ark. "Satisfactory."

Clearwater, Fla. "Their work has been satisfactory in handling our colored population, and has eliminated possible civil rights infringements, which any law enforcement officer subjects himself to while enforcing the law with colored people."

Deland, Fla. "We find Negro policemen are a great help. Would not be without one."

Gainesville, Fla. "These officers were chosen for their known good character, discretion and fidelity to duty. Their behavior, services and discharge of duty has been very satisfactory."

Melbourne, Fla. "We have a fine man and are well pleased with him."

Ocala, Fla. "Negro Policemen are paid on the same scale as our regular police and are given the same benefits."

Orlando, Fla. "Have proved very satisfactory."

Panama City, Fla. "This man has made us a good policeman. I think any city or county should have a colored policemen where they have a colored population.

Atlanta, Ga. "We plan to add more Negro police from time to time as they are needed and as we can train them."

Columbus, Ga. "These officers are doing a good job."

Macon, Ga. "We hired two officers in 1951 as an experiment, but found them to be entirely satisfactory so added two more in 1952."

Savannah, Ga. "They are doing a splendid job."

Hopkinsville, Ky. "We are well pleased with Negro officers and they are doing an excellent job. One of the above officers is coming up for promotion to sergeant."

Louisville, Ky. "They have been of great value in combating any accusation of discrimination, or mistreatment of the colored people by white officers."

New Iberia, La. "Very satisfactory in Negro district."

Gulfport, Miss. "These two men are doing a fair job."

Indianola, Miss. "Our Negro policeman, Nathaniel Jacks, has been and is still satisfactory in every respect. He works with his own color and is LAW AND ORDER with his race. He is called upon many times by the law enforcement officers of this community to work with them. Our policeman is an asset to our city, he is polite, honest, and respected by both races, white and colored."

Ahoskie, N. C. "This officer has done a very good job."

Asheville, N. C. "They have proven satisfactory."

Durham, N. C. "The use of Negro police officers has proved very satisfactory in this city. This city is thoroughly sold on making use of Negroes as law enforcement officers."

Guilford County, Greensboro, N. C. "We have one colored deputy sheriff and his work has been excellent. We pay him a full-time salary and furnish him with a car that is equipped with radio."

Fayetteville, N. C. "The Negro policewoman works entirely in school areas with school traffic and has proven a capable worker. Three of the Negro policemen have proven to be very capable, intelligent, and reliable policemen. They are well liked by other officers of the Police Department and have been a definite asset to the Department."

Greenville, N. C. "The Negro officer employed by this department has proven satisfactory."

High Point, N. C. "Negro Policemen have proven satisfactory to the City."

Kinston, N. C. "So far, the work has been satisfactory."

Lenoir, N. C. "Results, very good."

Ponca City, Okla. "If the right type Negro is employed, which is entirely up to the employer, a Negro officer can be one of the best, most reliable and respected on any department. In my tenure as chief of police we have had two different Negro policemen; the first one was not reliable in any way, was not respected and we had a lot of trouble with our Negro people; at the present time we have a highly respected Negro officer and have had very little trouble with our Negro population in the six years he has been employed; his own personal conduct is beyond reproach and he is firm and impartial in his enforcement. I would recommend a Negro officer any time, if he is the right type to earn and keep the respect he deserves."

Stillwater, Okla. "Duties: satisfactory."

Tulsa County, Tulsa, Okla. "These boys are doing an ~~xxxxxxxxx~~ exceptionally good job and we are very proud of their work."

Beaufort, S. C. "The colored policemen have been very helpful in enforcement of the law in colored areas."

Beaufort County, Beaufort, S. C. "Jessie Laurence has been a policeman and deputy sheriff of Beaufort County, S. C. for 48 years. Very efficient."

Charleston, S. C. "I would like to state that they have been serving our community well."

Conway, S. C. "Negro police have been a big help in law enforcement in the Negro section of the city."

Lake City, S. C. "The colored policemen are doing a good job. It really works out O K here."

Mullins, S. C. "This man is making us a good officer."

Rock Hill, S. C. "We think our colored officers have done a fine job."

Timmonsville, S. C. "We have been cautious about hiring a Negro policeman, trying our best to get one that will best fill the job."

Chattanooga, Tenn. "They have worked out very satisfactorily."

Fort Worth, Tex. "These officers are foot patrolmen in Negro populated areas and are doing a good job."

Galveston, Tex. "Satisfactory service."

Orange, Tex. "We have had very good service by having colored police in our colored town. They are in closer contact with the colored people and know their habits better than we do."

San Antonio, Tex. "Applicants are appointed in this Department on the basis of grade made in entrance examination conducted by the Civil Service Commission, and after clearing physical examination and character reference check. Promotions are based on examination grades which combines written examination, efficiency, and longevity. Neither race nor color are a factor in either qualifying function."

Travis County, Austin, Tex. "We find our colored deputy very efficient."

Cape Charles, Va. "The writer (Mayor) believes it is a good idea to employ Negro policemen for the Negro sections of the town or city."

Newport News, Va. "Our Negro policewomen work part time for school traffic only, and are doing an excellent job. Our Negro policemen have been a great asset to our Police Department and are also doing an excellent job as police officers."

Richmond, Va. "Work in the colored districts. Services are satisfactory in most cases."

A Council to attain, through research and action, the ideals and practices of equal opportunity for all peoples in the South.

For several years now, the Southern Regional Council has kept as accurate a record as possible of the employment of Negro police in the South. This information has been much in demand. It has proved particularly helpful to chiefs of police and sheriffs considering the addition of Negro police as an aid to law enforcement in their communities.

If your city or county is among the many Southern law enforcement agencies using Negro police, please fill out the enclosed questionnaire and return it to our office. A self-addressed envelope is enclosed for your convenience.

We greatly appreciate your cooperation in keeping our records accurate and up-to-date.

Sincerely,

Anna Holden

TO: Applicants and Advisers

SUBJECT: Job Opportunities for Apprentice Policemen in Dallas

In an interview last week with Chief of Police Carl F. Hansson we learned that there are no longer any Negro policemen in uniform in Dallas. At the present time the four Negro members of the force are assigned as plainclothesmen on the vice-squad.

Chief Hansson states that City Civil Service has not been able to recruit enough qualified Negro applicants for the Apprentice Policemen openings. We both agreed that standards should remain the same for all applicants. In order to prove to the community that the important "showcase" job of police officer can be successfully filled, the following plan is suggested:

1. Refer interested applicants to this office during December.

2. The applicants will be carefully screened and tested. They will receive a special written examination, physical examination, and a record will be made of their background and fitness for the job.

3. A few of the most competent applicants will then be referred to City Hall by January 1, 1954 to take the City Civil Service Apprentice Policemen examination, and their records from this office will accompany their applications.

Requirements for Apprentice Policemen:
*Equivalent to high school education.
*Minimum height 5 ft. 8 inches.
*Minimum weight 150 pounds.
*Age 21 through 35.

This important subject will be discussed at the next Advisory Committee meeting (Thursday, December 10, 8 P.M. at this office) and your suggestions and ideas will be helpful.

Sincerely yours,

Byron Buckeridge
Almita S. Robinson

Southern Church Women Draft Action Program

I AM concerned that our constitutional freedoms are not shared by all our people; my religion convinces me they must be and gives me courage to study, work, and lead others to the fulfillment of equal justice under the law. I will respond to calls from the Southern Regional Council to serve my faith and my community in the defense of justice.

With this pledge, 150 church women leaders from twelve Southern States concluded a two-day conference in Atlanta on "the spiritual approach to social issues." The delegates met September 8 and 9 at the call of the Southern Regional Council, in cooperation with church women's groups and the National Board of the YWCA. The meeting was inter-faith, inter-denominational, and inter-racial.

Guest speaker and participant in the conference was Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, who is presently serving as the United States delegate on the Human Rights Commission of the United Nations. She took part in the workshops Thursday, September 8, and addressed an audience of some 1,800 in the evening. Her subject was "The Declaration of Human Rights and the Community."

Individual Responsibility

Mrs. Roosevelt stressed the responsibility of the individual to work for a broader democracy at the community level. Citing her experiences as a delegate to the United Nations, she declared that every failure of democracy in the nation weakens us in the eyes of the people of the world.

"The economic and military leadership of the United States," she said, "is unquestioned. But we have not yet succeeded in giving the world the moral and spiritual leadership which it so desperately needs."

During the workshop session, Mrs. Roosevelt strongly endorsed the suggestion of Mrs. M. E. Tilly that church women visit the courts and make their influence felt in the interest of equal justice. "I miss my guess," she said, "if you do not find a lot of things that will surprise you."

The conference opened Thursday morning with a keynote address by Mr. Paul D. Williams, president of the Southern Regional Council.

"It is important," he told the conference, "that we ponder our spiritual heritage, for there are many people in the world and in our own country who think otherwise.... In a sense there are no such things as Catholic rights, or Protestant rights, or Jewish rights — or, for that matter, Mongolian rights, or Negro rights, or Caucasian rights. There are only human rights..."

Speakers and Workshops

In the course of the morning, the church women heard Dr. W. J. Faulkner, dean of the chapel at Fisk University, on "The Spiritual Beginnings of Law"; Mr. Morris Abram, Atlanta attorney, on "Law and Morals"; and Mr. Ralph McGill, editor of the Atlanta Constitution, on "County Government." The afternoon was devoted to workshop discussion of law enforcement, administration of justice, and "building a spirit of brotherhood" through the church, the press, and the schools.

The night meeting, held in the Wesley Memorial Church, was open to members and friends of the co-sponsoring organizations; the main auditorium, which seats 2,000, was filled almost to capacity. Mrs. Arthur J. Moore, of Atlanta, gave the invocation, and Mr. Williams introduced Mrs. Roosevelt. Following her speech, hundreds of the audience filed past to speak briefly to her.

Friday morning the conferees held their concluding workshop session, at which a program of action for the home community was adopted. (See page 3.) Mrs. Lowry Hunt reported to the group on a self-survey now being carried out in Madison, Georgia, and urged the church women leaders to initiate similar self-studies in their own communities. Mrs. Irving Cohn, executive secretary of the New Orleans Committee on Race Relations, gave an account of the interracial Teachers Institute held annually in that city.

Dr. Hugh Brimm, executive secretary of the Social Service Commission of the Southern Baptist Convention, spoke on "The Church: Her Responsibility and Opportunity." A concluding address, "Courage for the Task," was given by Dr. Faulkner. His words summed up the spirit of the entire conference.

"Today," he declared, "we have seen the vision of a new Southland. But we must remind ourselves that for every bit of progress in human relations a price must be paid. Those of us here today will have to pay that price."

A Program of Action

We, as Southern church women joined in a "Fellowship of the Concerned," pledge ourselves to enlist the aid of others in putting the following program of action into effect in our communities:

Law Enforcement

- To inform ourselves of the areas in our communities where law is not equally enforced, and to work for corrective action.
- To do our part to see that opportunity for registration and voting is legally and actually secure for all.
- To visit the courts and make our influence felt in the interest of equal justice.
- To encourage better selection and training of policemen.
- To work for appointment of Negro policemen.
- To commend public officials when they show courage and integrity.
- To call to the attention of authorities violations which are known to us.
- To get in touch with the Southern Regional Council when tension arises and to take all possible local action to prevent violence.

Public Opinion

- To affirm in personal relations and religious and civic work our conviction of the dignity of all human beings and the ideal of equal justice.
- To support and encourage pastors who offer progressive leadership in the community.
- To affiliate with other groups working for the same objectives.
- To discuss problems with our newspaper editors; to commend their good works; and to urge the adoption of improved practices in the handling of racial news (as outlined in the Southern Regional Council pamphlet Race in the News).
- To urge local schools to cooperate in using existing materials to build better human relations.
- To begin, on however small a scale, an institute on race relations.
- We endorse the Home Town Self-Survey as a means of self-education and constructive action. (Information available from the Southern Regional Council.)

SRC ANNUAL MEETING

Members of the Southern Regional Council are asked to note that the annual membership meeting will take place Wednesday, November 9, in Atlanta. You will be notified well in advance of the time and place of the meeting.

Meanwhile, make your plans to attend and help shape the future of the South's leading interracial organization.

Law and Discrimination

"You can't legislate morality!"

More often than not, that statement sounds the death knell of any discussion of law and discrimination. And it is a very effective death knell. It is so patently true. It has about it an intimidating ring of finality. The only trouble with the statement is that it silences without answering. For, true though it is, it is also irrelevant. The question is not whether a law can instill in people a particular moral attitude, but whether it can effectively influence their behavior.

That question is particularly timely now, when we are concerned as a nation with ridding our society of undemocratic practices. We have become uncomfortably aware of the eyes of the world upon us. Every example of discrimination, every evidence of "second-class citizenship" for any of our fellow-Americans is magnified to international dimensions. We are convinced, and have set out to convince the rest of the world, that our way of life offers the most in freedom and opportunity for the individual. But we are often on the defensive because of the gap between our ideals and our practices; the failures of our democracy have taken on enormous importance. As a result, many more of us are taking a second look at the sore spots of prejudice and discrimination, and instead of looking away, we are facing ugly facts and seeking ways to remove them.

Two years ago, this growing concern found public expression in the appointment of the President's Committee on Civil Rights. The Committee's report offered concrete proposals for controlling the widespread discrimination it had found in our society. Some of the proposals — notably those dealing with legislation — have met with opposition from various sources reflecting various motives. We are concerned here with only one sort of opposition — that which accepts the broad objective of a more democratic society but which questions the effectiveness of legislation as a means to that end.

It is natural that there should be difference of opinion in this field. As yet, there are no hard-and-fast rules for achieving social change. Unfortunately, however, too many people have let their ideas harden at one extreme or the other. There are those who say, "Human relations can only be improved by education." And, at the opposite pole, there are those who know only one answer—"There ought to be a law." With these blanket generalizations, they close their eyes to everything between the two extremes.

The role of law in changing human relations is a mammoth subject. Volumes can be, and have been, written about it. But without attempting to examine and resolve the whole problem, it is useful to look at a few of the arguments currently offered on each side. As in any public controversy, certain stereotypes have developed and, through constant repetition, have obscured the real issues. Each of the exclusive points-of-view in the argument over legislation vs. education rests quite firmly on a set of quite shaky assumptions. Let us look briefly at a few of them.

Laws and Morals

It is a commonly accepted notion that "law" and "morality" are two entirely distinct things. The anti-legal position assumes that, of the two, morality is the more fundamental. Hence, you "can't legislate morals" — but morals can and do produce legislation. According to this view, laws are wholly the product of public opinion, and a law is meaningless unless its provisions are already accepted in custom and tradition. The opposite view holds that law actually generates morals, that the mere passage of a law is grounds enough for assuming its workability. As is so often the case, this is the truth violently torn apart; the two mutilated halves must be put together again before any sound conclusions are possible.

The separation of law and morals is an artificial one. Actually, they are closely interwoven and each is partly the product and partly the producer of the other. The morals or customs of any society are the rules which the members of that society agree upon as essential to their safety, unity, and order. Those rules most vital to the welfare of the society are usually codified into law. Once enacted, laws become positive influences in the shaping of public attitudes, for they set uniform standards by which people govern their behavior. In this sense, laws too are "education". There is no more effective way to learn new attitudes than by the actual practice of new behavior patterns. This does not mean that no legislation will work unless it is already a part of the folkways. Paradoxically enough, it is quite possible for legislation both to lead and to follow public opinion at the same time. To understand this, we need only pause to remember that our society entertains simultaneously ideals and practices which directly contradict each other. This is the conflict that Myrdal termed the "American dilemma." Our national ideals, as expressed in the Constitution and the Declaration of Independence, clearly affirm the dignity of each individual and his right to equality of opportunity; yet our day-to-day practices reflect many discriminations completely out of keeping with these ideals. A law which is far ahead of our actual practices may simply affirm an ideal stoutly rooted in our national thinking.

Accordingly, it is not wise to measure public support of a proposed law solely by the yardstick of everyday practices. Even when a majority of people act in a manner inconsistent with the aims of a projected piece of legislation, it does not necessarily follow that the law will prove ineffective. As we have suggested, a law's potential effectiveness must also be measured by how well it harmonizes with our American ideals. Certainly this would tip the scales in favor of legislation designed to strengthen the rights and opportunities of the individual. The common values we regard most highly — in our laws, our institutions, our traditions — are those which guarantee the protection of human rights.

Examples are often cited of laws which, once passed, were openly disobeyed. Admittedly this has happened. But, in most such cases, the laws in question had no deep national roots; they merely reflected the moral standards of special groups at certain times. Consequently, their appeal was limited and most people simply did not accept them as relevant or important. Laws embodying traditional values, however, are seldom openly or widely defied. Such laws are not attempts to "legislate morality." They are public expressions of an already existing morality — sometimes extensively violated, to be sure, but agreed upon by the major groups in our society. When we make the violations punishable, we are not legislating against the inner attitude, but against the outward expression of it.

Prejudice and Discrimination

Prejudice, in one form or another, will no doubt continue to exist for a long time to come. It cannot be eradicated directly by legislation — nor for that matter by "education". As a part of personality, it must be attacked through all the institutions that bear importantly on the individual's experience. That is a long, slow process about which we know much too little. But we do not have to wait for a solution to that problem before we can take action against discrimination. Our laws have always regarded discrimination as behavior detrimental to the general welfare. Although they are not concerned with individual prejudice, the bills of rights of our federal and state constitutions, the Thirteenth, Fourteenth, and Fifteenth Amendments, and the civil rights laws enacted by many States all apply directly to acts of discrimination. Implicit in them is the distinction between prejudice, a purely private attitude not subject to public regulation, and discrimination, overt behavior which expresses prejudice in ways harmful to the persons or groups subjected to it.

This clear distinction between prejudice and discrimination should not obscure their close relationship. Each feeds on, and can be used to justify, the other. It is a fact of history that the disabilities of a minority group are always used to reinforce prejudice against it. For example, members of a group suffering discrimination may react in one of two ways: by accepting their inferior status, however reluctantly, or by openly refusing to accept it. In either case, their behavior provides an excuse for continued discrimination. If they accept a subordinate status, the dominant group can point to their lack of resistance as evidence that the minority likes things as they are and is not interested in change. Then, too, the by-products of discrimination — poverty, lack of educaton, "shiftlessness," and low standard of living — can be used to support a theory of in-born inferiority. On the other hand, if members of the handicapped group rebel against the injustice of their lot, their "aggressive" behavior becomes added ground for discrimination. Thus the very conditions created by inequalities provide fertile soil for the growth of further prejudice and discrimination.

Needless to say, all this can work the other way, too. With the elimination of discriminatory treatment, many of the conditions which reinforce prejudice disappear.

Law As A Negative Influence

Law has been an important influence in this vicious circle — unfortunately, not always a positive influence. Nowhere is the effectiveness of legal action in group relations more striking than in those cases where law itself has created or perpetuated discrimination. The classic case, of course, is Negro slavery. Many of the social patterns and public attitudes created by that legal institution still surround us. Although slavery was abolished almost a century ago, other legal instruments served to keep the Negro deprived of full citizenship.

Among these instruments were the decisions of the conservative U. S. Supreme Court in the latter half of the last century. The case of Plessy v. Ferguson, in 1896, is a good example. The ruling of the Supreme Court in that case set an important and damaging precedent. The suit involved a Louisiana statute separating white and Negro passengers in railroad coaches. The Court upheld the statute, on the grounds that social prejudices could not be eradicated by law. Mr. Justice Harlan — himself a Kentuckian and former slave-holder — wrote a famous dissent in words so vigorous and so prophetic that they are startling to read, even today. He wrote, in part:

"Our Constitution is color-blind, and neither knows nor tolerates classes among citizens.... It is therefore to be regretted that this high tribunal, the final expositor of the fundamental law of the land, has reached the conclusion that it is competent for a state to regulate the enjoyment by citizens of their civil rights solely upon the basis of race....

"The destinies of the two races in this country are indissolubly linked together, and the interests of both require that the common government of all shall not permit the seeds of race hate to be planted under the sanction of law. What can more certainly arouse race hate, what more certainly create and perpetuate a feeling of distrust between these races, than state enactments which in fact proceed on the ground that colored citizens are so inferior and degraded that they cannot be allowed to sit in public coaches occupied by white citizens?...

"If evils will result from the commingling of the two races upon the public highways established for the benefit of all, they will be infinitely less than those that will surely come from state legislation regulating the enjoyment of civil rights upon the basis of race...."

We have only recently seen examples, at the state level, of the relaxation of laws prescribing segregation. In Kentucky, the Day Law, forbidding education of white and Negro students in the same institutions, was amended. This was done to permit the training of sorely needed Negro doctors and nurses in institutions formerly limited to white students only. In Oklahoma, under the pressure of supreme court rulings, laws were altered so that Negro students might be admitted to graduate schools of the state university.

Here were two cases in which laws enforcing discrimination had to be modified because their effectiveness was all too great. It was impossible to reduce the discrimination so long as they remained in full force. If the validity of this action is granted, one must conclude that legislation is at least negatively effective in the area of discrimination.

What was substituted in Kentucky was the principle of local option — that is, a transfer of the whole matter from the realm of law to that of private choice. The policy on admission of colored students, instead of being prescribed by law, was left to the decision of the individual institution. This is an intermediate step in the legislative operation that has received little attention. In those places where adverse public opinion (or public opinion believed to be adverse) has prevented the passage of anti-discrimination laws, it should at least be possible to grant wider latitude to private choice. Those persons who oppose the legislation of "morality" might well apply the same reasoning to the legislation of "immorality." All of our Southern States have laws prescribing more or less rigid patterns of interracial behavior — the net result of which works to the disadvantage of Negro citizens. The removal of many or all of these laws would be eminently consistent with the view that custom and tradition should govern in human relations. In the present situation, it is often difficult to distinguish what is custom and what is simply a legally perpetuated practice.

The existence of discriminatory laws exerts an inhibiting influence on even the purely "educational" efforts to foster better relations. Any attempt to mold more democratic public attitudes suffers from an unsympathetic legal climate. The need everywhere is for responsible persons in the community to support wholesome practices and to take the lead in getting desirable changes. This they are more reluctant to do when the law either expressly sanctions the discriminatory practices or obviously fails to oppose them. The passage of favorable laws — or, at the very least, the removal of adverse laws — can do much to create an atmosphere in which healthy social change will flourish.

The Courts and the Law

The most striking examples of effective legal action in the field of civil rights are the court decisions of recent years. These do not represent the passage of legislation, it is true, but the resemblance is close. What the courts have done is to reinterpret existing law in such a way that quite often the effect was the same as that of new legislation. The most ardent supporter of education as the proper medium of social change must observe that court decisions have proved remarkably effective, even when they have run counter to deeply entrenched public practices.

Ten or fifteen years ago, there was little doubt in most minds that "public opinion" in the South was opposed to Negro suffrage — perhaps as strongly as, today, "public opinion" rejects the proposed civil rights legislation. Then came a series of vigorous court rulings which made it clear that denial of the right to vote cannot be countenanced under our Constitution; and the Negro began to assume his rightful importance as a voting citizen. The right to the ballot is still not secure in all parts of the South. But responsible elements in the region no longer maintain that voting is the white man's exclusive privilege.

How does one account for this change in public attitudes? One view might be that the change would have come even without the intervention of the courts, that the South was ready for the change, and that the explanation is largely one of voluntary acceptance by Southern leadership. The opposite view is that the new public attitude was the direct result of the court decisions, that it was actually created by judicial fiat.

There is a third more plausible explanation. The court decisions in question affirmed a principle of basic equality fundamental to American democracy. Once armed with authority, that principle could not long be defied by thoughtful Southerners without serious misgivings. As is often true in our personal lives, the South needed the force of authority to strengthen its better impulses. Similar instances might be cited in the case of Negro jury service, equalization of schools, and so on. Each of these desirable reforms, prodded by court action, is growing in practice and in public support throughout the South.

This is not to say that any legal action based on Constitutional grounds will necessarily achieve the desired end. We have seen, in the Civil War, one outstanding example of the failure of coercion by government. The lesson to be learned from that tragic conflict is the vital importance of statesmanship. The legal mechanism alone is never enough. Moral leadership and an awareness of the social and economic workings of society are indispensable.

Law and Living Conditions

Both proponents and opponents of the civil rights program have largely overlooked the value of legislation that would improve the material status of depressed groups. The executive committee of the Southern Regional Council put the matter well in its statement on civil rights:

"Jobs and farms and homes and schools and health — these are the underpinnings of civil rights. In all of these basic needs, the South is below the rest of the country, and in the South the Negro population is below the white population. The job is to raise the whole South, white and Negro, up to the level of the rest of the country . . . It is clear that without a conscious and costly national effort general conditions in many parts of the South will remain backward for years to come. We cannot afford the luxury of waiting for slow, unaided growth in those areas."

One of the weaknesses of the civil rights program is its failure to recognize the importance of legislation bolstering the economic position of the most underprivileged segments of our population. For those who do not see the relevance, the executive committee pointed out: "A person, black or white, who can stand on his own feet economically, who can make his own way without fear or favor, is in a much better position to assert his individual rights. Moreover, when men see in their fellow citizens people who are doing about the same kind of work as they, who have pretty much the same education, live in the same kind of houses, and have the same kind of self-respect — then they more cheerfully accord equal rights to all."

Law and Public Policy

A final point should be touched on briefly; that is, the importance of legal protection of human rights to our world position.

Those who oppose federal legislation in the realm of group relations frequently do so from a purely regional or local point of view. This is understandable, but not always valid. For the problem is not of purely regional or local concern. Discrimination in any part of our country works to the discredit of the whole nation in international relations. Hostile propaganda spotlights it and alleges that it is fundamental in our democracy. If we are to exonerate ourselves of this charge, we must make it quite clear that our national policy is firmly opposed to discrimination of any kind. The most convincing way to demonstrate this fact is through our national Congress, which is the only body representing our people as a whole. Thus, it is at least arguable that, even when there is doubt of the complete effectiveness of a particular measure, it may be desirable as an affirmation of public policy. Our statesmen would at any rate be relieved of some of the difficulty in answering charges that our government winks at, or even connives in, various forms of discrimination.

Probably no legislation is ever passed with the unanimous support of every group in our society. Often it is necessary to defer to the wishes of a particular group rather than apply coercion. But when the national welfare is seriously involved, there should be no question of precedence: regional traditions, group interests, or whatever, should voluntarily yield to the broader necessity. If they do not, they may well be over-ridden.

It is a hopeful sign that more and more people in the South are looking at the problem of racial discrimination in the light of national and international opinion. There is greater acceptance of the fact that the entire nation cannot dam back its legislative action until its most reluctant areas are persuaded. We are, in short, realizing that private prejudices and local customs must make way for more urgent demands.

Mr. Morroe Berger
American Jewish Congress
1834 Broadway
New York 23, N. Y.

Dear Mr. Berger:

Here are our figures on Negro policemen in the South. I believe the confusion resulted from a faulty news story which consisted largely of typographical errors.

Enclosed is a copy of September 1949 New South and a typewritten supplement which brings that listing up to date, to the best of our knowledge. The revised totals on the typewritten sheet are probably what you will want to use. Also enclosed is a page from September 1948 New South which carries a table for that date and, on the reverse side, the totals for 1947.

The listing of Negro policemen is a continuous job. No sooner do you get it completed than revision is needed. But the Council has tried hard to keep an accurate count, and I think our figures are the most complete.

If more clearing up is needed, let me know and I will answer quickly. Meanwhile, I look forward to seeing the advance copy of the Balance Sheet.

Sincerely,

Harold C. Fleming

Dear Mr. Fleming,

Going over some balance-sheet material at home, I find some confusion in our files with respect to the Conference's reports on the number of Negro police officers in Southern cities. I think the best thing for us would be a simple statement from you as to your data on the number of such officers and the number of cities employing them.

In order that we may accurately compare the 1949 figures with those for 1948, would you please let me know whether the following quotation from our balance-sheet for 1948 is correct or incorrect?

"In October, 64 Southern cities were using a total of 236 Negro police officers, an increase of 8 cities and 43 officers over 1947."

Some of the confusing material we have seems to suggest the foregoing statement is incorrect.

I'd appreciate your replying to me at the Office of the American Jewish Congress, 1834 Broadway, N.Y. 23, N.Y. We are very grateful for your help.

Sincerely,

Morroe Berger

P.S. We hope to be able to send you a mimeographed preliminary copy in about a week — that also tells you we'd like your reply quickly, if convenient. Thanks again.

Mrs. Irving H. Cohn, Executive Secretary
New Orleans Committee on Race Relations
1122 Lowerline Street
New Orleans 18, Louisiana

Dear Mrs. Cohn:

What a good plan!

Guy Johnson at Chapel Hill, North Carolina probably knows more than any one else about criminology and police administration in the South, and you ought to write him for some suggestions.

The best I can say is that the Personnel City Manager in Charlotte, North Carolina, Mr. Henry A. Yancy has had rich experience in the field. He himself brought the first Negro policemen to Greensboro and then brought them into Charlotte. I am trying to find in the files a speech of his that will give you some of his points. He is well liked in Charlotte as he was in Greensboro. I do not know him personally.

Joseph D. Lohman is, of course, the best in the country and you ought to try hard to get him.

Gordon Lovejoy could tell you whether somebody on the Miami force would be really helpful or not.

Such instances as I have heard of of Negro police themselves addressing smallish audiences on their work have been excellent.

I think very probably the chief here in Atlanta would do you a good job. He is a gentlemanly person who always wanted Negro policemen and is delighted that he has them. His name is Herbert Jenkins. If Atlanta, with its overhanging state problems, can do it and do it well, that ought to be a fairly good push to New Orleans.

Keep in mind the rural side of the problem. Negro deputy sheriffs are quite as much needed as are Negro policemen. A few southern counties have them.

Sincerely,

Mr. George Mitchell
Southern Regional Council
63 Auburn Ave., N.E.
Atlanta, Ga.

Dear Mr. Mitchell:

The Committee has decided to invite one of two police superintendents from Southern cities to come here to speak at a membership meeting which will be open to the public. We want them to talk about their experiences with Negro police in their communities and perhaps have one of them bring with him one of the Negroes on his force. We need some suggestions and turn to you. Naturally we'd like someone who is a good speaker and who could present the subject in a sympathetic manner.

This week a group of us went to see our superintendent and the man who is head of police training here and made the enclosed sugges tions to him. We were well received and were told that we would be hearing from them. They plan to begin their program in about three months. Prior to this they have done nothing for the past eight or nine months as they have been busy building a school with their own labor. So we're hopeful that we can do something about one of our local problems, even though this is an indirect approach. I pass it on to you as police brutality must be a problem in many Southern communities.

We're also planning to have a study group composed of public school teachers next fall who will use human relations materials in their classrooms and then discuss and evaluate that material in the study group. Another big project is another Institute on Human Relations such as was held about four or five years ago. You'll hear more from us about this.

My best regards,

Sincerely,

Helen

Plans are being made for a Police Training Institute at the University of Louisville. Capt W.G. Keefer of the Louisville Crime Prevention Bureau and Capt. G.C. Kopp, of the Police Education Bureau are working with University officials and others. The tentative plans call for three twelve week sessions beginning in September, January, and April, over a five year period. Police from all over the South will attend , twenty-five (?) at each session. It is hoped that sufficient funds will be obtained to pay all their expenses, traveling, maintainence, and tuition, so that the cost to a city sending one or more officers will only be that of continuing his salary for twelve weeks during his absence.

Below is the tentative content of the courses to be offered:

1. Legal aspects of Police Adminitsration
2. Police Organization and Administration
3. Socio-legal Problems of the Southern Region
4. Crime Prevention and Juvenile Delinquency
5. Teaching and In-service Training Methods
6. Scientific Investigation and Identification
7. Criminal Psychology and Sociology
8. Police Records System
9. Police Patrol and Communications
10. Combat Methods and Safety Techniques
11. Traffic Control

We recommend that when this Institute is set up, possibly next fall, one or more policemen be sent from New Orleans.

We also recommend that some training in minority problems be introduced in the regular training for new members of the police force, for the regular members of the force, and for members of the Juvenile Bureau. We suggest that the material listed below be integrated into the courses by devoting class periods every other day, rather than isolating this material. Consideration should also be given to the suggested order of the sessions.

1st session -- A brief talk by the Mayor or Commissioner McCloskey about the role and efficient and fair police force plays in the progress of our city. Followed by a film, such as Frank Sinatra in " The House I Live In" or BDon't Be a Sucker." Possibly a few minutes of discussion about the film.

2nd session -- A Talk on the moral aspects of police work as related to law and justice. Suggested speakers, Father Vincent O'Connell, Mr. Charles McGavern, or others.

3rd session -- A talk on Crime in the South by a criminologist. Suggested speaker, Dr. Harlan Gilmore of Tulane. Followed by questions and discussion.

4th session -- A panel of two or three persons to discuss the laws dealing with minority groups, due process, and other related legal aspects of police work. Suggested speakers, Dr. Vernon Miller of Loyola, Mr. Monte Lehmann, Mr. Irving Ferman. Followed by questions and discussion.

5th session -- A report and discussion lead by Mr. Scheuring or Major McNamara on " The Police and Minority Groups" by joseph D. Lohman.

6th session -- A talk on criminal psychology and race by a psychologist

7th session -- A panel composed of three or four civic leaders to discuss " What the Negro in New Orleans Wants" suggested persons, Dr. Dent, Mr. Clayton Fritchie of the Item, Mr. Clarence Laws of the Louisiana Weekly, Mr. John McCann, businessman

Dear Mr. Laws:

I have mailed to you five copies of each of two issues of New South, with the dope on Negro policemen. The October, 1947 issue has some accounts from cities already using them. There is one copy of a middle issue, with the 1948 table.

We know of five or six other cities that have added Negro policemen since our last "police" issue.

A year after Atlanta had put on its (eight) Negro policemen the Atlanta Journal quoted the Chief of Police as saying that in that year the Negro homicide rate had dropped fifty per cent.

Best luck, and let us know if we can help you further.

Dear Dr. Mitchell:

I am in need of some factual data concerning the employment of Negro police officers in Southern communities and some of the methods and techniques used in creating the proper climate for such appointments where this was necessary.

In discussing this matter with Mrs. Irving Cohn, Executive Secretary of the New Orleans Committee on Race Relations, just a few minutes ago, she advised me that a recent issue of the New South gave a very comprehensive picture of Negro police. Unfortunately, I do not have this particular issue even though I am a member of the committee. Mrs. Cohn it seems had distributed all of her copies also.

As you know the Administration of Mayor deLesseps S. Morrison is committed to the appointment of Negro police. I believe if we can assure this administration that it would not be pioneering if it added Negroes to the force and that more than three scores of Southern cities are employing Negro police to fine advantage, we might get some action here.

Thanking you in anticipation of your cooperation in the above, I am

Dear Mr. Thomas:

Sorry to hear that you aren't still at Lincoln, but I value your running your paper.

I met Mr. Swingler in Memphis last week and he said he is about to repair to Lincoln himself for a spell.

We have put out three issues of New South relating to Negro police. The oldest is the best, as giving most coverage of what chiefs, etc., had to say, but the last is a better table, of course.

I send you quite a bundle of them and hope that they will do some good.

Do try to get us a local group in Tuscaloosa. We ought to have it.

The Alabama Citizen comes in each week and is greatly valued.

Dear Mr.Mitchell:

As the result of several unfortunate developments in the affairs of our newspaper,I have been forced to withdraw from school temporarily.This action has caused me deep regret but I had no alternative.I do hope to return soon as I do enjoy the atmosphere of college.

Once more I am in need of your assistance.Don't worry I am not seeking a loan yet.The Council is broke.The Citizen is broke so we are not in position to help in that way.

I am trying to get our city to employ some Negro policemen.You have plenty of data on the use of Negro police in the south.I want copies of the NEW SOUTH with this information plus other that you may have.I shall write police officials in these cities concerning the efficiency of Negro police and publish their replies.I will also try to obtain pictures of these Negro policemen and use these too.

I am happy to report that the local interracial committee is doing a nice job.I will send you the names of several persons to write concerning the formation of a Council here. You may rest assure that I will not stop untill we have a local Council in this city.

I am still looking forward to receiving my copy of the NEW SOUTH every month.Do you get the CITIZEN I send each week ? If not please inform me immediately so that I can check your name with the mailing list.

Mr. John A. Harris
22 Mary Street
Charleston, South Carolina

Dear Mr. Harris:

We were very pleased to receive a copy of your "Progress Report to the Members of the Interracial Committee." Both the story and the telling of it are excellent.

The September issue of New South will contain our annual round-up on Negro policemen in Southern cities. The object, as you know, is to help local people get their own communities to adopt the practice. I wonder if we might have your permission to reprint your "Progress Report" in that issue. It would be useful to our members and friends throughout the South.

Any necessary changes could be made, of course. I myself think it is most effective as it stands. But if, for example, circumstances in Charleston made it advisable to omit the individual names used, that could be easily done. In any case, I shall look forward to hearing from you.

Again, our congratulations to you and to the Committee for an excellent piece of work.

Sincerely,

Harold C. Fleming

Reference is made to your request for information concerning negro policemen.

This Department does not now use any negro policemen nor does it intend the employment of negro policemen at this time.

In order that your records may be complete we wish to inform you that your present information as indicated on your letter of 11 August 1950 is incorrect.

We would be interested to see a copy of the official roster that you send, if such is distributed.

Dear Mrs. Childs:

I do appreciate the clippings.

The police one is especially helpful, as it fits into our current putting together of the 1950 figures.

We have written to Mr. John Harris for permission to reprint in the forthcoming police issue of New South, the story of how Charleston managed it.

I have a new and more comfortable car and shall hope some time between now and Christmas to steer its nose to Charleston.

Dear Mrs. Childs:

Several weeks ago we received here a copy of the mimeographed "Progress Report" to members of the Charleston Interracial Committee, in which was recounted the history of the successful effort to get Negro policemen employed. We were much impressed with the report as a well written account of how such things happen.

On August 25 I wrote Mr. John Harris and asked permission to reprint the report in the September New South, which is our annual Negro police issue. As yet, we have had no answer.

Since our deadline is upon us, I wonder if I might ask you to help us get whatever consent is necessary to reprint the report. Perhaps Mr. Harris has been out of town, or for some other reason has not been able to give the matter his attention. In any case, if you could prompt an answer from him or one of the other officers, it would help us greatly.

The Charleston experience was a valuable one, and I am sure you will agree that it should be shared.

Sincerely yours,

Harold C. Fleming

NEGRO POLICEMEN IN SOUTHERN CITIES

You will be interested in this most recent tabulation of Southern towns and cities employing Negro policemen. It is based, insofar as possible, on firsthand correspondence with chiefs of police themselves. We are grateful for the cooperation of these officials in keeping an accurate record of this growing practice. The Southern Regional Council will welcome corrections or additions to its figures.

Why An Atlanta School Suit?

By Benjamin E. Mays

THE SUIT filed September 19 by 200 Negro patrons of the public schools against the Atlanta School Board has attracted more attention and discussion than any local suit in recent years. The suit has been condemned by the Atlanta Press and some Negroes have condemned it. It is very difficult for people to speak and write on the subject of race with calm and objectivity, especially when the question of segregation is involved, for segregation is a sacred institution in our native South.

I think it was the great Woodrow Wilson who said that an educated man is one who can lend more light in an argument than heat. It seems to me that since September 19, we have generated more heat on this subject than light. I hope I can shed light and not heat. If I should succeed in helping to clarify a difficult issue, I will have rendered my community a distinct service. Whether I succeed or fail, believe me, my intentions are good.

The purpose of this address, therefore, is to give what I conceive to be the motives that lie behind the suit and to place it in its proper perspective. To argue that the suit makes an attack on segregation because the initiators of the suit want Negro children to go to school with white children is to miss the point entirely. Mixed schools is not the heart of the suit. Negroes opposed the curtain and the partition on the dining cars not because they wanted to eat with white people, but because the curtain and the partition were embarrassing to Negroes and because they set Negroes off as inferior persons. This the Negro resented. Eating with white people on the diner was not the issue.

Dr. Mays is President of Morehouse College and a member of the Southern Regional Council's Board of Directors. This article was drawn from a speech recently delivered at the Hungry Club of Atlanta. While it deals primarily with the suit filed last month in Federal Court against the Atlanta Board of Education, both the suit and Dr. Mays' comments on it have important implications for the whole South.

'Separate but Equal'

The motive behind the Atlanta suit represents the growing conviction, rightly or wrongly, among Negroes everywhere that there can be no equality under segregation — the growing belief that the "separate but equal" theory is a myth. Even the Negroes who argue that the suit was ill-timed are likely to say when talking among themselves that segregation means inequality. There is a growing conviction among Negroes that if one racial group makes all the laws and administers them, holds all the power and administers it, and has all the public money and distributes it, it is too much to expect that group to deal as fairly with the weak, minority, non-participating group as it deals with its own. If the Negro were a part of the policy making body, the situation might be different — but as things are now the Negro has grave doubts that equality in education

There is also a growing conviction that the gulf of inequality is so wide that in order for the Negro schools to be brought up to the standard of the white schools, appropriations for Negro schools must be increased over a long period — beyond the appropriations for the white schools. This would mean that the rate of improvement in white schools would have to be slowed down while the improvements in the Negro schools would have to be speeded up. The conviction exists among Negroes that the School Board will hardly reverse the appropriations in this way and that it would not accelerate the improvement in Negro schools sufficiently to bring them up to the standard of white schools within a relatively short time.

The Negroes who believe this way may be in error, but there is one thing that sustains their belief. The history of segregation is a history of inequality. History seems to be against the idea of "separate but equal."

Supreme Court Rulings

The Supreme Court seems to say as much. It seems to say in both the McLaurin and the Sweatt cases that segregated education could not be equal. It stated that, even if the school at Houston were equal in faculty and facilities, it would not be comparable to the Law School at the University of Texas. The McLaurin Case in the University of Oklahoma seems to say something similar. McLaurin's education in the University of Oklahoma under segregated auspices was not adjudged to be equal education.

I am convinced that the emphasis in the Atlanta suit has been wrongly placed. The emphasis has been placed on that phase of the suit which speaks of the white public schools being opened to Negroes. The emphasis, if rightly located, would be placed upon the reason why the suit was filed as it was. It says clearly that the conviction exists that that is the only way Negro children of Atlanta can have equal educational opportunities. The stress is not on mixed schools, but on the inequality that results from the dual educational systems. The responsibility, therefore, rests upon those in power to provide equal educational opportunities for all of Atlanta's children. Since our laws plainly say that there must be separation, but equality under separation, it should never have been necessary to file suits anywhere in the South to get what the law provides. The law should have been obeyed from the beginning. Now our own laws and, speaking as a minister, our own sins are catching up with us.

Comparative Facts

Honestly, I do not believe that it sheds much light on the subject to talk about the great improvements that have been made in Negro schools in recent years without at the same time pointing out the improvements that have been made in the white schools in a comparable period. The Atlanta public should know the facts comparatively. For, after all, in a dual civilization such as ours, which insists theoretically upon "separate but equal," one does not run a race alone. It is always a biracial race. We should take a second step. After making the comparison and if we find, as we surely will, that the Negro schools are in the main inferior to the white schools, we should find out in dollars and cents how much it will take to equalize the Negro schools.

We should face this problem honestly and courageously. And if a careful, scientific study should reveal that several million dollars are needed to bring the Negro schools up to the whites, we should accept the findings in good faith and with good intentions. It has been estimated that it would cost the State of Georgia anywhere from $100,000,000 to $175,000,000 to equalize the Negro schools. Is the State of Georgia willing to spend $100,000,000 or $175,000,000 to equalize Negro schools? Are the citizens of Georgia willing to be taxed for this purpose? If not, what is the solution? Then a third step should be taken. We should find out how long it will take to bring the Negro schools up to the standard of the white schools. If it will take ten years or twenty-five years or a century, that would suggest one thing. If it would take two, four, or five years that would be different. We could improve Negro schools for a half-century and not make them as good as the white schools. Honesty, democracy, and the Christian religion all require that we face this situation with a determination to give every child in Georgia an equal educational opportunity. The burden of proof is upon the South to prove to the world that it can have two separate but equal school systems.

If we believe in the democratic way of perfecting social change, we should be willing to trust the Federal Courts. This is the machinery which our founding fathers have set up as one of the ways to resolve differences and to adjust grievances. Negroes should not be criticized too severely if they take advantage of the democratic way which our founding fathers have bequeathed to us in the Federal Constitution. The Negro has always relied upon the machinery of the law and the courts to gain his objective, the machinery which the white man has created.

Faith in the South

I have another conviction and that is this: When the Supreme Court of the United States hands down a decision that decision will be respected and obeyed. When the highest court of the land speaks, the South, like the rest of the country, obeys. At this point I have faith in my native South. When the United States Supreme Court said that the University of Texas had to admit Sweatt, the University of Texas admitted him. When the Supreme Court ruled against segregation of McLaurin, the University of Oklahoma obeyed the court and stopped segregating him. When the University of Virginia barred a Negro in July, the Attorney General said that the action of the University would not stand up in court, and it did not. The officials of the University of Virginia accepted the ruling of the court and admitted the Negro. The Attorney General of the State of Tennessee has recently ruled that Negroes can attend the graduate, the law, and the dental schools of the University of Tennessee. The people of Tennessee will accept the Attorney General's decision. When the Day Law was amended in Kentucky, the colleges of Kentucky opened their doors to Negroes. Negroes are in the University of Arkansas by the voluntary act of the University.

When in King George County, Virginia, ten Negro children tried to enroll in the white schools in the fall of 1948 because the King George School officials had not followed a Federal Court order of the year before to equalize schools, the parents of the children took the officials to court. In order to equalize the facilities, the local judge suggested that the white school drop science. The white parents rose up in arms. As a result the white school got back its science and the Negroes got a new high school. When the Supreme Court ruled against the curtains and the partition on the dining cars, the South took down the curtains. When the Supreme Court ruled against disfranchising the Negro, the South permitted the Negro to vote. The South does not flaunt the decisions of the United States Supreme Court. I have faith to believe that we in Georgia will respect the decisions of the Federal Courts.

If the Negroes were resorting to illegal, un-Constitutional, undemocratic means to achieve their rights, they should be greatly condemned. But as long as they trust the peaceful ways of the Federal Courts, we should be calm and poised and wait with patience the decision of that Court. There is no need to be panicky, there is no need for rabble-rousing, this is no time for name calling, and there is no need for fear. For when we get through rabble-rousing, the question will still be: Can there be two separate but equal school systems?

I conclude, as I began. Let us not confuse the issue. The question is not mixed schools; the question is — can there be equality in segregation?

SRC ANNUAL MEETING

Members of the Southern Regional Council are asked to note that the annual membership meeting will take place Wednesday, November 8, in Atlanta. You will be notified by an enclosure with this New South of the time and place of the meeting.

Meanwhile, make your plans to attend and help shape the future of the South's leading interracial organization.

Southern Graduate Schools Come Abreast of Court Decisions

THE DOORS of Southern graduate and professional schools are opening to Negro students. Little more than four months ago, the U. S. Supreme Court ruled that the University of Texas must admit a Negro student to its law school. At the same time, the Court held that the University of Oklahoma must stop treating a Negro student, already admitted, differently from white students. In both cases, the Court repeated the doctrine already advanced by the Gaines decision of 1938, the Sipuel decision of 1948, and others. That doctrine, briefly, is that the state must provide its Negro citizens equal educational opportunity within state boundaries "as soon as it does for applicants of any other group."

The Court went a step farther in the Sweatt and McLaurin cases by defining more completely what it meant by equal. It had already established that equality is not achieved by the state's agreeing to pay a Negro's tuition at an out-of-state school. Nor, it now added, is it achieved by hastily erecting a building, stocking it with a collection of books, staffing it with a few teachers, and labeling it a "separate-but-equal" law school. Nor, it said further, is it even achieved by admitting a Negro to the white graduate school and then requiring him to sit, study, and eat apart from the other students.

Texas had gone to some expense to provide a special law school for Negroes, in order to offset Sweatt's lawsuit. Here is how the Supreme Court measured its inequality: "In terms of number of the faculty, variety of courses and opportunity for specialization, size of the student body, scope of library, availability of law review, and similar activities, the University of Texas Law School is superior." The Court also made comparisons between such qualities as faculty reputation, community standing, traditions and prestige, and opportunity to associate with those who would later make up most of the lawyers, witnesses, jurors, and judges in the state.

It was immediately apparent that Texas — or any other state, for that matter — could hardly provide separate graduate facilities which would meet these standards. Accordingly, the University of Texas without fanfare admitted Sweatt, as well as two other Negroes seeking graduate work in other fields.

Following is a state-by-state summary of developments in the rest of the South:

Oklahoma

The major question of Negro admittance to the University of Oklahoma was settled by the court ruling in the case of Ada Lois Sipuel Fisher in 1948. But the University had subsequently followed a practice of separating Negro students from white in classrooms, libraries, and the cafeteria. One of them, G. W. McLaurin, had filed suit maintaining that he was being discriminated against. The Supreme Court agreed. McLaurin, it declared, having been admitted to a state-supported graduate school, "must receive the same treatment at the hands of the state as students of other races."

"It may be argued," the Court declared, "that (McLaurin) will be in no better position when these restrictions are removed, for he may still be set apart by his fellow students. This we think irrelevant. There is a vast difference — a Constitutional difference — between restrictions imposed by the state . . . and the refusal of individuals to commingle where the state presents no such bar." The University of Oklahoma conformed to the ruling by eliminating differential treatment for the approximately ninety Negro students who were enrolled in its summer school.

Arkansas

Arkansas is the only Southern state in which graduate facilities were opened to Negroes voluntarily, without the necessity of any litigation. When the Supreme Court ruled in the Oklahoma suit in 1948, state officials saw the implications and proceeded to set their house in order. A qualified Negro student was admitted to the law school of the University of Arkansas that year; the following year, another law student was admitted and a Negro girl entered the medical school. In the early stages, the Negro students were partially segregated, but that practice has gradually been eliminated.

Kentucky

Kentucky has likewise taken voluntary action, though a law suit figured early in the changes. In March, 1949, Federal Judge H. Church Ford ruled that the University must admit Negro students to its graduate schools until comparable courses were made available in Negro institutions. A year later, twelve Negroes were pursuing their studies at the University. The General Assembly in 1950 amended the state segregation laws to permit any institution of higher learning, on its own initiative, to admit Negroes to those courses not matched by Kentucky State College for Negroes. The governing boards of the University of Louisville, Berea College, and several other institutions have already exercised their local option by dropping racial bars.

Virginia

When Gregory Swanson, a Negro attorney of Martinsville, made application for the law school of the University of Virginia, the University's Board of Visitors rejected it, on the grounds that state law forbade his entrance to the white institution. The state attorney general had previously expressed his opinion that if Swanson chose to appeal to the Federal Courts, he would be sustained. That proved to be the case. After a brief hearing, in which no serious defense was offered by the state, a three-judge Federal tribunal ordered Swanson's admission. Since that ruling on September 5, a second Negro has been admitted to graduate work at the University, and several others have asked for admission to the Richmond Professional Institute.

North Carolina

Four students of the North Carolina College for Negroes have in the past few weeks suffered an adverse decision in their suit for admission to the state university's law school. The points at issue closely resembled those in the Sweatt case. The Negroes maintained — and produced distinguished witnesses to testify — that the separate law school established for Negroes is in no way equal to that at the University of North Carolina. The Federal Circuit Court in Durham, however, held that the two schools are "substantially equal" — the first such ruling since the Sweatt decision. An early appeal to the U.S. Supreme Court is anticipated.

Delaware

On August 9, the Court of Chancery ruled that Negroes must be admitted to the state university on the same basis as white students. The ruling came in response to ten separate suits against the University and its trustees. Vice-Chancellor Collins J. Seitz, who rendered the opinion, did not discuss segregation as such. He simply compared the facilities at Dover State College (for Negroes) with those at the University, and found them "grossly inferior." Since state laws provide that there must be equal educational facilities for all citizens, Seitz declared, the University had no choice but to admit qualified students without regard to race.

Maryland

A Supreme Court decision opened the law school of the University of Maryland to Negroes as long ago as 1935, but the other schools have remained closed to them. The Maryland Court of Appeals has upheld the right of Miss Esther McCready not to be excluded from the School of Nursing because of her race, and that decision has been unheld by the Supreme Court. Meanwhile, a graduate student in sociology, Parron J. Mitchell, has been admitted. An effort was made by the University to give him his instruction off-campus, but the Baltimore City Court, following the McLaurin case, ordered that he be given the same treatment as other students.

Missouri

Last June, the Board of Curators at the University of Missouri asked the circuit court for a declaratory judgment defining the educational rights of Negroes and defining the duties of state institutions. The court held that the State University and other state colleges must admit Negroes to all courses not matched at Lincoln University (for Negroes). The judge commented, "It seems to me that the Supreme Court of the United States has already written my opinion in this case."

How Charleston Got Negro Policemen

By John A. Harris
Chairman, Charleston Interracial Committee

A LITTLE more than three years ago some members of the Charleston Interracial Committee took notice of the city of Savannah's innovation in making the police force bi-racial. Upon inquiry at the Mayor's office in Savannah in July, 1947, it was reported to us that the addition of qualified Negro personnel was a complete success, and that the police force had taken on five additional Negro officers, bringing the number up to 14. All the anticipated advantages of decline in crime rate, less juvenile delinquency, and improved Negro morale had come to pass. If Savannah could take this great step forward in race relations and crime prevention, why couldn't we?

The leadership of the Negro community was fully aware of the importance and possibility of attaining this change. In October, 1947, our vice-chairman and two members in the course of an informal discussion with Mayor Morrison were told that he personally favored the employment of qualified Negroes on the force, and that if the Negro community would look about and compile a list of suitable candidates and submit them to the Mayor's office with full endorsement of the Negro community, the Mayor was fairly certain that favorable action would result. At the October, 1947, meeting the Interracial Committee voted for the appointment of a sub-committee to consider ways and means of bringing about this improvement in Charleston. . . .

A timely event for our project was the publication by the Southern Regional Council in Atlanta of its excellent study, "Negro Police in Southern Cities." Mr. Thomas P. Jones of the Mayor's office in Savannah also supplied a most valuable and interesting account of that Georgia city's experience in this line. Armed with these two reports . . . members of the committee wrote letters to influential individuals and made talks to several organizations. When Griffenhagen and Associates were engaged to survey and criticize the municipal government, the expert assigned to study the Police Department received from this committee's secretary a letter suggesting that recommendations for Negro personnel might well be in order and enclosing the Savannah and SRC reports. The Griffenhagen report did contain these recommendations, and later served to strengthen the Mayor's hand.

Before our project was really well launched, in January, 1948, the Pan-Hellenic Council, an important group in the Negro community, asked us to join with them, as they also wanted to work for the addition of qualified Negro personnel to the force. It was agreed that the Pan-Hellenic Council and the Veteran's Civic Committee would work with the Interracial Committee for the common purpose. Without the backing of the Negro community, as expressed through important organizations such as these, the Interracial Committee would have gotten nowhere.

Among the white groups who at the start encouraged us with their endorsement, we mention with thanks the Council of Jewish Women, the Woman's Auxiliary of St. Philip's Protestant Episcopal Church, and the Charleston Clericus. . . .

Search for Applicants

The purpose in talking before Negro groups, such as the Ministerial Union and the Postal Employees Association, was not only to enlist their support but to ask their help in finding young men of good character, intelligence and, if possible, military training. It seemed for a long time impossible to find young men interested in trying for jobs that did not exist. Since we wanted to be discreet in seeking applicants, and since the principal of the high school attended by veterans could not or would not cooperate, we were really at a standstill for over a year. Then Mr. Leroy Anderson, instructor in English at the Burke School, hearing of the committee's project . . . began to talk to some of his ablest and most promising students, and through him we obtained the names of several fine young men. These were interviewed and their applications kept on file. Other young men heard of the chance of openings and came to apply. In due time, in March of 1950, the names of nine young men were presented at a meeting of the Negro Citizens' Committee, a supercommittee of representatives from organizations numbering about 10,000 people. After discussion and consideration, the Negro Citizens' Committee endorsed the names and resolved to hand them on to the Mayor with a short letter. Accompanying the letter and the list of candidates was a petition bearing the names of about 200 white citizens. . . . These papers, given to the Mayor's secretary April 13, 1950, received formal acknowledgment May 8. Then in the heat of a political campaign, with words of ill will and race antagonism crackling over the air waves and jumping out of the headlines, there was no further answer; not even any hope hovered in the background.

Pessimism was unfounded, however. On Friday, August 4, the News and Courier ran a factual routine coverage of the Mayor's decision to employ qualified Negroes on the force, four of them. The following Tuesday, City Council unanimously approved of this point in the Mayor's program along with other items. Editorials in morning and evening papers have also been favorable.

We are very glad that after three years of ups and downs, long waits and slow progress, this goal has been achieved. We are proud to have had some part in bringing it about. We believe it is the kind of civic work the Interracial Committee should do, and can do.

Southern Graduate Schools

Louisiana

The Board of Supervisors of Louisiana State University rejected the applications of twelve Negroes, on grounds of race, on July 28, 1950. One of the Negro students, Roy S. Wilson, sought an injunction in Federal District Court to restrain the Board from enforcing its resolution barring Negroes. On October 7, the Court ruled in Wilson's favor and ordered the University to admit him to its law school. According to the first news reports, the decision, by prior agreement, applies only to the law school, leaving the question of other graduate courses still to be resolved.

Florida

The State Supreme Court ruled last summer that out-of-state scholarships do not satisfy Constitutional requirements for equality of opportunity. But, as a substitute, the Court gave its sanction to a compromise plan: Negroes would be enrolled in Florida A. & M. College (for Negroes) and would then be allowed to attend the University of Florida on a segregated basis until equivalent courses are made available at A. & M. The validity of this arrangement has been questioned in the light of the Sweatt and McLaurin decisions.

Other States

As yet, there have been no similar lawsuits in Alabama, Georgia, Mississippi, and South Carolina. Georgia political figures declared recently that they would "go to jail" before obeying any Federal Court order to admit Negroes to the University of Georgia. They were promptly answered by Negro leaders, who promised to "give them an opportunity to do just that." Court action, however, has not yet been taken.

PRO-SEGREGATION GROUPS

IN THE SOUTH

This is a summary report of a continuing field study of the pro-segregation "resistance" organizations in the Southern States, prepared by Paul Anthony.

(See Supplement)

THE RESISTANCE GROUPS OF THE SOUTH

The following is a brief summary of resistance group activity in eleven Southern states. This information was collected during a three-month field study conducted in Louisiana, Mississippi, Alabama, Georgia, Tennessee, and South Carolina. Information on Arkansas, Florida, North Carolina, Texas, and Virginia is drawn from the Southern Regional Council's files and correspondence.

In the majority of these states the groups concerned use the designation "Citizens' Councils." This alteration of the original "White Citizens' Councils" is a significant index to the striving for respectability. To eliminate confusion, this report will refer to all groups that use any form of the Citizens' Council title as "WCC's." Such groups now exist in Louisiana, Texas, Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, South Carolina, Tennessee and Virginia. Fifteen other states have similar organizations which are closely associated with the WCC's, including the Georgia States Rights Council, Inc., and the North Carolina Patriots, Inc. To coordinate the activities of the state groups there is now a "Citizens' Councils of America" with offices in Greenwood, Mississippi.

Resistance groups claim a total membership of more than half a million and, based on the information gathered during this survey, they do have well over three hundred thousand in the eleven states covered. Funds at the disposal of these groups are estimated to be in excess of $2,000,000. Their influence and effectiveness vary widely state by state. But in general it may be said that they represent a considerable and growing power.

Following is a state-by-state summary of the status of the organized resistance movement during January, 1957.

ALABAMA - "The Citizens' Councils of Alabama"

Alabama has a strong WCC movement, headed by Sam Engelhardt, Jr., of Shorter, a planter and state senator. (Currently, Engelhardt is also Chairman of the Citizens' Councils of America.) Other major leaders include Walter C. Givhan of Safford, also a planter and state senator; Alston Keith of Selma, an attorney; Luther Ingalls of Montgomery, an attorney; and, Albert Boutwell of Birmingham, an attorney and state senator.

This group does not have the support of the state administration, but it does have considerable support from the legislature, as indicated by the nature of the WCC leadership. In turn, the WCC is particularly active in politics and can be expected to have a significant influence on future state elections.

The Montgomery bus boycott and the Autherine Lucy incident at the state university have been helpful in recruiting members, though it is difficult for the WCC leadership to maintain the emotional pitch created by these controversies. The membership of some 80,000 is located primarily in the central and southern portions of the state, with the greatest concentration being in the Montgomery area, site of the state association headquarters. There is little membership in the extreme southern portion of the state and no organized activity in the upper third of the state north of Birmingham. Membership fees vary from $3 to $5, of which a minimum of $1 is designated for the state office.

A second organization, the North Alabama Citizens' Council has been expelled from the state association because of its extremist approach. As a result the majority of the members in the original NAWCC have transferred to the state association. Asa ("Ace") Carter, the leader of this expelled faction, has little influence in the state but remains active throughout the South. Carter's participation in the Clinton, Tennessee, disturbances and his association with John Kasper of Washington, D. C., has given new strength to his movement. In addition to his NAWCC Carter has been active with the Alabama KKK.

ARKANSAS - "The Citizens' Councils of Arkansas"

This state has a weak resistance movement, though in the past year the WCC has shown considerable growth under the direction of James D. Johnson of Crossett. Johnson, who leans to emotionalism and advocacy of extreme measures, is a former state senator and an unsuccessful candidate for governor in the May 1956 Democratic primary. He is assisted in the movement by Curt Copeland of Hot Springs, long active in resistance-group activity. (Membership claims run high, but 20,000 is probably the maximum figure.)

The strongest WCC unit in the state is located in Little Rock. There, in December, 1956, the WCC and White America, Inc. merged and adopted the name, Capital Citizens' Council. Robert Ewing Brown, promotion and publicity director of Little Rock stations KTHV and KTHS is president.

FLORIDA

While there are several resistance groups in Florida, none has achieved a position of importance. A WCC movement, largely directed by former Klan leaders, has had little success. A. C. Shuler, a retired Baptist minister, is reported to serve as acting president of the WCC of Florida and M. B. Sherill of Fort Pierce (a co-founder of the 'Pro-Southerners"), serves as secretary. Thus far activity has been limited to the Jacksonville, Tallahassee and Tampa areas. These same areas have experienced some Klan activity during the past year.

A new movement, the National Association for the Protection of White People and Fair Treatment of Negroes, was chartered in Miami in September, 1956, with former Governor Fuller Warren as its attorney. Thus far nothing further has been heard from this group.

Resistance groups have less influence in Florida than in other Southern states. The growing pro-segregation atmosphere is such, however, that this situation could change if the proper resistance leadership presents itself.

GEORGIA - "The States' Rights Council of Georgia, Inc."

The States' Rights Council of Georgia was incorporated on December 27, 1954. On September 23, 1955, at the invitation of Governor Marvin Griffin, 200 of the state's most prominent and influential political and business leaders met and voted to support the movement as "a statewide organization dedicated to the preservation of constitutional government and the maintenance of harmonious race relations."

The Rev. William T. Bodenhamer of Ty Ty, who is a member of the General Assembly, a member of the State Board of Education, a Baptist Minister, and a former school superintendent, was appointed executive secretary and instructed to form local groups in each of the state's 159 counties, with a total membership of at least 150,000. There are no indications that any significant portion of this membership has been secured. However, the downtown Atlanta office of the group is active and distributes an unusually expensive collection of publications. A visiting school teacher who requested such literature was given a generous supply of "teaching materials" which included: a history of the organization; a statement of aims and purposes; a series of expensively reproduced pro-segregation statements by such historical figures as Jefferson and Lincoln; a booklet, "The Supreme Court, The Broken Constitution, and the Shattered Bill of Rights"; "The Cause of the Confederacy"; Georgia Attorney General Eugene Cook's booklet, "The Ugly Truth about the NAACP"; a copy of the third party movement newspaper, "Free Men Speak,"; and a copy of the anti-Semitic "Williams Intelligence Summary."

Since its formation the group has enjoyed the unqualified support of the Governor, the state Attorney General, Senator Herman Talmadge, and most of the other significant political leaders of the state. It has not, however, developed into a grass roots movement.

GEORGIA - "The U. S. Knights of the Ku Klux Klan"

During August 1955, announcements were made that an Atlanta auto-assembly plant worker named Eldon L. Edwards had been appointed Imperial Wizard of a revived Klan movement. Since that time the group has obtained a charter and has begun to hold public meetings of robed but unmasked members.

At its inception, the caliber of leadership and strong public opposition to a Klan movement indicated that this new movement was to be of little significance. This may still be the case. However, during the past several months there has been a conspicuous flurry of public activity by the Klan. Public meetings, some impressive in size, have been held in North Carolina, South Carolina, Georgia, Tennessee, Florida, Alabama, Louisiana, and Texas. These states, with the possible exception of North Carolina, have formal organizations and officers, and most claim to be divisions or associates of the Atlanta group.

A pattern of Klan activity is now developing which gives some indication of adequate leadership and financing. This leadership may come from Edwards, and the funds may come from membership fees (of $10). The Klan effort to recruit mass membership can be a highly lucrative endeavor. However, if the current trend continues, the possibility must be considered that leadership and financing have been injected which are far superior to that represented by the known Atlanta group.

Under any circumstances the development of a new Klan movement, its leadership, and its support comprise that area of resistance group activity which most commands attention in the near future.

LOUISIANA - "The Association of Citizens' Councils of Louisiana"

The Louisiana WCC has its headquarters in Homer, site of the first organized resistance activity in that state. The group has an impressive list of officers headed by the chairman, State Senator William M. Rainach of Summerfield, and the executive secretary, attorney W. M. Shaw. Others are J. Stewart Slack of Shreveport, a member of the L.S.U. Board of Supervisors; Malcolm Dougherty of Baton Rouge, president of the Louisiana Farm Bureau Federation; Dr. Emmett Irvin of New Orleans, past president of the Louisiana Medical Association; C. Carneal Goldman of Waterproff, an attorney and farmer; and Harry P. Gamble, Sr., of New Orleans, president of the American Association for the Preservation of State Government and Racial Integrity.

The WCC claims a membership of 75,000 to 100,000 with over 50,000 members in New Orleans; however, it is doubtful if there are actually more than half that number. The membership fee of $5.00 includes $2.00 for the state office. In addition, considerable wealth is represented among WCC supporters - for example, B.H.J. Balter, a prominent realtor in whose downtown office building the New Orleans WCC has its headquarters.

The group is having a growing influence in the state, especially through the legislature where the WCC state chairman is also chairman of the Joint Segregation Committee of the Legislature. The original legislative program of the WCC has been accomplished and it is now turning its attention to Negro registration. Chairman Rainach has issued this warning: "...We are going through the familiar pattern set by registration of Negroes in the early days of reconstruction. Our forefathers knew well the disastrous consequences of that pattern in the South."

In October, 1956, WCC units began challenging the qualifications of registrants in 13 parishes. Thus far some 10,000 names, mostly Negro, have

(Article 8, Section 1 of the Louisiana Constitution requires that any applicant for registration shall be able to read or understand any clause in the constitutions of Louisiana or of the United States. Any two qualified voters may challenge the qualifications of a registered voter or of a person desiring to register. The WCC has served notice that, through these two approaches and through the support of the Joint Segregation Committee of the Legislature, "the problem of Negro registration will be solved in a legal way".)

Other groups in the state include the Federation for Constitutional Government, (James U. Barr, New Orleans); the Southern Gentlemen, Inc., (J. B. Easterly, Baton Rouge); the Ku Klux Klan (Edgar Taylor, Baton Rouge); the Society for the Preservation of State Government and Racial Integrity (Harry P. Gamble, Sr., New Orleans -- largely inactive); and the Knights of the White Christians (Alvin A. Cobb, New Orleans -- inactive). Free Men Speak, a newspaper devoted largely to third party movements, is published in New Orleans by Kent H. Courtney.

MISSISSIPPI - "The Association of Citizens' Councils of Mississippi"

The Mississippi WCC headquarters are in Greenwood, with "administrative" offices in Jackson. Robert B. Patterson, planter, businessman, and founder of the WCC movement, is executive secretary. W. J. Simmons, a Jackson businessman, is "administrator."

A few counties in the northern part of the state and others along the Gulf do not have WCC units, but this state movement is the strongest in the South and will have considerable influence for years to come. The major opposition to the movement comes from the governor and others of the state Democratic Party, who have refused to lend their official support to the WCC and who took issue with WCC support of the third party movement in the Fall of 1956. This is primarily a fight for political control, however, and does not represent a weakening of the nearly universal white pro-segregation sentiment of the state.

From slightly more than 85,000 members, plus a women's auxiliary, the WCC collects a membership fee of $5.00, of which $1.00 remains in the local unit, $2.00 is sent to the state office, and the remaining $2.00 is used as a subscription to the Citizens' Councils, the official paper.

This state is the fountainhead of the region-wide WCC movement and it is significant that the "temporary national office" of the Citizens' Councils of America is located in Greenwood. The basis of the movement was well expressed in the Mississippi WCC second annual report (1956), which stated: "The best prophet of the future is the past. History proves that the supreme power in the government of men has always been public opinion. Public sentiment is the law!"

This movement has the support of, or is feared by, the majority of the people of Mississippi. In the smaller communities, and generally throughout the Delta, the WCC is almost all-powerful. In these areas, elementary steps in race relations toward achieving the fundamentals of a democratic society have yet to be taken.

NORTH CAROLINA - "The Patriots of North Carolina, Inc."

A charter for the Patriots of North Carolina, Inc., was filed in Raleigh on August 22, 1955 bearing the patriotic date July 4th. It carried the names of 356 men and women from 59 North Carolina counties about whom the Winston Salem Journal and Sentinel commented: "All in all few North Carolina corporations can boast a more impressive list of charter members. For that reason it is unwise to dismiss lightly the Patriots of North Carolina. The group represents something more than a scrubbed-face revival of the Ku Klux Klan in new haberdashery."

The Patriots, estimated to have some 20,000 members, is headed by Dr. W.C. George, a professor at the University of North Carolina Medical School. Its executive secretary, with offices in Greensboro, is A. Allison James, a Winston Salem druggist and one-time head of the U. S. Savings Bond Sales in North Carolina. Among the charter members and officers are three former Speakers of the state House of Representatives, a trustee of the University of North Carolina, several major industrialists, a former U. S. Attorney, a former state commander of the American Legion, and several respected ministers. This caliber of leadership has set the tone of resistance as being restrained but uncompromising in opposing any possible move toward desegregation. The recent acts of the state legislature are some indication of the measure of their success.

Outside elements have recently attempted a Klan revival in the state, especially in the Kannapolis area. They may be successful, since a potential Klan membership exists there.

SOUTH CAROLINA - "The Association of Citizens' Councils of S. C."

The South Carolina WCC is a moderately strong movement with a membership of approximately 30,000. The largely inactive state office is located in Charleston and a businessman of that city, Micah Jenkins served as first chairman of the group. S. Emory Rogers, an attorney in Summerton was first executive secretary and the actual leader of the movement. Through Rogers the group has become thoroughly involved in politics, especially in the 1956 third party movement. Rogers resigned in December, 1956, due to poor health and, thus far, no replacement has been selected. T. D. Keels, an original worker in the WCC movement and former chairman of the Sumter WCC, is current state chairman.

Much of the work which might be done by the WCC is accomplished through the Gressette Committee, a legislative body charged with maintaining segregation in South Carolina. The Chairman, State Senator Lawrence M. Gressette, is a supporter of the WCC movement but very carefully distinguishes its activities from the work of his committee, reportedly because he has political ambitions which require that he, not the WCC, receive the credit for maintaining segregation. This type of potential conflict among pro-segregation leaders represents one of the major threats to the continued effectiveness of the WCC.

A number of South Carolinians who might otherwise support the WCC have failed to do so because of these political activities and conflicts and because of the extreme measures, including economic reprisals, taken by the WCC. Economic pressure and other means of intimidation have lessened, at least temporarily. Political activity and support of the third party movement grew during the Presidential campaign and were probably more evident in the South Carolina WCC than in any other statewide resistance group.

The state has denied a charter to the Klan, but considerable and increasing Klan activity is led by Georgia Klansmen. A second and smaller Klan group is now functioning in competition with the Georgia affiliated group.

TENNESSEE

There are several resistance groups in Tennessee, each active in its own area to the general exclusion of the rest of the state. All, however, claim to be statewide organizations.

In Chattanooga there is the Tennessee Society to Maintain Segregation headed by Arthur A. Canada, long a disruptive influence in organized labor in the state. Canada and his group receive substantial support from Judge Raulston Schoolfield and attorney Charles Coleman, both political figures of Chattanooga.

In Nashville there is the Tennessee Federation for Constitutional Government, headed by Donald Davidson, well known writer and professor of English at Vanderbilt University. This group has a slate of officers, largely business executives, who represent considerable wealth and influence in the area.

In Memphis there is the WCC headed by the Rev. Wayne Cox, pastor of Woodlawn Terrace Baptist Church. This group has gone through several reorganizations and seems to have much difficulty with membership and finances. Also in Memphis, the Tennessee Citizens for Progress has been formed reportedly as a partial revival of the old Crump organization, interested primarily in political power through a pro-segregation platform. All of the leaders of this group have been identified by Memphis newspapers as being "former lieutenants" of the Crump machine.

A second WCC group, with headquarters in Clinton, was chartered in December, 1956, and is led by John Kasper.

The resistance groups of Tennessee, all of which have insignificant membership, have found it difficult to cooperate with each other and are often in open competition for attention, membership, and finances. Therein lies their greatest weakness. All, with the possible exception of the WCC, are primarily interested in politics and one questions whether the activity is a primary end in itself or merely a means to an end.

Klan activity, which is light, has been limited to the Chattanooga and the Georgia-Tennessee border areas.

TEXAS - "The Association of Citizens' Councils of Texas"

Texas has several resistance groups, of which the WCC is the strongest. Dr. B. E. Masters, retired educator and former junior college president, is chairman of the Association, and attorney Ross Carlton of Dallas is chairman of the WCC executive committee.

Thus far the major activity of the group has been that of campaigning for the pro-segregation referendum of the Democratic primary election of July 28, 1956. More recently WCC members have been active in the several disturbances which have occurred where integration has taken place, as in Mansfield. The estimated membership of 25,000 and its activities are located largely in east Texas.

Ku Klux Klan activity has shown an increase during the past year though the Texas Attorney General has publicly stated his opposition to a revival of the Klan movement.

VIRGINIA

Virginia has a number of small, and largely ineffective, resistance groups of which the Defenders of State Sovereignty and Individual Liberty, headed by W. E. Maxey, Jr., of Richmond is probably the strongest. This group claims some 15,000 members in 37 chapters throughout the state; however, the infrequent meetings, spasmodic programs, and lack of publicity indicate little power or effectiveness.

The "Ace" Carter faction of the WCC has been organized under the direction of John Kasper, a book store operator in Washington, D. C., as a unit of the "Seaboard White Citizens' Councils." The group has little membership and less financing but it has been outspoken and has received considerable publicity, especially in Charlottesville. There are no indications of Klan activity, but there are few differences between this WCC faction and the Klan.

These groups cannot claim credit for the considerable change in atmosphere in Virginia during the past year. However, partially because of that change, the state could become a fertile ground for a "respectable" resistance movement.

SUPPLEMENT

The resistance movement is currently characterized by three developments: (1) a substantial decrease in total membership, probably to the lowest level in several years, (2) a continuing growth of Klan activity, and (3) a change in tactics.

Reports indicate substantial losses of membership in South Carolina, Alabama, and Louisiana -- three of the states with the largest WCC memberships. Mississippi, where the Councils are most firmly entrenched, continues an active program, though the group is no longer enjoying the uncontested growth and influence of a year ago. Only in this state does the WCC movement continue to reflect widespread "grass roots" support. The South Carolina group, much involved in state politics, has not announced the appointment of a new executive secretary following the December 1956 resignation of S. Emory Rogers.

In North Carolina, Dr. W. C. George has resigned as executive secretary of the Patriots. The group is still organized, capable of action, and seems to enjoy considerable financial support, though it is probably at its lowest point in membership and activity since it was founded. There has been some Klan activity and the KKK has announced a goal of at least one meeting in every North Carolina county during 1957.

Of the Southern states, Florida has experienced the strongest recent WCC and Klan organizing activity. In February 1957, Robert Patterson, founder and chairman of the Mississippi WCC, helped to organize a state-wide Florida WCC. Homer Barnes, a Tallahassee drug clerk, has become the secretary-treasurer of the new group. This movement is now stronger than at any time in the past, though still with a small membership. John Kasper was very active in the state during 1957 until his former associations with Negroes in New York's Greenwich Village came to light. This and other information were disclosed during a special legislative committee investigation of the NAACP and several of the resistance groups. There has been much Klan activity in Florida. Bill Hendrix, one-time gubernatorial candidate, claims to be "National Adjutant of the Knights of the Ku Klux Klan," presumably the Atlanta headquartered group. W. J. Griffin of Tampa, who disbanded the"Florida KKK" in 1955, has announced official revival of that group.

The strongest Klan group continues to be the U. S. Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, whose Imperial Wizard is Eldon Edwards of Atlanta. Recently, through national magazines and television, Edwards has enjoyed considerable notoriety. The Klan is unquestionably growing, but it is unlikely that it has reached the 100,000 mark estimated by several sources. The group's biggest problem remains that of competition among rival Klans, especially in South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, and Louisiana. This rivalry has caused one Florida Klan official to complain that Klan groups are springing up like "rabbits and rats." The movement has attracted a number of opportunists.

Public acceptance, too, continues to be a problem. In South Carolina, a Klan group (rival of Edwards' Klan) has been refused a charter by Secretary of State B. Frank Thornton. The refusal was based on an opinion of Attorney General T. C. Callison that "public policy" would not be served by chartering the group. In Montgomery, violence has been attributed to the Klan and several Klansmen have been arrested. In Birmingham, Ace

Carter, recently defeated in his bid for police commissioner, is under indictment charged with shooting two men at a Klan meeting. One of the victims has testified that Carter was leader of the group and the argument arose over the handling of funds.

Despite considerable growth and activity, the Klan has not achieved a position of importance. Its growth does indicate current feeling among extremists and their disappointment with the WCC. The Klan's major significance is its ability, with even a small membership, to create disturbances, violence, and fear.

The new tactics of the more established resistance movement are aimed at swaying public opinion -- especially that of the rest of the country. The recent losses of membership probably do not greatly disturb the top WCC leadership. This was not in the strict sense a grass roots movement and new surges of membership may be expected where segregation is threatened. Of more importance is the move (carried on in many instances in conjunction with state governments and/or officials) to sell to the nation the idea that "the South must be allowed to handle this problem." Current successes in Congress by the opposition to civil rights legislation have encouraged these efforts to influence national opinion.

The fact that the resistance movement is losing in membership should not be misinterpreted. This is a disadvantage to them to be sure, but it may very possibly be only a temporary one. The real strength of the pro-segregation movement has not been its mass membership, but its access to the institutions of power and control. By these standards the resistance forces remain strong. State legislation, national opinion, attacks against pro-integration forces, and increased restriction of the ballot, all indicate continuing unity and effectiveness among state WCCs and related groups.

In many of the Southern states the once clearly defined resistance group membership may well have been absorbed into the larger society. At no time since May 1954 has public opinion been more akin to the expressed opinions of the WCC.

Article No. 10—MOTOR FREIGHT IN THE SOUTH

By LLOYD SCHWARTZ
Washington Bureau
Fairchild Publications

UNLIKE the railroads, trucking is purely a 20th Century phenomenon. From a fleet of only 700 vehicles in 1904, the industry which hawls goods to factories and markets by day and night over the nation's highways blossomed to a strength of 1,006,082 trucks in 1920; 3,486,019 in 1930; 4,590,386 in 1940, and 5,725,692 in 1946. For 1947, the total is expected to reach an estimated 6,492,000 motor carriers, or an increase of 13.4 per cent over last year and 33.6 per cent more than the 4,859,244 trucks registered in 1941.

Roughly 20.8 per cent of the motor carrier fleet—or some 1,641,016 trucks—does its work exclusively in the 13 Southern States with which this series is concerned. Because textiles and other non-durables generally move in less-than-carload lots, which frequently get a better break in rates from motor carriers, Southern manufacturers have been relying heavily on transporting their goods over the highways. Recent rail freight increases, pyramided atop one another by the Interstate Commerce Commission, have accelerated the trend.

STATE REGISTRATION.

Figures are helpful in measuring the undeniable importance of trucks to the economic well-being of a highly industrialized South. A significant barometer is truck registration by States. For 1946, Texas led the Southern States in sheer numbers with 369,409 trucks in operation. Next ran Oklahoma with 128,124; North Carolina with 123,748; Georgia with 122,114; Florida, 117,624; Virginia, 116,746; Alabama, 103,837; Tennessee, 101,598; Kentucky, 100,568; Mississippi, 95,536; Arkansas, 94,241; Louisiana, 92,169, and South Carolina, 74,322.

Anything which restricts the efficiency of the motor carrier industry necessarily injures the service it provides for Southern industry. Truckers have plenty of gripes on this score. They are plagued by disorganized and non-uniform State restrictions as to maximum loads, safety requirements, truck proportions, license terms, State and local taxes, etc. Through the American Trucking Association, and its Statewide units, they are constantly beseeching Congress and whoever else will listen to take the lead in eliminating State differences in the interest of a more sensible national transportation policy.

However, what generates most sparks in the now historic tooth-and-nail competition between railroads and truckers? A little background is essential to focus the issue in its proper perspective.

Before 1935, motor carriers were not subject to Federal regulation. Each trucker had his own rate card, which he was free to revise at will. A motor carrier could simply tell a shipper he would haul freight at a certain rate, which was confidential between them.

One result was red-hot competition with the railroad, and the latter soon demanded that motor carriers, like themselves, be placed under Federal regulation. According to the American Trucking Association, most motor carriers had no objection to this proposal, since they were out to see the industry stabilized and destructive competitive practices outlawed.

In 1935, Congress passed the Federal Motor Carrier Act, which put motor carriers under the ICC's jurisdiction. The law required truckers to publish tariffs listing rates and charges. These were always available for public scrutiny.

COMPETITION BEGINS

Then competitive war really began, according to William A. Bresnahan, ATA research director. Railroads began filing numerous rate reductions, in most instances lowering freight rates below truck schedules. Most of the cuts were on less-than-carload merchandise traffic, backbone of the trucking business. Motor carriers immediately were confronted with a choice; ignore the rail rate cuts and risk loss of business or meet the cuts and dissipate revenues. Ever since, they have been wrestling with that problem, cutting rates when forced to do so, holding them when the pressure was lighter.

The railroad cut-rate program reached a climax in September, 1940, when the rails launched what truckers dubbed "the Southern blitzkrieg." With one stroke, they slashed less-than-carload rates on more than 3,500 commodities in Southern territory and ICC let the cuts stand, despite truckers' protests.

There have been many rate increases since that time but, in general, the railroads still are accused by truckers of keeping less-than-carload rate schedules below cost in order to beat motor carriers at their own game. And the squawks are continuing just as heatedly.

"It is not a case of the truck rates being too high but a case of the rail rates being too low," Mr. Bresnahan complains. "They were intended to do just what they are doing — to put the squeeze on highway competitors."

On July 24, 1945, Chairman Clarence F. Lea (R., Cal.), of the House Interstate Commerce Committee invited comment on the national transportation problem.

10 YEARS UNDER ICC

The trucking industry submitted a detailed report, describing the effect of 10 years under ICC regulation. The conclusion: We do have a national transportation policy but we do not have a reasonably consistent body of administrative actions by ICC which implement and carry out the expressed intention of Congressional policy. Truckers argued that ICC still functioned as a regulator and guardian of the railroads, rather than as coordinator of the different modes of transportation. Motor carriers are bitter about being treated as "a stepchild" in transportation.

"ICC's interpretations of its authority disclose a definite pattern of favoring the railroads to the detriment of other types of carriers," the truckers told the House group. "This bears out the repeated charges of various members of Congress that the commission is 'railroad-minded'."

Truckers are convinced the condition can be cured only by reducing the range of ICC's administrative discretion. Carriers say it's essential to amend the statute by making more specific the present standards that are directly related to the basic policy of preserving competition between independently owned and operated types of carriers.

"TRADE BARRIERS"

"Trade barriers" is the term truckers use to describe non-uniform State requirements which, they say, act as a roadblock to more efficient service. Surveys have shown that the most objectionable State restrictions on the movements of commercial trucks are size and weight limitations on the vehicles or their loads, burdensome license and tax requirements, and certain methods of administration.

Because of diverse State size and weight regulations, the Board of Investigation and Research (a governmental investigatory body), found, a motor vehicle allowed to operate in one State may be of such dimensions that its operations in another State would be frustrates motor carriers and, presumably, keeps some of them from expanding to the lengths they might otherwise go.

In addition, motor carriers which transport goods or persons in a number of States are required to register in each State they cross. Multiple State license fees and taxes on interstate carriers pile up costs and impair the economy of motor carrier transportation, truckers claim. Another thing which rubs the industry the wrong way is the port-of-entry device used by some States.

It has been correctly pointed out that all inequalities are not necessarily inequities. Some State size and weight limitations, for example, are admittedly necessary to prevent injury to public roads and to keep highway maintenance costs within reasonable bounds. But genuine inequalities are fostered by State restrictions which obstruct free movement of interstate commerce more than is logical or desirable from the standpoint of proper and economical use of the highways.

CORRECTIVE MEASURES

To correct this situation, which truckers consider completely senseless, the Board of Investigation and Research examining interstate trade barriers advanced a number of recommendations. These still have some way to go before being universally adopted as a public policy.

The board urged that a uniform basis of taxation of commercial vehicles be developed and established in each State to replace the present intricate and unscientific methods of licensing and taxing. Some improvement was noted during the war in the interest of the war effort. But after hostilities ended, many States slumped back into their old ways, intent upon drumming up more revenues for postwar projects.

Under the board's plan, all commercial vehicles, for tax purposes, would be classified either as those largely engaged in interstate transportation or as those predominantly intrastate in operation. Interstate vehicles would be registered in the home State for a nominal fee and be taxed in all States in which they operate on a

Smart Location

Spotting a sprig of mistletoe is a matter for careful judgment. It has to be located in a promising spot, or it fails completely.

So it is with plant location. Smart plant location takes into careful consideration the advantages of the territory as weighed against the needs of the industry. Weighing of these two factors has demonstrated many times that the territory served by the Norfolk and Western is a land filled with "promising spots" for the textile industry.

The Norfolk and Western maintains complete, detailed information about all sections of this land. The railroad's Industrial and Agricultural Department is staffed by men with intimate knowledge of industry needs — men who have been helpful to scores of others seeking smart locations, and who are eager to help you. For confidential advice with your problem, communicate with the Industrial and Agricultural Department, Roanoke, Va.

In Norfolk and Western territory, you will find an abundance of varied raw materials . . . plenty of power and pure water . . . intelligent, native labor . . . favorable tax policies . . . an almost unlimited supply of superior, all-purpose Bituminous coal . . . and Norfolk and Western Precision Transportation to markets of the nation and, through the Port of Norfolk, to the markets of the world.

Liberalization of Truck Size, Weight Limit Rules Sought

LIBERALIZATION of truck size and weight limits is one of the goals projected by motor carriers and their trade associations. Here again the motivation is competition on more even footing with railroads.

In a nutshell, what the motor carriers want is State-by-State authority to haul loads appromixating those handled by railroad boxcars, which carry about 92,600 pounds each when crammed to capacity.

Most of the difficulty centers around the major combination for heavy duty hauling by highway—a full truck plus a full trailer. The trailer cannot move independently. It rests on front, rear and often center wheels as well.

In general, Eastern States do not permit such a full truck-full trailer combination to operate within their borders. The South is slightly better from the truckers' point of view, but still a sorespot.

Consequently, State-wide trucking association are continuing their efforts to convince States that the heavy-duty combination should be legalized and weights authorized which correspond as closely as possible with those afforded regulation-type boxcars.

Only the West has been comparatively liberal with motor carriers who would like to be able to offer shippers full carload service.

Arizona, for example, has a technical truck limit for the combination full truck-full trailer of 80,000 pounds, but a tolerance, or leeway stipulation, really jacks that up to 85,000 pounds the absolute limit.

California is much the same, its truck load limit being 76,800 pounds.

Motor carriers point out that most Southern States either do not allow full trucks and full trailers to operate at all, or else their weight limits are out of line with the only considerations which should apply—namely, public safety and protection of the highways.

Alabama outlaws the full truck-full trailer combination. So does Kentucky, which truckers rate "one of the toughest" of all States in regard to truck size and weight restrictions. Florida permits the heavy duty combination to haul a maximum of 60,000 pounds, while Georgia allows 56,000 pounds.

Motor carriers are first to concede that it is impossible to advocate any flat, uniform figure that would govern truck-trailer loads. They concede that regional highway conditions vary and that these have to be taken into account, Western roads, in general, are straighter, thereby justifying heavy loads. Eastern and Southern roads often are winding, and connecting bridges less secure.

However, truckers insist that many States now barring full truck-full trailer combinations are doing so wastefully, unscientifically and illogically. They blame poitics, usuay prompted by "railroad interests." No State should ban the heavy duty combination altogether, the truckers add, and all should base their weight limits on safety and highway protection considerations and no others.

As a case in point, the motor carriers often point to Texas where until four or five years ago the State used to base weight restrictions on the net weight of the merchandise carried by the truck. Ordinary over-the-road trucks could haul no more than 7,000 pounds, unless they were heading to or from a railroad terminal. In that case, the limit automatically was liberalized to a more satisfactory 14,000 pounds!

Truckers say that before this was repealed, it was obvious railroads had a hand in getting that regulation and keeping it on the State statute books.

intrastate class of vehicles would be taxed on a gross-weight basis and be allowed to make occasional interstate trips under reciprocal arrangements.

Other board recommendations included establishment of a Federal-State highway relations committee to work toward a cooperative solution of problems bound up with State taxes and licenses, size and weight standards, and other questions which arise among the States in regulating motor vehicle operation; authorization by Congress of joint selection and designation by State highway department and the Public Roads Administration of a national system of interstate highways following routes of existing Federal-aid highways and available as an inter-regional network over which interstate carriers could operate under standardized weight and size limitations; and, finally, revision of the frequently existing dual pattern of State regulatory and road building administration, combining the functions under one authority or at least coordinating them.

How the proposal for a national system of interstate highways has been implemented in the postwar era, and how the plan figures in placing markets closer to Southern producers, will be shown in this article.

STATE VARIATIONS

There is plenty of substance to protests over conflicting State restrictions as to motor carriers. For example, Charleston, S. C., has permitted no vehicle wider than 7 feet, 6 inches to operate in the city; the State law, on the other hand, has permitted 8-foot widths. As for pyramiding registration taxes on interstate truck operations, a trucker operating a 5-ton truck without trailer from a point in Alabama to a point in South Carolina has been required to pay a $400 registration tax in Alabama, a $400 registration tax in Georgia, and a $300 registration tax in South Carolina, or a total of $1,100 in the three States.

As a matter of fact, truck operators generally object less to individual State registration-rate schedules than to the piling up of costs through duplicate taxation by some or all States through which they pass. There is no defiend. Border wars and retaliatory measures hardly promote interstate good will. It is not surprising that during the depression of the 1930s they gave rise to the slogan, 'Let's Not Balkanize the United States.'

The Temporary National Economic Committee, studying monopoly, had much to say about the highway trade barrier question in its final report of March 31, 1941. The committee wound up by concluding that testimony before the TNEC had established the serious impairment of interstate trade traceable directly to State and local trade barriers erected ostensibly to augment revenues but actually operating to prevent the free flow of goods.

ECONOMIC BARRIERS

Said the TNEC report: "While isolated cases do not loom large in the national economy, the aggregate effect is detrimental. We therefore recommend that the Congress enact legislation establishing a continuing committee on Federal-State relationships which shall be charged with the responsibility of collecting current information as to trade practices between the States and of devising ways and means of preventing or restraining economic barriers to trade."

Wartime necessarily put a crimp in plans to improve highways in the South, as it did throughout the nation. It should, of course, be recognized that it is not enough just to construct more roads in the South and make those that exist sleek and serviceable. The South does not exist by and for itself. It depends upon some raw materials for its industries from other parts of the United States and it must reach the bountiful markets in the North and West if it is to realize its economic potentialities and thereby prosper.

Even while the war drew to a close, postwar highway blueprints were being shaped for the big push when funds became available. Congress passed, and President Roosevelt signed, the Federal Aid Highway Act of 1944. It provided 500 million dollars for construction of highways in each of the first three postwar years.

In addition to the existing Federal aid system, there was to be the "National System of Interstate Highways," not to exceed 40,000 miles of road, to connect state highways represents a real boon to the South. The map reproduced elsewhere in this article blocks in the outlines of the 37,681-mile network, which is expected to be expanded eventually to the even 40,000 miles. The difference will be distribution roads serving metropolitan centers.

INDIVIDUAL MILEAGE

Quick arithmetic indicates that fully 3.5 per cent of the entire road network will be in the 13 Southern States covered in this series. Individual mileage breakdowns made available by the Public Roads Administration are as follows:

Texas, 2,789 miles; Georgia, 1,141; Florida, 1,140; Tennessee, 1,052; Alabama, 915; Virginia, 911; Oklahoma, 816; North Carolina, 708; South Carolina, 706; Mississippi, 698; Kentucky, 662; Louisiana, 570, and Arkansas, 525.

The new network, most modern of its kind, will supplant the two-lane highway system established under the Federal aid system in 1925.

"That system, which was considered daring for its day, has been almost completed and has been found to be inadequate," Commissioner MacDonald says.

The new super-network will take time to become a reality but it definitely will be worth it, motor carriers and Southern industry believe.

How do motor trucks figure in the South's economy? Of what significance are they?

Latest statistics indicate that almost 5,000 trucks haul textiles, about 3,750 handling apparel of all kinds. Take Kentucky. All of the State's cotton moves from farms to gins by truck. The same holds true for its corn, milk, sorghum, soy beans, peaches and other commodities.

How about New Mexico, which isn't in the South as it is defined for these articles? Trucks haul 8,777,000 pounds of wool, or 100 per cent of the State's production, to market. And 96.2 per cent of the cotton — 95,661 bales — moves that way, too.

Some truckers in the South credit Horton Motor Lines and Barnwell Bros. Transportation Co., Burlington, S. C., both adjuncts of the Associated Transport system, with being first in the region to truck textiles on long trips. Associated operates about 250 trucks plus 1,030 semi-tractors, 1,461 trailers and about 50 cars. Before 1931, it is said, independent truckers engaged in brief hauls from textile mills to nearby Southern communities.

Then Horton and Barnwell inaugurated its long-distance service for textiles from the South to Eastern destinations, including New York. Associated Transport and its affiliates are now believed to haul more textiles, by volume, than any other trucker.

BIG TRUCK EXPANSION

The Johnson Motor Lines, Charlotte, N. C., is another of the major motor carriers transporting textile products. Recently the firm made known its plans for a $250,000 expansion. J. D. Kluttz, vice-president and general manager, said the program provides for purchase of additional equipment, including rolling stock, construction of terminal facilities and improvements in existing freight handling equipment.

With a weekly payroll topping $14,000, Johnson Motor Lines is franchised by ICC to move textiles and machinery Northward and general merchandise Southward. Operating revenues now are running at an annual rate of more than $2,500,000, compared with $400,000 for the system about one and a half years ago when the franchise was purchased.

According to Mr. Kluttz, the carrier moves a weekly average volume of 2 million pounds of textiles from Carolina mills to Eastern markets. Johnson Lines now operates 169 motor units over 450,000 route miles per month between Carolina points and Baltimore, Philadelphia, Jersey City, Newark, N. J., New York City, and New England points.

Akers Motor Lines, Inc., based in Gastonia, N. C., operates 400 pieces of equipment daily and expects to do business of between 3 and 3.5 million dollars in 1947. About half of the volume is transportation of textiles, including cotton yarns, finished and unfinished cotton piece goods, synthetic yarns and piece goods.

There is plenty of substance to protests over conflicting State restrictions as to motor carriers. For example, Charleston, S. C., has permitted no vehicle wider than 7 feet, 6 inches to operate in the city; the State law, on the other hand, has permitted 8-foot widths. As for pyramiding registration taxes on interstate truck operations, a trucker operating a 5-ton truck without trailer from a point in Alabama to a point in South Carolina has been required to pay a $400 registration tax in Alabama, a $400 registration tax in Georgia, and a $300 registration tax in South Carolina, or a total of $1,100 in the three States.

As a matter of fact, truck operators generally object less to individual State registration-rate schedules than to the piling up of costs through duplicate taxation by some or all States through which they pass. There is no definite indication that local registration taxes imposed by counties or incorporated places has caused serious impediment to interstate commerce.

"The tendency of State and locally-imposed restrictions upon the use of highways to create internal dissension and foster sectionalism must not be disregarded," the Board of Investigation and Research advised Congress with an eye to the South.

"These are not the only forces that promote sectionalism, but their operation certainly contributes considerably toward that

Motor Competition Has Improved Rail Service

Railroad-motor carrier competition has left its mark in improved service for rail merchandise traffic. Truckers are first to admit that, under this impetus, railroads have scored "creditable progress."

The Southern Pacific Railroad offers an example. Its No. 70, an overnight merchandiser running between San Francisco and Los Angeles, now leaves the Coast ahead of the crack Sunset Limited and makes the 470-mile run to Los Angeles in only 11 hours and 7 minutes, or 13 minutes better than the fastest overnight passenger train connecting the two California cities.

Truckers contend that railroads functioned many years without improving their freight service appreciably, adding:

"That they did not progress, until they were confronted by an alert and progressive competitor, clearly reflects the complacency and stagnation of monopoly."

At any rate, railroads have improved their services to shippers, especially those interested in less-than-carload freight. That's one fruit of highway-rail rivalry.

just to construct more roads in the South and make those that exist sleek and serviceable. The South does not exist by and for itself. It depends upon some raw materials for its industries from other parts of the United States and it must reach the bountiful markets in the North and West if it is to realize its economic potentialities and thereby prosper.

Even while the war drew to a close, postwar highway blueprints were being shaped for the big push when funds became available. Congress passed, and President Roosevelt signed, the Federal Aid Highway Act of 1944. It provided 500 million dollars for construction of highways in each of the first three postwar years.

In addition to the existing Federal aid system, there was to be the "National System of Interstate Highways," not to exceed 40,000 miles of road, to connect metropolitan areas, cities, and industrial areas, and to serve the national defense, and also a system of secondary and feeder roads. Federal funds were to represent 50 per cent of construction costs, but with provision for larger contributions in special instances.

INTERSTATE HIGHWAYS

On Aug. 2, 1947, the Federal Works Agency approved routes for the national system of interstate highways as part of the estimated 3-billion-dollar postwar program. The system is to consist of 37,681 miles of north-south, east-west and diagonal routes. The linked express roads eventually will serve 42 State capitals and 182 of the 199 cities having a population of 50,000 or more. Wherever traffic is more than 800 vehicles an hour at peak hours, there will be four-lane, divided highways.

The super-network of interstate highway will leave its mark on the South. The plan, in part, calls for the following new roads serving that area and connecting it with other sections of the country:

North and South: Bellingham, Wash., down the coast to San Diego; Sweetgrass, Mont., along the Rockies through Salt Lake City to Nogales, Ariz.; Billings, Mont., through Cheyenne, Denver and Albuquerque to El Paso, Tex.; Sioux Falls, S. D., through Omaha, Kansas City, Wichita, Oklahoma City and Dallas to Houston and Galveston.

The east-west trunk line will cross through Memphis, Oklahoma City and Albuquerque to Los Angeles; New Orleans, through Houston, San Antonio, El Paso, Tucson and Phoenix to San Diego.

In some cases, construction of the roads has gotten under way but materials remain short and costs often are prohibitive. Public Roads Commissioner Thomas H. MacDonald believes the project will require 15 to 20 years to complete, although the job may be done sooner.

The plan calls for the highway networks to bypass smaller cities and lead as nearly as feasible into and through metropolitan centers. Trans-city road sections are to be depressed or elevated to provide city travel at 35 to 45 miles an hour without traffic signal stops or cross-traffic interference.

An amazing variety of apparel and textile items are now being produced profitably... in Oklahoma. Garment factories throughout the state prove it every day, as they operate with intelligent, native-white labor, in soot-free factories and year-round mild climate.

In Oklahoma, too, you distribute from the center of the 18 BILLION dollar Southwestern market and take advantage of advantageous freight rates to the west coast.

that the State Governments will have the means to discharge their constitutional functions. They should not be heard pleading that they are stepping aside for the Federal Government — because they do not have the money to do their job."

Some Southern States have intensified efforts to improve transportation so that their territory will be made more attractive and more efficient for new producers who may wish to build there.

KENTUCKY'S EFFORTS

Postwar Advisory Planning Commision of Kentucky represents such an effort. The group's transportation committee exhaustively studied motor truck transportation. It noted that all industrial development and new construction was designed to meet the needs of trucking facilities. Many older manufacturing plants with only railroad sidings have been reconditioned with platform space, yards and loading equipment for truck transport in Kentucky.

Kentucky Highway Department surveys found that the State has 57,000 miles of roads, 10,000 miles of which were in the State highway system and 47,000 miles in the county road system. Only 2,100 miles have high-type surfacing. Some 27,000 miles have lower-type surfacing, including 3,300 miles of traffic-bound macadam, with the rest mainly stone or gravel. About 28,000 miles are unsurfaced, unimproved earth roads which require plenty of work before becoming satisfactory for heavy-the nation's poorest.

The Kentucky Postwar Committee emphasized that, because 65.9 per cent of the State's communities were not served directly by railroads, the commonwealth should assure the best facilities in highways and load limits, rather than the nation's poortest.

"It is the duty of Kentuckians to translate into action a program for the betterment of our highway transportation in order to elevate the State's position from a substandard classification to a position of which we may all be proud," the report said. "Additional revenue for highway consumption and correspondingly increased gasoline tax revenues. Similarly, a raising of weight limits on trucks will yield greatly increased revenues from license fees as well as increased gasoline tax revenue."

New National System of Interstate Highways

THE SOLUTION

Key, then, to improving trucking service for Southern industry rests with emphasizing extension

This is the sort of beneficent assistance the motor truck industry wants and needs if it is to translate its services and facilities into prosperity for an expanding South: Better roads, fair taxes, unified State laws on loads, sizes and weights, and a more enlightened national transportation policy—these are some of the planks on which the industry stands.

Truckers say they are growing with the South. The railroads are geared to the same tempo. This adds up to more accessible markets in a shorter time for Southern manufactures—a significant prerequisite for stepped-up industrialization.

"Additional revenue for highway construction required to carry out this program can best be obtained through the more complete usage of existing highways, thereby resulting in greater gasoline consumption and correspondingly increased gasoline tax revenues. Similarly, a raising of weight limits on trucks will yield greatly increased revenues from license fees as well as increased gasoline tax revenue."

THE SOLUTION

Key, then, to improving trucking service for Southern industry rests with emphasizing extension and improvement of highways coupled with encouraging use of all types of trucking, as Kentucky has concluded. Kentucky found that much of its industrial development has been hampered or retarded by lack of adequate transportation, resulting from insufficient extension of suitable highways and restrictive trade barriers which virtually eliminated the State from interstate highway commerce.

The solution, which may be a pattern for all of the South:

1. Orderly and uninterrupted improvement and extension of through highways and the farm-to-market road system, and—

2. Enactment of State truck legislation which will permit safe operation of trucks carrying loads for which the highways they traverse have been engineered.

This is the sort of beneficent assistance the motor truck industry wants and needs if it is to translate its services and facilities into prosperity for an expanding South: Better roads, fair taxes, unified State laws on loads, sizes and weights, and a more enlightened national transportation policy—these are some of the planks on which the industry stands.

Truckers say they are growing with the South. The railroads are geared to the same tempo. This adds up to more accessible markets in a shorter time for Southern manufactures—a significant prerequisite for stepped-up industrialization.

"I certainly do not advocate a return to the low wage levels of the depression, nor do I feel that wool prices should return to the low levels of the early 1930s. However, there is palpable injustice in first encouraging incrased costs and then viewing the resultant price increases of manufactured consumer goods with an alarm which overlooks the very facts that have caused them."

Through our connections the HPT&D Railroad gives this industrial part of North Carolina competitive trunk line advantages. Concentrated into a small area as an efficient "Short Line" and transporting freight only, HPT&D serves, helpfully and courteously.

HPT&D offers regular schedules to all parts of the United States through the Winston-Salem Southbound, Norfolk and Western, Atlantic Coast Line, and Norfolk Southern railroads and their many connections.

Many industries are located along our tracks. Much new development is underway.

High Point and Thomasville are at the heart of an industrial circle, one hundred miles in diameter, which exceeds the combination of similar areas of equal extent around Richmond, Virginia, and Atlanta, Georgia, in annual value of manufactured products and annual wages paid.

Even "truck-minded" producers and distributors need to be "rail-minded" and be assured of the security of uninterrupted rail transportation.

IN A NUTSHELL

The pending Registration Bill would erase the more than a million voters now registered and make registration so arduous that we would go back to the time when only a small minority of our people participated in elections. The smaller the number of voters, the easier it is for a controlled minority to hold the balance of power. The Bill:

1) Abolishes permanent registration. You would have to re-register every two years.

2) Requires a registration fee of $1. This is the old Poll Tax restored under a new name.

3) Puts such authority into the hands of the registering boards that in effect their judgment alone determines whether you or I would be considered qualified to vote, either morally or intellectually.

It is claimed that the Bill is needed to purge the registration lists. But actually the present law does this accurately, efficiently, and with a minimum of work. What we need is enforcement.

ANALYSIS OF REGISTRATION BILL (HOUSE BILL 2)*

Introduced by Speaker Hand and Mr. Twitty of Mitchell, Mr. Smith of Emanuel, and others. Was drafted chiefly by former State Senator A. S. Weaver, who was employed as a special assistant Attorney-General for the purpose.

H. B. 2 would abolish the permanent registration system throughout the State and instead require each voter to re-register in 1949, 1952, and every even year thereafter. The announced purpose of this is to keep the lists purged, but present law requires that a voter who has not voted for two years shall be taken off the voters' list, after notice, if he does not re-apply. This keeps the list purged without requiring from dutiful citizens the inconvenience and expense of re-registering.

H. B. 2 would require the applicant to pay a registration fee of $1 (not refundable) every time he applies for re-registration. This money goes into a special county fund usable only for registration costs; if it is insufficient the county treasury must cover the deficit, and any surplus in the special fund must be applied to election expense. This is simply a revival of the poll tax in a worse form, without the exemptions for old people and the blind that were allowed under the poll tax.

H. B. 2 would wipe off the books the more than a million voters now registered and make registration so arduous that we would go back to the time when only a small minority of our people participated in elections. The smaller the number of voters, the easier it is for a controlled minority to hold the balance of power.

Under H. B. 2, in addition to signing a voter's oath similar to the present one, every applicant must:

(1) state whether he has ever been arrested or indicted, or accused or convicted of "any criminal offense", and if so, name the offense, the court, and the approximate date. This would require listing even minor traffic violations.

(2) either attempt to read and write selected paragraphs of the Georgia or U. S. Constitution (or interpret the same if unable to read due solely to physical disability), or submit to an oral examination by the registrars on his moral character and understanding of the duties of citizenship. The registration official must report on the registration card whether the applicant could (a) read the paragraph selected, and if so whether "intelligibly" or "unintelligibly;" (b) write the paragraph selected, and if so whether "legibly" or "illegibly"; and (c) if applicant claims inability to read due solely to physical infirmity, whether he could explain the selected paragraph "satisfactorily." This opens the way wide to the misuse of judgment by registering officials. If the applicant fails or chooses not to take the reading-and-writing test, he can qualify only by appearing before the registrars when notified to do so (notice must be given 1 to 10 days before the hearing, by service in the same manner as civil process or by handing the applicant notice when he applies, or the registrars may hold the hearing at the time of application and without notice if then in session) and passing an oral examination. The questions asked him must be from a list prepared by a "Central Registration Authority" (one citizen from each Congressional district appointed by the Governor for an indefinite term, meeting biennially and with their expenses and compensation of $10 each a day paid by the State), and a record must be kept in each case of the questions and answers.

Under H. B. 2 applications to register can be made only at the office of the tax collector or tax commissioner, so that present law allowing him to travel to rural districts to register voters is repealed.

Under H. B. 2 the registrars must close the voters' lists for the general election 6 months before it is held (present law is 4 except in Fulton), and thereafter until the lists are prepared they may refuse to register anybody except on one day a week. On April 20 of each general election year, they must begin making the lists and by August 20 must file them with the superior court clerk. No one whose name is not on the lists could vote in the succeeding general election or in any primary to nominate candidates to be voted on at that general election. No provision is made for county primaries held during a general election year before the lists are prepared. For special elections held at any time, the latest general election lists plus supplemental lists (including voters registering up to 5 days after the call of such election, and filed within 10 days after such call) would be used. The registrars would be permitted, however, to purge all lists at any time on their own motion or on contest by any person himself registered, with proper notice to the questioned voter.

The registrars would be 3 in number appointed biennially by the superior court judge for each county, as at present; but apparently H. B. 2 would require new appointments, for it says "the first appointments hereunder" shall be for the three years ending with 1951. The present requirement that not all shall be "from any one political interest or party" is omitted from H. B. 2, but the present provision that any or all may be removed by the judge "at any time in his discretion, with or without cause" is re-enacted. The judge would fix the registrars' compensation (present law gives this power to the county governing authority but fixes a $2 per day minimum) and the registrars themselves would set their own expense budget. The tax collector or tax commissioner would be a deputy to the registrars, and they could name any of his deputies theirs or appoint additional deputies as they desired.

Under H. B. 2 the registrars must reject an application (1) if the applicant fails to pay the registration fee, (2) if the applicant admits conviction of crime which under the Georgia Constitution disfranchises him, and (3) if the applicant fails to give information sought from him by a direct question from any registrar or deputy, or gives false information. All blanks on the registration card would be filled in by the registering official and no applicant permitted to write on it except when he signed the oath or made his mark thereto. Registrars who disqualified an applicant in his absence would have to mail him a notice the same day, and their decision would stand unless appealed within 10 days to the superior court and until reversed by that court. Registrars' meetings would have to be public but they could examine any applicant apart from other applicants.

Education Bill's Test Will Be Its Financing

UNANIMOUS PASSAGE in the House of Representatives of Georgia's Minimum Foundation program for education is a reflection of the general belief among people of this state that we must provide better schooling for our children.

Whatever it takes in the way of more adequate compensation for teachers and better physical equipment, Georgians are eager to supply. Whether they will be as ready to pay the necessary taxes remains to be determined.

Details of the Minimum Foundation program are being taken largely on faith, even by members of the General Assembly. Its formulas for fixing teachers' pay and allotment of funds to local school systems are complex. But the plan has endorsement of the Georgia Education Association, and no one wants to block what educators think is necessary and desirable.

The Senate can be expected to join the House in approving this measure. The test as to whether our schools really will benefit by its provisions will come on the question of financing the Minimum Foundation program. A sound tax program is just as much a part of the need as the bill which has now passed the House of Representatives.

A Tell-Tale 'Joker' in Re-Registration Bill

THERE IS one provision in the re-registration bill, now pending in the state Senate, about which its advocates have said little or nothing but which ought to give much concern to Georgians who value their ballot rights and who abhor a political dicta' ship. We refer to that peculiar provision which would require every qualified voter to re-register in the years in which an election for governor is held.

The bill as first introduced in the House [illegible] AT [illegible] while it could be so administered, also offers full opportunity for dishonest and unfair tests, and therefore could bring about a prostitution of our electoral system. Certainly, those who advocate this measure in good faith would do their cause as well as democracy a real service by amending the provision which puts re-registration in governor-election years. That device is all too much for a fair-minded citizenry to stomach.

Research Once Again Pays Off in the South

OUT OF SPARTANBURG has come news of high import to the cotton belt. The hull of the cottonseed, the Associated Press reports, is destined to overcome its hitherto lowly stature and become a raw material of worth to industry. Its potential value lies in a chemical it contains which is used in the manufacture of nylon and in petroleum refining. The mechanical extraction of the chemical has been perfected through a process evolved by Dr. Henry Edwin Shiver, a chemistry professor at Converse College.

Of greater significance is the fact that rights for the patented extraction process have been acquired by a major commercial manufacturer, and already existing machinery is being adapted for the extraction. Thus commercial utilization would seem assured.

Scarcely half a century ago cottonseed and hulls were considered worthless and were burned as trash. Since then the extraction of oil has created a growing industry, and hulls now are being used as stock feed roughage.

The wonders of science never cease. In this instance we have one more example of how research can help enrich the South. We discover that we have by no means exhausted the potential wealth which can come from our soil and that our quest for it—through the channels of research—can repay us in handsome dividends.

Georgia Loses Heavily In Death of C. B. Allen

GEORGIA HAS suffered a heavy loss in the [illegible]

or nothing but which ought to give much concern to Georgians who value their ballot rights and who abhor a political dicta' ship. We refer to that peculiar provision which would require every qualified voter to re-register in the years in which an election for governor is held.

The bill as first introduced in the House called for biennial re-registrations. An amendment increased the period to four years, beginning in 1949. This timetable, if consistently followed, would mean that there would be a re-registration in 1949, again in 1953, and so on for every ensuing fourth year. Curiously enough, however, the bill stipulates that the first re-registration shall hold for five years instead of four, so that the second re-registration would come in 1954 when a governor is to be elected. From then on the re-registration would coincide with gubernatorial election years.

This means that on January 1 of 1954, 1958, 1962, etc.—the years in which the people of Georgia elect a governor there will be zero registration. Then there will be only the months of January, February, March, and April in which all the people who are to vote on the most important office in our state must register. This makes it certain that in the years in which a governor is elected, registration will be at its lowest possible level.

What is the motive, the design, the purpose behind this calculated arrangement?

An answer may be found by considering first, the probable effect of the proposed act on the voters' lists. One effect, undoubtedly, would be to cut down the number of voters, irrespective of race or color. The franchise certificate of every citizen now registered would be wiped out and to regain it he would be required to appear before a board of registrars. If for any reason, or on any pretext, the registrars decided against him his chance of appeal would be fenced about with all manner of difficulties and uncertainties; and if he failed to surmount them he would be disqualified for the next four years at least.

In populous counties like Fulton, where there are now more than 130,000 registered voters, the mere mechanics of re-registering them would be an enormous task. And since, under the proposed new law, re-registration must be completed within the first four months of the year—or approximately 100 working days—it is certain that many voters would be left in the lurch for lack of time. It is an axiom of democracy that citizens should be encouraged to use their elective franchise and to do ballot duty. The bill now awaiting action by the Georgia Senate would have precisely the opposite effect. By reducing the number of the state's qualified voters —some authorities estimate by more than one-half—it would tend to put the balance of power in the hands of a minority that would be most susceptible to control by an entrenched political machine.

Therefore, we submit, the timing of the re-registration schedule so that it will always coincide with a governor-election year is a grave peril to free and honest government in our commonwealth. For this crafty arrangement means that whenever a state administration is to be chosen the entire list of voters will be canceled and the conditions renewed for political purging if not padding.

As we said in an editorial last Sunday, The Journal believes in a basic educational test for voting, provided it be administered with honesty and fairness. But the pending bill, adusted the potential wealth which can come from our soil and that our quest for it—through the channels of research—can repay us in handsome dividends.

Georgia Loses Heavily In Death of C. B. Allen

GEORGIA HAS suffered a heavy loss in the death of Columbus B. Allen. For more than 50 years his editorial voice through the Moultrie Observer has been a sane, wise and brave counselor to the people of his community and his state.

He went to Moultrie from a nearby farm in 1896 and has seen the village with a population of only a few hundred grow into a bustling, busy city which is the hub of one of America's finest agricultural regions. Through those years he and his newspaper have been not only the chronicler of the growth and progress but a very inspiration to it.

The Journal knows of no citizen who has contributed more to his community and his state with keen prevision, unflagging confidence and practice of the highest civic virtues. It is fair to assume, certainly devoutly to be hoped, that the Observer will be for many years the fine newspaper which it has been under the direction of its late editor.

These Are Bald Facts And We Need to Face Them

A VERY BALD ATTEMPT to pass legislation reducing the price of haircuts for persons "having less than a full head of hair" has been defeated in the state of Washington's legislature. One of that state's representatives proposed as an amendment to a bill regulating barbering that "fees charged for haircutting for persons having less than a full head of hair shall be reduced in proportion to the quantity of hair the customer possesses." The amendment was successfully opposed on the grounds that barbers had to look harder when people have less hair.

Also defeated was a substitute amendment which would charge people with less hair more for shaves because they "would have a longer forehead."

Now these are matters which should not be dismissed too lightly. They are complex matters for a complex day, far removed from the era when we could whistle truthfully "Shave and a haircut—two bits!" Personally, we feel inclined in favor of both of the amendments proposed. It's only logical to assume that what loss the barbers might incur in cutting the hair of the bald and semi-bald would be balanced by the larger fees they could obtain for shaving these same persons. In the final analysis, nobody would actually be the loser.

Seriously speaking, if, in these rugged days in which we find ourselves, legislators can still turn aside for a moment from the weighty problems which harass them to consider such matters as these, we have hopes for our nation and for the world. Such a saving grace a sense of humor can be! And at no time have we been in greater need of it.

A LIGHT UNTO OUR PATH

A Transparent Hoax On Our Ballot Rights

IT WAS REMARKED by one William Shakespeare, who knew a thing or two about language and also about politicians, that "They who dally nicely with words will quickly make them wanton." Authors of the Georgia Senate's substitute for House Bill 2, generally known as the re-registration bill, have carried that practice so far as to make certain words in the proposed measure ridiculously wanton and wantonly ridiculous. Consider Section 4 of the substitute, which reads as follows:

"The registration provided for in this act shall be permanent, but electors shall lose their place on the list unless they maintain their status as qualified voters by renewing their registration periodically as herein provided. The first period shall comprehend the years 1949, 1950, 1951, 1952 and 1953, and the periods thereafter shall be quadrennial periods beginning with the year 1954."

Registration shall be "permanent." But the citizen must re-register every four years after 1953 or else be disqualified to vote. That is to say, you will not be deprived of your present right of permanent registration but you will not be permitted to retain it. Two plus two shall equal four; however, two plus two shall equal only one.

Why have the sponsors of the Senate substitute bill thus dallied and trifled with words? The motive is quite transparent. The bill as it came from the House declared patly, "There shall be no permanent registration"—an avowal which brought forth a flaming public remonstrance. Georgia's qualified voters who have been free to cast their ballots without being put to the trouble of registering over again for every election of a governor, naturally resented the threatened loss of that right. So the Senate revisionists cast about for some means of evading public protest. But the hoax to which they have resorted is so absurd as really to insult public intelligence. In the name of the simplest common sense and merest honesty, how can registration be permanent if "electors shall lose their place on the list" unless they re-register every fourth year?

The Senate substitute also retains the "joker" in the House bill which so fixes the re-registration timetable that the entire voters' list will be wiped out and reduced to zero whenever an election for governor, the state's most important office, is to be held. Commenting on that device for serving an entrenched political machine, The Journal has said editorially, "That is all too much for a fair-minded citizenry to stomach." Now comes an added affront to such a citizenry—the hollow pretense that a registration which is to be blotted out at four-year intervals is permanent.

TO ALL TAX COLLECTORS AND TAX COMMISSIONERS: TO ALL ORDINARIES:

Gentlemen:

I am attaching hereto a mimeographed copy of a letter I wrote Judge Arthur S. Oldham of Athens, Georgia in which I have given him my personal views on questions he ~~requested me to~~ answer concerning the application of the new ~~Registration Act~~ H. B. No. 2 and the Referendum Resolution H. R. No. 40-208B.

I am furnishing you with a copy of this letter as a matter of information which I hope will be helpful to you and your County Attorney in construing the meaning of two Acts of the Legislature as they relate to certain questions presented by Judge Oldham.

You will please understand that my views in this letter are of a personal nature and cannot be accepted as official or binding on anyone. I felt compelled to release my unofficial views on these points because of unprecedented demands made from county officials throughout the State.

Of course, your County Attorney is your primary advisor on such matters as the subject of this letter. But I felt that the need for uniformity in the application of our Registration and Voting Laws would justify whatever contribution I might be able to make.

Assuring you of my desire to assist you when called upon, I am

Sincerely yours,

Eugene Cook

The Attorney General.

EUGENE COOK
ATTORNEY GENERAL

March 4, 1949.

Honorable Arthur S. Oldham
Clarke County Court House
Athens, Georgia

Dear Judge Oldham:

I am in receipt of your letter of February 25, 1949 in which you request information as to whether or not the old list of voters will be used in the forthcoming election of April 5, 1949, and, if so, what will be the last day for voters to qualify in order to be eligible to vote in that election.

I would like to preface my remarks by saying that there is absolutely no legal precedent to follow in interpreting the registration law nor the tax referendum resolution inasmuch as they are themselves the new law. I am trying to work out the logical solution to the problems which confront us due to the complexity of the registration system.

Section 5 of H. B. No. 2 (Registration Act) reads as follows:

> "At any special election, held before the first list under the terms of this Act shall have been prepared and filed, the general election list of qualified voters of the year 1948, in conjunction with a supplemental list prepared in accordance with the special election provisions hereafter set forth shall be used. In the same manner the last general election list of qualified voters shall be used for any special election occurring after said list is prepared but before the preparation of a new general election list. Nothing in this section shall be construed so as to prevent the Registrars from purging said old list and the supplemental list and remove therefrom those persons not entitled to vote."

The election which is to be held on April 5, 1949 is a special election. Therefore, it would seem that it would come under the provisions of the new law which provides for the use of the general election list of 1948 in conjunction with a supplemental list prepared in accordance with the special election provisions set forth in H. B. No. 2.

The only section dealing with the supplemental list which is spoken of in Section 5 is Section 31 which reads as follows:

"Any person who has registered for a general election shall, if otherwise qualified to vote at any special election before the next general election, be listed and entitled to vote at such special election. Five days after the call of said special election, the Registrars shall cease taking applications from persons desiring to register and qualify to vote therein, and proceed to examine into the qualifications of the applicants in the same manner as herein provided with reference to applicants desiring to qualify to vote in general elections. The Registrars shall then prepare a supplemental list showing the names of additional voters who are entitled to vote at such special election, and any person whose name appears on said list may vote at such special election, but the Registrars shall purge said list before filing it of all persons who will not be qualified to vote in the same manner as provided with reference to the list for the general election. The list so prepared and arranged alphabetically and divided according to districts and wards as in the case of general election lists shall be filed in the office of the Clerk of the Superior Court within ten days after the call of said special election. It shall be the duty of the Registrars upon the call of a special election to purge the list of registered voters prepared for the last general election of any names subsequently disqualified for any reason and to furnish the managers of such special election two lists, one composed of the names of voters entitled to vote by reason of their registration and qualification for the last general election, and the other made up of the names of those entitled to vote by reason of their subsequent registration as hereinbefore provided, and no one shall be entitled to vote in said special election unless his name is on one of the lists furnished by the Registrars."

You will notice that this section provides that a supplemental list shall be prepared and shall be used for special elections in addition to the general election list. Applying this to the April 5th election, this would mean that the 1948 general election list plus the supplemental list prepared for a special election would be used on that date.

Section 31 provides that five days after the call of a special election, the Registrars shall cease taking applications from persons desiring to register and qualify to vote therein. This would seem to indicate that after the Ordinary has called the special election which is to be held on April 5, 1949, that no one could apply to register and qualify after the fifth day subsequent to the call.

This would lead one to believe that each county in the State would possibly have a different date after which no one could qualify to vote in said election, inasmuch as the Ordinary of each county could pick a different day to issue the call for special election.

H. R. No. 40-208B (Tax Referendum) provides in Section 3 as follows:

> "At such special election there shall be submitted to the voters of the county who are qualified to vote for members of the General Assembly as of February 1, 1949, the question . . . . ."

Taken alone, this sentence would seem to mean that only those people who were qualified on that specific date (February 1, 1949) to vote for members of the General Assembly would be eligible to vote in the special election on April 5th. However, it can be presumed that the Legislature intended this sentence to mean that persons who had qualified up to February 1, 1949, could vote.

This offers the interesting proposition that H.B. No. 2 and H.R. No. 40-208B are in conflict with each other as to the persons who are to be allowed to vote in the special election of April 5th.

It is my opinion that H.B. No. 2 is controlling on this point. It deals with all special and general elections, whereas, H.R. 40-208B deals only with the April 5th election and is in reality only a resolution to submit a question to the people to discover their wishes, and will be of no force and effect after April 5th.

Section 31 of H. B. No. 2 provides for a supplemental list to be used in special elections. However, Section 31 also says that this supplemental list shall be prepared in the same manner that general election lists are prepared under the provisions of H. B. No. 2.

Therefore, in order for a person to register and qualify to vote in the April 5th election, he would have to register according to the provisions of H. B. No. 2, even if only to get on the supplemental list to be used for special elections. Taking this proposition further, we can see that this means that unless a county sets up the new registration machinery within a very short time, then no one will be able to get on the supplemental list. Thus, only those persons qualified under the 1948 general election list could vote in the April 5th election.

As to the persons who are qualified under the 1948 general election list, it is my opinion that all those persons who qualified under such list up to February 25th will be eligible to vote in the April 5th election. The old law concerning registration was in effect up until February 25th which was the date of the approval of H. B. No. 2 by the Governor of Georgia. Therefore, we reach the conclusion that persons who qualified to vote for members of the General Assembly up until February 25, 1949, and all those persons who are able to register and get their names on the supplemental list provided for special elections will be entitled to vote in the April 5th election.

It is my opinion that no one can register under the old law subsequent to February 25, 1949, but will have to register under the provisions of H. B. No. 2.

The point has been raised that under the Act approved February 5, 1945 (Ga. L. 1945, p. 129) notices have been mailed out to persons who did not vote within a two year period, to the effect that such persons would be disqualified unless by April 1, 1949 an application for continuance of registration was received by the Tax Collector or Tax Commissioner, as the case might be.

This raises the question as to whether or not a person who filed his application for continuance of registration after February 25th and before April 1st would be qualified to vote in the April 5th election.

H. B. No. 2 provides that effective from the date of the approval of this Act no person shall be permitted to vote unless such person shall have been registered and qualified as provided in H. B. No. 2. This would seem to indicate that a person who qualified after February 25th could not vote in the April 5th election, but inasmuch as under the 1945 Act a person who did not vote within the two year period was not automatically disqualified but was only disqualified in the event that he did not file his application for continuance of registration on or before April 1st, it would seem to follow that for the purposes of deciding only the point as to who is still on the 1948 general election list, the 1945 Act would still be effective up until and including April 1, 1949, as applied to this class of voters. These persons were qualified to vote in the 1948 general election and their status would not be changed except upon failure to file application for continuance of registration. This only applies to the general election list of 1948 which is to be used to compile a list of voters eligible to vote in special elections.

Briefly, here are the conclusions which I have reached regarding some of the questions which present themselves.

1. All those persons who were qualified to vote under the old law up until February 25, 1949 are eligible to vote at the April 5th election. This does not preclude the purging of the old list.

2. Those persons who are on the supplemental list as provided in Section 31 of H. B. No. 2 are eligible to vote in the April 5th election.

3. Those persons who file, under the provisions of the old law, their applications for continuance of registration prior to April 1, 1949 are eligible to vote in the April 5th election.

4. No person may register subsequent to February 25, 1949 under the provisions of the old law.

As the Attorney General is prohibited by law from rendering official opinions to persons other than the Governor and heads of the various departments, this letter must be considered as merely my personal views on this subject.

Sincerely yours,

Eugene Cook

The Attorney General.

FOR RELEASE 7:45 A.M. Saturday Morning, January 28, 1950.

(Radio Address of Governor Herman E. Talmadge over a network of Georgia Radio Stations as a part of a weekly series of reports to the people.)

MY FELLOW COUNTRYMEN:

This morning I have an urgent message for all of the people of Georgia. I hope that you who are listening in on the radio today will take this message to your neighbors and I hope that you will discuss it with them, because what I have to say concerns the future destiny of every man, woman, and child in the State of Georgia.

This week in the District Court of the United States for the Northern District of Georgia, Benard South, an Atlanta merchant, and Harold C. Fleming, Public Relations Director for the notorious race-mixing Southern Regional Council, filed suit against Chairman James S. Peters of the State Democratic Executive Committee,and others seeking to outlaw Georgia's traditional county unit system.

There is more behind this suit than meets the eye. Ellis Arnall started all this. It is a part of a master plan that has been underway in Georgia since the Arnall administration, to disfranchise the white people in rural areas and enfranchise the great horde of bloc voters in the urban centers.

The suit filed this week constitutes a grave threat to the political integrity, sovereignty, and influence of practically every county in Georgia.

For that reason, this morning I want to review for you the series of events which have led up to its filing. I want you to go back with me to the plotting and scheming of the Arnall administration to destroy the county unit system. I want to bring you up to the present day, so that you, the people, may know with what we are faced so that we can gird ourselves to do it battle in the courts and at the ballot boxes.

At the 1945 session of the General Assembly, during the Arnall administration, the then governor had a measure introduced which, if passed, would have done away with our county unit system of voting. The bill sponsored by Arnall would have required a candidate for for state office to receive not only a majority of the county unit vote, but also, a majority of the popular vote. This bill would have for all effects and purposes, completely swept away our county unit system. It was part and parcel of the opposition's master plan to slip up on the blind side of the small counties of Georgia and strip them of their influence until only a hollow shell remained.

Ah, my friends, Ellis Arnall knew what he was doing when he tried to dupe the legislature into passing this monstrous proposal. He knew then that the candidate he sponsored might, because of the bloc vote, be able to muster more popular votes, but yet, might be resoundly defeated in white votes and in county unit votes. The memory of Georgians is not so short but to remember that this was exactly the case, and had Mr. Arnall been successful in his plot to destroy the county unit system at that time, his hand-picked candidate would now be sitting in the governor's office.

Having failed in this attempt to bulldoze the General Assembly into destroying the county unit system, the State Executive Committee, then dominated by Governor Arnall, made threats that they would not even let my father, Eugene Talmadge, run for governor in 1946. This threat had been made several times before, but everytime righteous indignation of practically all the people in Georgia rose up and scared them off. The State Executive Committee dominated by the then governor backed off of this scheme and decided to place their faith in the bloc vote. Eugene Talmadge carried this issue to the people in 1946 and won the election by a resounding victory of over 100,000 majority of white votes and and overwhelming majority of the county unit vote.

But even with this great victory, Arnall and the opposition crowd here in Atlanta, who seek to boss the affairs of our State and eliminate our rural counties, could not take their defeat.

A state employee under the Arnall administration, one Dr. Cullen B. Gosnell, filed a suit in the federal court, seeking to void Eugene Talmadge's election by the people of Georgia, and seeking further to have our county unit system declared unconstitutional. This Dr. Gosnell, is professor of Political Science at Emory University in a full-time job. But during the Arnall administration, he drew thousands of dollars from the State as "Director of the Government Panel" for the old, now defunct, "Agricultural and Industrial Development Board". This was a panel Ellis Arnall had set up to help him plan on how to destroy the rural counties of the State of Georgia.

After filing the suit, this Dr. Gosnell said: "Ellis Arnall, the Atlanta Journal, C.I.O., and a few others are giving me all aid and assistance behind the scenes." Dr. Gosnell did not tell the public who was really behind this suit, but he organized a so-called "front" group called the "Georgia Veterans for Majority Rule". This is typical of the opposition's stereotyped practice of forming fake citizen groups, while lurking behind the scenes are powerful and influential vested interests here in Atlanta who seek pecuniary and political gain by destroying the influence of our small counties.

Fortunately, a three-judge federal bench upheld our county unit system of voting in Georgia, saying "The county unit system does not violate the equal protection clause because it is a rational classification in that it accords with consistent party practices, a republican form of government, and prevents political control by large centers of population." In other words, the court held clearly and decisively that under our system of checks and balances, written into the Constitution by our founding fathers, a state has a perfect right to insure a diffusion of political initiative among all its sub-divisions. The most outstanding example of this basic ~~[illegible]~~ precept of democratic government is our United States Senate, where each state, no matter what its population, be it New York with its teeming millions, or Nevada with its relatively small population, has two Senators who always represent it in the greatest lawmaking ~~[illegible]~~ body in the world.

Not satisfied with this ruling by the three-judge federal bench, Gosnell and his crowd took the case to the Supreme Court of the United States, but the Supreme Court refused to take jurisdiction, thus, affirming the decision of the lower court.

Well, after that decision, the county unit system went unchallenged until early in 1947 when former Governor Ed Rivers and the then acting-governor Melvin E. Thompson, called a "rump" convention to meet in Macon in an effort to steal the machinery of the Democratic Party of Georgia away from those officers who had been duly elected by the people. Even the Atlanta Journal admitted that the sole purpose behind this maneuver was to force two democratic primary elections in 1948, thus, throwing the real test into the general election where the county unit system does not apply. This was a bold and brazen and desperate move on the part of the opposition. Not only did they seek to avoid the county unit system by this maneuver, but they even fell back on the old sing-song that they were going to bar me from even getting on the ticket. This is the same kind of trickery that the opposition is resorting to today.

Fortunately again for everyone, public resentment rose to such a crescendo that the courts of the state assumed jurisdiction in a suit brought by Chairman James S. Peters declaring that the "rump" convention in Macon was illegal, null, and void.

Now, this week the same old opposition crowd brings another suit in federal court against the county unit system.

For the purposes of the record it might be well to consider who the plaintiffs are in the suit, their connections, and the attorneys bringing the suit.

Harold C. Fleming, a resident of Atlanta, who is listed as one of the plaintiffs in the complaint, is employed as full-time Public Relations Director of the Southern Regional Council. The aim of this group and their associates is to hold mixed meetings and to sponsor dances and banquets where Negroes and whites mingle together in gay frivolity. The police records of the City of Atlanta bear this statement out. The Southern Regional Council is directed by Dr. George S. Mitchell, a former professor of Economics at Columbia University in New York City. This same Dr. George S. Mitchell and Dr. Cullen B. Gosnell, Emory University Professor, who filed the previous suit, are co-editors of a race-mixing anthology titled "Readings on the New South". This book includes articles designed to break down segregation in Georgia, and in it are prominently featured writings of former Governor, Ellis Gibbs Arnall.

Leading counsel in the case, Morris Abram, Atlanta lawyer, surprisingly enough was born in Fitzgerald, Georgia. He is known to have studied for an appreciable length of time in Europe, and is now on the Executive Board of the United World Federalists, Inc. Although Mr. Abram's loyalty has never been questioned, he is in bad company, because this is an organization infested with communists, socialists and fellow-travelers. It advocates surrender of the sovereignty of these United States to a World government backed up by military force. They seek to have our County, the strongest in the World over which flies the Star Spangled Banner, relegated to the role of a single state, all a part of a monstrous communistic conspiracy to dominate the World. They seek to have a military force composed of Russians, Spaniards and others with authority to go into any country on earth and thrust down the throats of the people any kind of edict that their twisted minds might conceive.

With a military force like this at their disposal, these agitators figure that it would then be easy to ram down the throats of the South the iniquitous "civil rights" program.

Another one of the attorneys bringing the suit has revealed that the present litigation against the county unit system is being financed by a "group of interested persons here in Atlanta". He declined to name the moving forces lurking behind the scenes. But, their motives are clear and their connections are plain.

A reporter for the Atlanta Journal predicted some four months ago that this suit would be filed. When asked about this prediction, Harold C. Fleming, of the Southern Regional Council, and one of the plaintiffs, said "We just decided to take another crack at it".

Well, my friends, be not alarmed because I am proud to tell every man, woman and child in Georgia today, that you have a governor who is not in cahoots with this crowd of agitators. You have a governor that will fight them at every turn and ask no corner or quarter. The last place that this opposition crowd wants to fight is at the ballot boxes. This is a last, gasping, dying, desperate effort. I have appointed Honorable B. D. "Buck" Murphy, brilliant trial lawyer of Fayetteville and Atlanta, and Honorable C. Baxter Jones of Macon, eminent attorney of high reputation, to represent the interests of the people of the State of Georgia.

The Talmadge administration will protect the small counties of this State in accordance with its commitments to the people. I want to call on every citizen of Georgia who is interested in the preservation of democratic government, and who is against boss dictatorship from Atlanta, to join me in this great crusade against these insidious forces who would destroy us.

I thank you and God Bless You.

REPORT OF THE NATIONAL ADVISORY COMMISSION ON CIVIL DISORDERS

Summary of Report

INTRODUCTION

The summer of 1967 again brought racial disorders to American cities, and with them shock, fear and bewilderment to the nation.

The worst came during a two-week period in July, first in Newark and then in Detroit. Each set off a chain reaction in neighboring communities.

On July 28, 1967, the President of the United States established this Commission and directed us to answer three basic questions:

What happened?

Why did it happen?

What can be done to prevent it from happening again?

To respond to these questions, we have undertaken a broad range of studies and investigations. We have visited the riot cities; we have heard many witnesses; we have sought the counsel of experts across the country.

This is our basic conclusion: Our nation is moving toward two societies, one black, one white—separate and unequal.

Reaction to last summer's disorders has quickened the movement and deepened the division. Discrimination and segregation have long permeated much of American life; they now threaten the future of every American.

This deepening racial division is not inevitable. The movement apart can be reversed. Choice is still possible. Our principal task is to define that choice and to press for a national resolution.

To pursue our present course will involve the continuing polarization of the American community and, ultimately, the destruction of basic democratic values.

The alternative is not blind repression or capitulation to lawlessness. It is the realization of common opportunities for all within a single society.

This alternative will require a commitment to national action—compassionate, massive and sustained, backed by the resources of the most powerful and the richest nation on this earth. From every American it will require new attitudes, new understanding, and, above all, new will.

The vital needs of the nation must be met; hard choices must be made, and, if necessary, new taxes enacted.

Violence cannot build a better society. Disruption and disorder nourish repression, not justice. They strike at the freedom of every citizen. The community cannot—it will not—tolerate coercion and mob rule.

Violence and destruction must be ended—in the streets of the ghetto and in the lives of people.

Segregation and poverty have created in the racial ghetto a destructive environment totally unknown to most white Americans.

What white Americans have never fully understood—but what the Negro can never forget—is that white society is deeply implicated in the ghetto. White institutions created it, white institutions maintain it, and white society condones it.

It is time now to turn with all the purpose at our command to the major unfinished business of this nation. It is time to adopt strategies for action that will produce quick and visible progress. It is time to make good the promises of American democracy to all citizens—urban and rural, white and black, Spanish-surname, American Indian, and every minority group.

Our recommendations embrace three basic principles:

- To mount programs on a scale equal to the dimension of the problems:
- To aim these programs for high impact in the immediate future in order to close the gap between promise and performance;
- To undertake new initiatives and experiments that can change the system of failure and frustration that now dominates the ghetto and weakens our society.

These programs will require unprecedented levels of funding and performance, but they neither probe deeper nor demand more than the problems which called them forth. There can be no higher priority for national action and no higher claim on the nation's conscience.

We issue this Report now, four months before the date called for by the President. Much remains that can be learned. Continued study is essential.

As Commissioners we have worked together with a sense of the greatest urgency and have sought to compose whatever differences exist among us. Some differences remain. But the gravity of the problem and the pressing need for action are too clear to allow further delay in the issuance of this Report.

PART I—WHAT HAPPENED?

Chapter 1—Profiles of Disorder

The report contains profiles of a selection of the disorders that took place during the summer of 1967. These profiles are designed to indicate how the disorders happened, who participated in them, and how local officials, police forces, and the National Guard responded. Illustrative excerpts follow:

NEWARK

. . . It was decided to attempt to channel the energies of the people into a nonviolent protest. While Lofton promised the crowd that a full investigation would be made of the Smith incident, the other Negro leaders began urging those on the scene to form a line of march toward the city hall.

Some persons joined the line of march. Others milled about in the narrow street. From the dark grounds of the housing project came a barrage of rocks. Some of them fell among the crowd. Others hit persons in the line of march. Many smashed the windows of the police station. The rock throwing, it was believed, was the work of youngsters; approximately 2,500 children lived in the housing project.

Almost at the same time, an old car was set afire in a parking lot. The line of march began to disintegrate. The police, their heads protected by World War I-type helmets, sallied forth to disperse the crowd. A fire engine, arriving on the scene, was pelted with rocks. As police drove people away from the station, they scattered in all directions.

A few minutes later a nearby liquor store was broken into. Some persons, seeing a caravan of cabs appear at city hall to protest Smith's arrest, interpreted this as evidence that the disturbance had been organized, and generated rumors to that effect.

However, only a few stores were looted. Within a short period of time, the disorder appeared to have run its course.

. . . On Saturday, July 15, [Director of Police Dominick] Spina received a report of snipers in a housing project. When he arrived he saw approximately 100 National Guardsmen and police officers crouching behind vehicles, hiding in corners and lying on the ground around the edge of the courtyard.

Since everything appeared quiet and it was broad daylight, Spina walked directly down the middle of the street. Nothing happened. As he came to the last building of the complex, he heard a shot. All around him the troopers jumped, believing themselves to be under sniper fire. A moment later a young Guardsman ran from behind a building.

The Director of Police went over and asked him if he had fired the shot. The soldier said yes, he had fired to scare a man away from a window; that his orders were to keep everyone away from windows.

Spina said he told the soldier: "Do you know what you just did? You have now created a state of hysteria. Every Guardsman up and down this street and every state policeman and every city policeman that is present thinks that somebody just fired a shot and that it is probably a sniper."

A short time later more "gunshots" were heard. Investigating, Spina came upon a Puerto Rican sitting on a wall. In reply to a question as to whether he knew "where the firing is coming from?" the man said:

"That's no firing. That's fireworks. If you look up to the fourth floor, you will see the people who are throwing down these cherry bombs."

By this time four truckloads of National Guardsmen had arrived and troopers and policemen were again crouched everywhere looking for a sniper. The Director of Police remained at the scene for three hours, and the only shot fired was the one by the Guardsman.

Nevertheless, at six o'clock that evening two columns of National Guardsmen and state troopers were directing mass fire at the Hayes Housing Project in response to what they believed were snipers. . . .

DETROIT

. . . A spirit of carefree nihilism was taking hold. To riot and destroy appeared more and more to become ends in themselves. Late Sunday afternoon it appeared to one observer that the young people were "dancing amidst the flames."

A Negro plainclothes officer was standing at an intersection when a man threw a Molotov cocktail into a business establishment at the corner. In the heat of the afternoon, fanned by the 20 to 25 m.p.h. winds of both Sunday and Monday, the fire reached the home next door within minutes. As residents uselessly sprayed the flames with garden hoses, the fire jumped from roof to roof of adjacent two- and three-story buildings. Within the hour the entire block was in flames. The ninth house in the burning row belonged to the arsonist who had thrown the Molotov cocktail. . . .

. . . Employed as a private guard, 55-year-old Julius L. Dorsey, a Negro, was standing in front of a market when accosted by two Negro men and a woman. They demanded he permit them to loot the market. He ignored their demands. They began to berate him. He asked a neighbor to call the police. As the argument grew more heated, Dorsey fired three shots from his pistol into the air.

The police radio reported: "Looters, they have rifles." A patrol car driven by a police officer and carrying three National Guardsmen arrived. As the looters fled, the law enforcement personnel opened fire. When the firing ceased, one person lay dead.

He was Julius L. Dorsey . . .

. . . As the riot alternately waxed and waned, one area of the ghetto remained insulated. On the northeast side the residents of some 150 square blocks inhabited by 21,000 persons had, in 1966, banded together in the Positive Neighborhood Action Committee (PNAC). With professional help from the Institute of Urban Dynamics, they had organized block clubs and made plans for the improvement of the neighborhood. . . .

When the riot broke out, the residents, through the block clubs, were able to organize quickly. Youngsters, agreeing to stay in the neighborhood, participated in detouring traffic. While many persons reportedly sympathized with the idea of a rebellion against the "system," only two small fires were set—one in an empty building.

. . . According to Lt. Gen. Throckmorton and Col. Bolling, the city, at this time, was saturated with fear. The National Guardsmen were afraid, the residents were afraid, and the police were afraid. Numerous persons, the majority of them Negroes, were being injured by gunshots of undetermined origin. The general and his staff felt that the major task of the troops was to reduce the fear and restore an air of normalcy.

In order to accomplish this, every effort was made to establish contact and rapport between the troops and the residents. The soldiers—20 percent of whom were Negro—began helping to clean up the streets, collect garbage, and trace persons who had disappeared in the confusion. Residents in the neighborhoods responded with soup and sandwiches for the troops. In areas where the National Guard tried to establish rapport with the citizens, there was a smaller response.

NEW BRUNSWICK

. . . A short time later, elements of the crowd—an older and rougher one than the night before—appeared in front of the police station. The participants wanted to see the mayor.

Mayor [Patricia] Sheehan went out onto the steps of the station. Using a bullhorn, she talked to the people and asked that she be given an opportunity to correct conditions. The crowd was boisterous. Some persons challenged the mayor. But, finally, the opinion, "She's new! Give her a chance!" prevailed.

A demand was issued by people in the crowd that all persons arrested the previous night be released. Told that this already had been done, the people were suspicious. They asked to be allowed to inspect the jail cells.

It was agreed to permit representatives of the people to look in the cells to satisfy themselves that everyone had been released.

The crowd dispersed. The New Brunswick riot had failed to materialize.

Chapter 2—Patterns of Disorder

The "typical" riot did not take place. The disorders of 1967 were unusual, irregular, complex and unpredictable social processes. Like most human events, they did not unfold in an orderly sequence. However, an analysis of our survey information leads to some conclusions about the riot process.

In general:

- The civil disorders of 1967 involved Negroes acting against local symbols of white American society, authority and property in Negro neighborhoods—rather than against white persons.
- Of 164 disorders reported during the first nine months of 1967, eight (5 percent) were major in terms of violence and damage; 33 (20 percent) were serious but not major; 123 (75 percent) were minor and undoubtedly would not have received national attention as "riots" had the nation not been sensitized by the more serious outbreaks.
- In the 75 disorders studied by a Senate subcommittee, 83 deaths were reported. Eighty-two percent of the deaths and more than half the injuries occurred in Newark and Detroit. About 10 percent of the dead and 38 percent of the injured were public employees, primarily law officers and firemen. The overwhelming majority of the persons killed or injured in all the disorders were Negro civilians.
- Initial damage estimates were greatly exaggerated. In Detroit, newspaper damage estimates at first ranged from $200 million to $500 million; the highest recent estimate is $45 million. In Newark, early estimates ranged from $15 to $25 million. A month later damage was estimated at $10.2 million, over 80 percent in inventory losses.

In the 24 disorders in 23 cities which we surveyed:

- The final incident before the outbreak of disorder, and the initial violence itself, generally took place in the evening or at night at a place in which it was normal for many people to be on the streets.
- Violence usually occurred almost immediately following the occurrence of the final precipitating incident, and then escalated rapidly. With but few exceptions, violence subsided during the day, and flared rapidly again at night. The night-day cycles continued through the early period of the major disorders.
- Disorder generally began with rock and bottle throwing and window breaking. Once store windows were broken, looting usually followed.
- Disorder did not erupt as a result of a single "triggering" or "precipitating" incident. Instead, it was generated out of an increasingly disturbed social atmosphere, in which typically a series of tension-heightening incidents over a period of weeks or months became linked in the minds of many in the Negro community with a reservoir of underlying grievances. At some point in the mounting tension, a further incident—in itself often routine or trivial—became the breaking point and the tension spilled over into violence.
- "Prior" incidents, which increased tensions and ultimately led to violence, were police actions in almost half the cases; police actions were "final" incidents before the outbreak of violence in 12 of the 24 surveyed disorders.
- No particular control tactic was successful in every situation. The varied effectiveness of control techniques emphasizes the need for advance training, planning, adequate intelligence systems, and knowledge of the ghetto community.

- Negotiations between Negroes—including your militants as well as older Negro leaders—and white officials concerning "terms of peace" occurred during virtually all the disorders surveyed. In many cases, these negotiations involved discussion of underlying grievances as well as the handling of the disorder by control authorities.
- The typical rioter was a teenager or young adult, a lifelong resident of the city in which he rioted, a high school dropout; he was, nevertheless, somewhat better educated than his nonrioting Negro neighbor, and was usually underemployed or employed in a menial job. He was proud of his race, extremely hostile to both whites and middle-class Negroes and, although informed about politics, highly distrustful of the political system.
- A Detroit survey revealed that approximately 11 percent of the total residents of two riot areas admitted participation in the rioting, 20 to 25 percent identified themselves as "bystanders," over 16 percent identified themselves as "counter-rioters" who urged rioters to "cool it," and the remaining 48 to 53 percent said they were at home or elsewhere and did not participate. In a survey of Negro males between the ages of 15 and 35 residing in the disturbance area in Newark, about 45 percent identified themselves as rioters, and about 55 percent as "noninvolved."
- Most rioters were young Negro males. Nearly 53 percent of arrestees were between 15 and 24 years of age; nearly 81 percent between 15 and 35.
- In Detroit and Newark about 74 percent of the rioters were brought up in the North. In contrast, of the noninvolved, 36 percent in Detroit and 52 percent in Newark were brought up in the North.
- What the rioters appeared to be seeking was fuller participation in the social order and the material benefits enjoyed by the majority of American citizens. Rather than rejecting the American system, they were anxious to obtain a place for themselves in it.
- Numerous Negro counter-rioters walked the streets urging rioters to "cool it." The typical counter-rioter was better educated and had higher income than either the rioter or the noninvolved.
- The proportion of Negroes in local government was substantially smaller than the Negro proportion of population. Only three of the 20 cities studied had more than one Negro legislator; none had ever had a Negro mayor or city manager. In only four cities did Negroes hold other important policy-making positions or serve as heads of municipal departments.
- Although almost all cities had some sort of formal grievance mechanism for handling citizen complaints, this typically was regarded by Negroes as ineffective and was generally ignored.
- Although specific grievances varied from city to city, at least 12 deeply held grievances can be identified and ranked into three levels of relative intensity:

First Level of Intensity

1. Police practices
2. Unemployment and underemployment
3. Inadequate housing

Second Level of Intensity

4. Inadequate education
5. Poor recreation facilities and programs
6. Ineffectiveness of the political structure and grievance mechanisms

Third Level of Intensity

7. Disrespectful white attitudes
8. Discriminatory administration of justice
9. Inadequacy of federal programs
10. Inadequacy of municipal services
11. Discriminatory consumer and credit practices
12. Inadequate welfare programs

- The results of a three-city survey of various federal programs—manpower, education, housing, welfare and community action—indicate that, despite substantial expenditures, the number of persons assisted constituted only a fraction of those in need.

The background of disorder is often as complex and difficult to analyze as the disorder itself. But we find that certain general conclusions can be drawn:

- Social and economic conditions in the riot cities constituted a clear pattern of severe disadvantage for Negroes compared with whites, whether the Negroes lived in the area where the riot took place or outside it. Negroes had completed fewer years of education and fewer had attended high school. Negroes were twice as likely to be unemployed and three times as likely to be in unskilled and service jobs. Negroes averaged 70 percent of the income earned by whites and were more than twice as likely to be living in poverty. Although housing cost Negroes relatively more, they had worse housing—three times as likely to be overcrowded and substandard. When compared to white suburbs, the relative disadvantage is even more pronounced.

A study of the aftermath of disorder leads to disturbing conclusions. We find that, despite the institution of some post-riot programs:

- Little basic change in the conditions underlying the outbreak of disorder has taken place. Actions to ameliorate Negro grievances have been limited and sporadic; with but few exceptions, they have not significantly reduced tensions.
- In several cities, the principal official response has been to train and equip the police with more sophisticated weapons.
- In several cities, increasing polarization is evident, with continuing breakdown of inter-racial communication, and growth of white segregationist or black separatist groups.

Chapter 3—Organized Activity

The President directed the Commission to investigate "to what extent, if any, there has been planning or organization in any of the riots."

To carry out this part of the President's charge, the Commission established a special investigative staff supplementing the field teams that made the general examination of the riots in 23 cities. The unit examined data collected by federal agencies and congressional committees, including thousands of documents supplied by the Federal Bureau of Investigation, gathered and evaluated information from local and state law enforcement agencies and officials, and conducted its own field investigation in selected cities.

On the basis of all the information collected, the Commission concludes that:

> The urban disorders of the summer of 1967 were not caused by, nor were they the consequence of, any organized plan or "conspiracy."

Specifically, the Commission has found no evidence that all or any of the disorders or the incidents that led to them were planned or directed by any organization or group, international, national or local.

Militant organizations, local and national, and individual agitators, who repeatedly forecast and called for violence, were active in the spring and summer of 1967. We believe that they sought to encourage violence, and that they helped to create an atmosphere that contributed to the outbreak of disorder.

We recognize that the continuation of disorders and the polarization of the races would provide fertile ground for organized exploitation in the future.

Investigations of organized activity are continuing at all levels of government, including committees of Congress. These investigations relate not only to the disorders of 1967 but also to the actions of groups and individuals, particularly in schools and colleges, during this last fall and winter. The Commission has cooperated in these investigations. They should continue.

Part II—Why Did It Happen?

Chapter 4—The Basic Causes

In addressing the question "Why did it happen?" we shift our focus from the local to the national scene, from the particular events of the summer of 1967 to the factors within the society at large that created a mood of violence among many urban Negroes.

These factors are complex and interacting; they vary significantly in their effect from city to city and from year to year; and the consequences of one disorder, generating new grievances and new demands, become the causes of the next. Thus was created the "thicket of tension, conflicting evidence and extreme opinions" cited by the President.

Despite these complexities, certain fundamental matters are clear. Of these, the most fundamental is the racial attitude and behavior of white Americans toward black Americans.

Race prejudice has shaped our history decisively; it now threatens to affect our future.

White racism is essentially responsible for the explosive mixture which has been accumulating in our cities since the end of World War II. Among the ingredients of this mixture are:

- Pervasive discrimination and segregation in employment, education and housing, which have resulted in the continuing exclusion of great numbers of Negroes from the benefits of economic progress.
- Black in-migration and white exodus, which have produced the massive and growing concentrations of impoverished Negroes in our major cities, creating a growing crisis of deteriorating facilities and services and unmet human needs.
- The black ghettos where segregation and poverty converge on the young to destroy opportunity and enforce failure. Crime, drug addiction, dependency on welfare, and bitterness and resentment against society in general and white society in particular are the result.

At the same time, most whites and some Negroes outside the ghetto have prospered to a degree unparalleled in the history of civilization. Through television and other media, this affluence has been flaunted before the eyes of the Negro poor and the jobless ghetto youth.

Yet these facts alone cannot be said to have caused the disorders. Recently, other powerful ingredients have begun to catalyze the mixture:

- Frustrated hopes are the residue of the unfulfilled expectations aroused by the great judicial and legislative victories of the Civil Rights Movement and the dramatic struggle for equal rights in the South.
- A climate that tends toward approval and encouragement of violence as a form of protest has been created by white terrorism directed against nonviolent protest; by the open defiance of law and federal authority by state and local officials resisting desegregation; and by some protest groups engaging in civil disobedience who turn their backs on nonviolence, go beyond the constitutionally protected rights of petition and free assembly, and resort to violence to attempt to compel alteration of laws and policies with which they disagree.

- The frustrations of powerlessness have led some Negroes to the conviction that there is no effective alternative to violence as a means of achieving redress of grievances, and of "moving the system." These frustrations are reflected in alienation and hostility toward the institutions of law and government and the white society which controls them, and in the reach toward racial consciousness and solidarity reflected in the slogan "Black Power."
- A new mood has sprung up among Negroes, particularly among the young, in which self-esteem and enhanced racial pride are replacing apathy and submission to "the system."
- The police are not merely a "spark" factor. To some Negroes police have come to symbolize white power, white racism and white repression. And the fact is that many police do reflect and express these white attitudes. The atmosphere of hostility and cynicism is reinforced by a widespread belief among Negroes in the existence of police brutality and in a "double standard" of justice and protection—one for Negroes and one for whites.

To this point, we have attempted to identify the prime components of the "explosive mixture." In the chapters that follow we seek to analyze them in the perspective of history. Their meaning, however, is clear:

In the summer of 1967, we have seen in our cities a chain reaction of racial violence. If we are heedless, none of us shall escape the consequences.

Chapter 5—Rejection and Protest: An Historical Sketch

The causes of recent racial disorders are embedded in a tangle of issues and circumstances—social, economic, political and psychological—which arise out of the historic pattern of Negro-white relations in America.

In this chapter we trace the pattern, identify the recurrent themes of Negro protest and, most importantly, provide a perspective on the protest activities of the present era.

We describe the Negro's experience in America and the development of slavery as an institution. We show his persistent striving for equality in the face of rigidly maintained social, economic and educational barriers, and repeated mob violence. We portray the ebb and flow of the doctrinal tides—accommodation, separatism, and self-help—and their relationship to the current theme of Black Power. We conclude:

The Black Power advocates of today consciously feel that they are the most militant group in the Negro protest movement. Yet they have retreated from a direct confrontation with American society on the issue of integration and, by preaching separatism, unconsciously function as an accommodation to white racism. Much of their economic program, as well as their interest in Negro history, self-help, racial solidarity and separation, is reminiscent of Booker T. Washington. The rhetoric is different, but the ideas are remarkably similar.

Chapter 6—The Formation Of the Racial Ghettos[1]

Throughout the 20th century the Negro population of the United States has been moving steadily from rural areas to urban and from South to North and West. In 1910, 91 percent of the nation's 9.8 million Negroes lived in the South and only 27 percent of American Negroes lived in cities of 2,500 persons or more. Between 1910 and 1966 the total Negro population more than doubled, reaching 21.5 million, and the number living in metropolitan areas rose more than five-fold (from 2.6 million to 14.8 million). The number outside the South rose eleven-fold (from 880,000 to 9.7 million).

Negro migration from the South has resulted from the expectation of thousands of new and highly paid jobs for unskilled workers in the North and the shift to mechanized farming in the South. However, the Negro migration is small when compared to earlier waves of European immigrants. Even between 1960 and 1966, there were 1.8 million immigrants from abroad compared to the 613,000 Negroes who arrived in the North and West from the South.

As a result of the growing number of Negroes in urban areas, natural increase has replaced migration as the primary source of Negro population increase in the cities. Nevertheless, Negro migration from the South will continue unless economic conditions there change dramatically.

Basic data concerning Negro urbanization trends indicate that:

- Almost all Negro population growth (98 percent from 1950 to 1966) is occurring within metropolitan areas, primarily within central cities.[2]
- The vast majority of white population growth (78 percent from 1960 to 1966) is occurring in suburban portions of metropolitan areas. Since 1960, white central-city population has declined by 1.3 million.

[1] The term "ghetto" as used in this report refers to an area within a city characterized by poverty and acute social disorganization, and inhabited by members of a racial or ethnic group under conditions of involuntary segregation.

[2] A "central city" is the largest city of a standard metropolitan statistical area, that is, a metropolitan area containing at least one city of 50,000 or more inhabitants.

- As a result, central cities are becoming more heavily Negro while the suburban fringes around them remain almost entirely white.
- The twelve largest central cities now contain over two-thirds of the Negro population outside the South, and one-third of the Negro total in the United States.

Within the cities, Negroes have been excluded from white residential areas through discriminatory practices. Just as significant is the withdrawal of white families from, or their refusal to enter, neighborhoods where Negroes are moving or already residing. About 20 percent of the urban population of the United States changes residence every year. The refusal of whites to move into "changing" areas when vacancies occur means that most vacancies eventually are occupied by Negroes.

The result, according to a recent study, is that in 1960 the average segregation index for 207 of the largest United States cities was 86.2. In other words, to create an unsegregated population distribution, an average of over 86 percent of all Negroes would have to change their place of residence within the city.

Chapter 7—Unemployment, Family Structure, and Social Disorganization

Although there have been gains in Negro income nationally, and a decline in the number of Negroes below the "poverty level," the condition of Negroes in the central city remains in a state of crisis. Between 2 and 2.5 million Negroes—16 to 20 percent of the total Negro population of all central cities—live in squalor and deprivation in ghetto neighborhoods.

Employment is a key problem. It not only controls the present for the Negro American but, in a most profound way, it is creating the future as well. Yet, despite continuing economic growth and declining national unemployment rates, the unemployment rate for Negroes in 1967 was more than double that for whites.

Equally important is the undesirable nature of many jobs open to Negroes and other minorities. Negro men are more than three times as likely as white men to be in low-paying, unskilled or service jobs. This concentration of male Negro employment at the lowest end of the occupational scale is the single most important cause of poverty among Negroes.

In one study of low-income neighborhoods, the "subemployment rate," including both unemployment and underemployment, was about 33 percent, or 8.8 times greater than the overall unemployment rate for all United States workers.

Employment problems, aggravated by the constant arrival of new unemployed migrants, many of them from depressed rural areas, create persistent poverty in the ghetto. In 1966, about 11.9 percent of the nation's whites and 40.6 percent of its nonwhites were below the "poverty level" defined by the Social Security Administration (currently $3,335 per year for an urban family of four). Over 40 percent of the nonwhites below the poverty level live in the central cities.

Employment problems have drastic social impact in the ghetto. Men who are chronically unemployed or employed in the lowest status jobs are often unable or unwilling to remain with their families. The handicap imposed on children growing up without fathers in an atmosphere of poverty and deprivation is increased as mothers are forced to work to provide support.

The culture of poverty that results from unemployment and family breakup generates a system of ruthless, exploitative relationships within the ghetto. Prostitution, dope addiction, and crime create an environmental "jungle" characterized by personal insecurity and tension. Children growing up under such conditions are likely participants in civil disorder.

Chapter 8—Conditions of Life In the Racial Ghetto

A striking difference in environment from that of white, middle-class Americans profoundly influences the lives of residents of the ghetto.

Crime rates, consistently higher than in other areas, create a pronounced sense of insecurity. For example, in one city one low-income Negro district had 35 times as many serious crimes against persons as a high-income white district. Unless drastic steps are taken, the crime problems in poverty areas are likely to continue to multiply as the growing youth and rapid urbanization of the population outstrip police resources.

Poor health and sanitation conditions in the ghetto result in higher mortality rates, a higher incidence of major diseases, and lower availability and utilization of medical services. The infant mortality rate for nonwhite babies under the age of one month is 58 percent higher than for whites; for one to 12 months it is almost three times as high. The level of sanitation in the ghetto is far below that in high income areas. Garbage collection is often inadequate. Of an estimated 14,000 cases of rat bite in the United States in 1965, most were in ghetto neighborhoods.

Ghetto residents believe they are "exploited" by local merchants; and evidence substantiates some of these beliefs. A study conducted in one city by the Federal Trade Commission showed that distinctly higher prices were charged for goods sold in ghetto stores than in other areas.

Lack of knowledge regarding credit purchasing creates special pitfalls for the disadvantaged. In many states garnishment practices compound these difficulties by allowing creditors to deprive individuals of their wages without hearing or trial.

Chapter 9—Comparing the Immigrant and Negro Experience

In this chapter, we address ourselves to a fundamental question that many white Americans are asking: why have so many Negroes, unlike the European immigrants, been unable to escape from the ghetto and from poverty. We believe the following factors play a part:

- The Maturing Economy: When the European immigrants arrived, they gained an economic foothold by providing the unskilled labor needed by industry. Unlike the immigrant, the Negro migrant found little opportunity in the city. The economy, by then matured, had little use for the unskilled labor he had to offer.
- The Disability of Race: The structure of discrimination has stringently narrowed opportunities for the Negro and restricted his prospects. European immigrants suffered from discrimination, but never so pervasively.
- Entry into the Political System: The immigrants usually settled in rapidly growing cities with powerful and expanding political machines, which traded economic advantages for political support. Ward-level grievance machinery, as well as personal representation, enabled the immigrant to make his voice heard and his power felt.

  By the time the Negro arrived, these political machines were no longer so powerful or so well equipped to provide jobs or other favors, and in many cases were unwilling to share their influence with Negroes.
- Cultural Factors: Coming from societies with a low standard of living and at a time when job aspirations were low, the immigrants sensed little deprivation in being forced to take the less desirable and poorer-paying jobs. Their large and cohesive families contributed to total income. Their vision of the future—one that led to a life outside of the ghetto—provided the incentive necessary to endure the present.

  Although Negro men worked as hard as the immigrants, they were unable to support their families. The entrepreneurial opportunities had vanished. As a result of slavery and long periods of unemployment, the Negro family structure had become matriarchal; the males played a secondary and marginal family role —one which offered little compensation for their hard and unrewarding labor. Above all, segregation denied Negroes access to good jobs and the opportunity to leave the ghetto. For them, the future seemed to lead only to a dead end.

Today, whites tend to exaggerate how well and quickly they escaped from poverty. The fact is that immigrants who came from rural backgrounds, as many Negroes do, are only now, after three generations, finally beginning to move into the middle class.

By contrast, Negroes began concentrating in the city less than two generations ago, and under much less favorable conditions. Although some Negroes have escaped poverty, few have been able to escape the urban ghetto.

PART III—WHAT CAN BE DONE?

Chapter 10—The Community Response

Our investigation of the 1967 riot cities establishes that virtually every major episode of violence was foreshadowed by an accumulation of unresolved grievances and by widespread dissatisfaction among Negroes with the unwillingness or inability of local government to respond.

Overcoming these conditions is essential for community support of law enforcement and civil order. City governments need new and more vital channels of communication to the residents of the ghetto; they need to improve their capacity to respond effectively to community needs before they become community grievances; and they need to provide opportunity for meaningful involvement of ghetto residents in shaping policies and programs which affect the community.

The Commission recommends that local governments:

- Develop Neighborhood Action Task Forces as joint community-government efforts through which more effective communication can be achieved, and the delivery of city services to ghetto residents improved.
- Establish comprehensive grievance-response mechanisms in order to bring all public agencies under public scrutiny.
- Bring the institutions of local government closer to the people they serve by establishing neighborhood outlets for local, state and federal administrative and public service agencies.
- Expand opportunities for ghetto residents to participate in the formulation of public policy and the implementation of programs affecting them through improved political representation, creation of institutional channels for community action, expansion of legal services, and legislative hearings on ghetto problems.

In this effort, city governments will require state and federal support.

The Commission recommends:

- State and federal financial assistance for mayors and city councils to support the research, consultants, staff and other resources needed to respond effectively to federal program initiatives.

- State cooperation in providing municipalities with the jurisdictional tools needed to deal with their problems; a fuller measure of financial aid to urban areas; and the focusing of the interests of suburban communities on the physical, social and cultural environment of the central city.

Chapter 11—Police and the Community

The abrasive relationship between the police and the minority communities has been a major—and explosive—source of grievance, tension and disorder. The blame must be shared by the total society.

The police are faced with demands for increased protection and service in the ghetto. Yet the aggressive patrol practices thought necessary to meet these demands themselves create tension and hostility. The resulting grievances have been further aggravated by the lack of effective mechanisms for handling complaints against the police. Special programs for bettering police-community relations have been instituted, but these alone are not enough. Police administrators, with the guidance of public officials, and the support of the entire community, must take vigorous action to improve law enforcement and to decrease the potential for disorder.

The Commission recommends that city government and police authorities:

- Review police operations in the ghetto to ensure proper conduct by police officers, and eliminate abrasive practices.
- Provide more adequate police protection to ghetto residents to eliminate their high sense of insecurity, and the belief of many Negro citizens in the existence of a dual standard of law enforcement.
- Establish fair and effective mechanisms for the redress of grievances against the police, and other municipal employees.
- Develop and adopt policy guidelines to assist officers in making critical decisions in areas where police conduct can create tension.
- Develop and use innovative programs to ensure widespread community support for law enforcement.
- Recruit more Negroes into the regular police force, and review promotion policies to ensure fair promotion for Negro officers.
- Establish a "Community Service Officer" program to attract ghetto youths between the ages of 17 and 21 to police work. These junior officers would perform duties in ghetto neighborhoods, but would not have full police authority. The federal government should provide support equal to 90 percent of the costs of employing CSOs on the basis of one for every ten regular officers.

Chapter 12—Control of Disorder

Preserving civil peace is the first responsibility of government. Unless the rule of law prevails, our society will lack not only order but also the environment essential to social and economic progress.

The maintenance of civil order cannot be left to the police alone. The police need guidance, as well as support, from mayors and other public officials. It is the responsibility of public officials to determine proper police policies, support adequate police standards for personnel and performance, and participate in planning for the control of disorders.

To maintain control of incidents which could lead to disorders, the Commission recommends that local officials:

- Assign seasoned, well-trained policemen and supervisory officers to patrol ghetto areas, and to respond to disturbances.
- Develop plans which will quickly muster maximum police manpower and highly qualified senior commanders at the outbreak of disorders.
- Provide special training in the prevention of disorders, and prepare police for riot control and for operation in units, with adequate command and control and field communication for proper discipline and effectiveness.
- Develop guidelines governing the use of control equipment and provide alternatives to the use of lethal weapons. Federal support for research in this area is needed.
- Establish an intelligence system to provide police and other public officials with reliable information that may help to prevent the outbreak of a disorder and to institute effective control measures in the event a riot erupts.
- Develop continuing contacts with ghetto residents to make use of the forces for order which exist within the community.
- Establish machinery for neutralizing rumors, and enabling Negro leaders and residents to obtain the facts. Create special rumor details to collect, evaluate, and dispel rumors that may lead to a civil disorder.

The Commission believes there is a grave danger that some communities may resort to the indiscriminate and excessive use of force. The harmful effects of overreaction are incalculable. The Commission condemns moves to equip police departments with mass destruction weapons, such as automatic rifles, machine guns and tanks. Weapons which are designed to destroy, not to control, have no place in densely populated urban communities.

The Commission recognizes the sound principle of local authority and responsibility in law enforcement, but recommends that the federal government share in the financing of programs for improvement of police forces, both in their normal law enforcement activities as well as in their response to civil disorders.

To assist government authorities in planning their response to civil disorder, this report contains a Supplement on Control of Disorder. It deals with specific problems encountered during riot-control operations, and includes:

- Assessment of the present capabilities of police, National Guard and Army forces to control major riots, and recommendations for improvement;
- Recommended means by which the control operations of those forces may be coordinated with the response of other agencies, such as fire departments, and with the community at large;
- Recommendations for review and revision of federal, state and local laws needed to provide the framework for control efforts and for the call-up and interrelated action of public safety forces.

Chapter 13—The Administration of Justice Under Emergency Conditions

In many of the cities which experienced disorders last summer, there were recurring breakdowns in the mechanisms for processing, prosecuting and protecting arrested persons. These resulted mainly from long-standing structural deficiencies in criminal court systems, and from the failure of communities to anticipate and plan for the emergency demands of civil disorders.

In part, because of this, there were few successful prosecutions for serious crimes committed during the riots. In those cities where mass arrests occurred many arrestees were deprived of basic legal rights.

The Commission recommends that the cities and states:

- Undertake reform of the lower courts so as to improve the quality of justice rendered under normal conditions.
- Plan comprehensive measures by which the criminal justice system may be supplemented during civil disorders so that its deliberative functions are protected, and the quality of justice is maintained.

Such emergency plans require broad community participation and dedicated leadership by the bench and bar. They should include:

- Laws sufficient to deter and punish riot conduct.
- Additional judges, bail and probation officers, and clerical staff.
- Arrangements for volunteer lawyers to help prosecutors and to represent riot defendants at every stage of proceedings.
- Policies to ensure proper and individual bail, arraignment, pretrial, trial and sentencing proceedings.
- Procedures for processing arrested persons, such as summons and release, and release on personal recognizance, which permit separation of minor offenders from those dangerous to the community, in order that serious offenders may be detained and prosecuted effectively.
- Adequate emergency processing and detention facilities.

Chapter 14—Damages: Repair and Compensation

The Commission recommends that the federal government:

- Amend the Federal Disaster Act—which now applies only to natural disasters—to permit federal emergency food and medical assistance to cities during major civil disorders, and provide long-term economic assistance afterwards.
- With the cooperation of the states, create incentives for the private insurance industry to provide more adequate property-insurance coverage in inner-city areas.

The Commission endorses the report of the National Advisory Panel on Insurance in Riot-Affected Areas: "Meeting the Insurance Crisis of our Cities."

Chapter 15—The News Media and the Riots

In his charge to the Commission, the President asked: "What effect do the mass media have on the riots?"

The Commission determined that the answer to the President's question did not lie solely in the performance of the press and broadcasters in reporting the riots. Our analysis had to consider also the overall treatment by the media of the Negro ghettos, community relations, racial attitudes, and poverty—day by day and month by month, year in and year out.

A wide range of interviews with government officials, law enforcement authorities, media personnel and other citizens, including ghetto residents, as well as a quantitative analysis of riot coverage and a special conference with industry representatives, leads us to conclude that:

- Despite instances of sensationalism, inaccuracy and distortion, newspapers, radio and television tried on the whole to give a balanced, factual account of the 1967 disorders.
- Elements of the news media failed to portray accurately the scale and character of the violence that occurred last summer. The overall effect was, we believe, an exaggeration of both mood and event.
- Important segments of the media failed to report adequately on the causes and consequences of civil disorders and on the underlying problems of race relations. They have not communicated to the majority of their audience—which is white—a sense of the degradation, misery and hopelessness of life in the ghetto.

These failings must be corrected, and the improvement must come from within the industry. Freedom of the press is not the issue. Any effort to impose governmental restrictions would be inconsistent with fundamental constitutional precepts.

We have seen evidence that the news media are becoming aware of and concerned about their performance in this field. As that concern grows, coverage will improve. But much more must be done, and it must be done soon.

The Commission recommends that the media:

- Expand coverage of the Negro community and of race problems through permanent assignment of reporters familiar with urban and racial affairs, and through establishment of more and better links with the Negro community.
- Integrate Negroes and Negro activities into all aspects of coverage and content, including newspaper articles and television programming. The news media must publish newspapers and produce programs that recognize the existence and activities of Negroes as a group within the community and as a part of the larger community.
- Recruit more Negroes into journalism and broadcasting and promote those who are qualified to positions of significant responsibility. Recruitment should begin in high schools and continue through college; where necessary, aid for training should be provided.
- Improve coordination with police in reporting riot news through advance planning, and cooperate with the police in the designation of police information officers, establishment of information centers, and development of mutually acceptable guidelines for riot reporting and the conduct of media personnel.
- Accelerate efforts to ensure accurate and responsible reporting of riot and racial news, through adoption by all news gathering organizations of stringent internal staff guidelines.
- Cooperate in the establishment of a privately organized and funded Institute of Urban Communications to train and educate journalists in urban affairs, recruit and train more Negro journalists, develop methods for improving police-press relations, review coverage of riots and racial issues, and support continuing research in the urban field.

Chapter 16—The Future of the Cities

By 1985, the Negro population in central cities is expected to increase by 72 percent to approximately 20.8 million. Coupled with the continued exodus of white families to the suburbs, this growth will produce majority Negro populations in many of the nation's largest cities.

The future of these cities, and of their burgeoning Negro populations, is grim. Most new employment opportunities are being created in suburbs and outlying areas. This trend will continue unless important changes in public policy are made.

In prospect, therefore, is further deterioration of already inadequate municipal tax bases in the face of increasing demands for public services, and continuing unemployment and poverty among the urban Negro population:

Three choices are open to the nation:

- We can maintain present policies, continuing both the proportion of the nation's resources now allocated to programs for the unemployed and the disadvantaged, and the inadequate and failing effort to achieve an integrated society.
- We can adopt a policy of "enrichment" aimed at improving dramatically the quality of ghetto life while abandoning integration as a goal.
- We can pursue integration by combining ghetto "enrichment" with policies which will encourage Negro movement out of central city areas.

The first choice, continuance of present policies, has ominous consequences for our society. The share of the nation's resources now allocated to programs for the disadvantaged is insufficient to arrest the deterioration of life in central city ghettos. Under such conditions, a rising proportion of Negroes may come to see in the deprivation and segregation they experience, a justification for violent protest, or for extending support to now isolated extremists who advocate civil disruption. Large-scale and continuing violence could result, followed by white retaliation, and, ultimately, the separation of the two communities in a garrison state.

Even if violence does not occur, the consequences are unacceptable. Development of a racially integrated society, extraordinarily difficult today, will be virtually impossible when the present black ghetto population of 12.5 million has grown to almost 21 million.

To continue present policies is to make permanent the division of our country into two societies; one, largely Negro and poor, located in the central cities; the other, predominantly white and affluent, located in the suburbs and in outlying areas.

The second choice, ghetto enrichment coupled with abandonment of integration, is also unacceptable. It is another way of choosing a permanently divided country. Moreover, equality cannot be achieved under conditions of nearly complete separation. In a country where the economy, and particularly the resources of employment, are predominantly white, a policy of separation can only relegate Negroes to a permanently inferior economic status.

We believe that the only possible choice for America is the third—a policy which combines ghetto enrichment with programs designed to encourage integration of substantial numbers of Negroes into the society outside the ghetto.

Enrichment must be an important adjunct to integration, for no matter how ambitious or energetic the program, few Negroes now living in central cities can be quickly integrated.

In the meantime, large-scale improvement in the quality of ghetto life is essential.

But this can be no more than an interim strategy. Programs must be developed which will permit substantial Negro movement out of the ghettos. The primary goal must be a single society, in which every citizen will be free to live and work according to his capabilities and desires, not his color.

Chapter 17—Recommendations For National Action

INTRODUCTION

No American—white or black—can escape the consequences of the continuing social and economic decay of our major cities.

Only a commitment to national action on an unprecedented scale can shape a future compatible with the historic ideals of American society.

The great productivity of our economy, and a federal revenue system which is highly responsive to economic growth, can provide the resources.

The major need is to generate new will—the will to tax ourselves to the extent necessary to meet the vital needs of the nation.

We have set forth goals and proposed strategies to reach those goals. We discuss and recommend programs not to commit each of us to specific parts of such programs but to illustrate the type and dimension of action needed.

The major goal is the creation of a true union—a single society and a single American identity. Toward that goal, we propose the following objectives for national action:

- Opening up opportunities to those who are restricted by racial segregation and discrimination, and eliminating all barriers to their choice of jobs, education and housing.
- Removing the frustration of powerlessness among the disadvantaged by providing the means for them to deal with the problems that affect their own lives and by increasing the capacity of our public and private institutions to respond to these problems.
- Increasing communication across racial lines to destroy stereotypes, to halt polarization, end distrust and hostility, and create common ground for efforts toward public order and social justice.

We propose these aims to fulfill our pledge of equality and to meet the fundamental needs of a democratic and civilized society—domestic peace and social justice.

EMPLOYMENT

Pervasive unemployment and underemployment are the most persistent and serious grievances in minority areas. They are inextricably linked to the problem of civil disorder.

Despite growing federal expenditures for manpower development and training programs, and sustained general economic prosperity and increasing demands for skilled workers, about two million—white and nonwhite—are permanently unemployed. About ten million are underemployed, of whom 6.5 million work full time for wages below the poverty line.

The 500,000 "hard-core" unemployed in the central cities who lack a basic education and are unable to hold a steady job are made up in large part of Negro males between the ages of 18 and 25. In the riot cities which we surveyed, Negroes were three times as likely as whites to hold unskilled jobs, which are often part time, seasonal, low-paying and "dead end."

Negro males between the ages of 15 and 25 predominated among the rioters. More than 20 percent of the rioters were unemployed, and many who were employed held intermittent, low status, unskilled jobs which they regarded as below their education and ability.

The Commission recommends that the federal government:

- Undertake joint efforts with cities and states to consolidate existing manpower programs to avoid fragmentation and duplication.
- Take immediate action to create 2,000,000 new jobs over the next three years—one million in the public sector and one million in the private sector—to absorb the hard-core unemployed and materially reduce the level of underemployment for all workers, black and white. We propose 250,000 public sector and 300,000 private sector jobs in the first year.
- Provide on-the-job training by both public and private employers with reimbursement to private employers for the extra costs of training the hard-core unemployed, by contract or by tax credits.
- Provide tax and other incentives to investment in rural as well as urban poverty areas in order to offer to the rural poor an alternative to migration to urban centers.
- Take new and vigorous action to remove artificial barriers to employment and promotion, including not only racial discrimination but, in certain cases, arrest records or lack of a high school diploma. Strengthen those agencies such as the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, charged with eliminating discriminatory practices, and provide full support for Title VI of the 1964 Civil Rights Act allowing federal grant-in-aid funds to be withheld from activities which discriminate on grounds of color or race.

The Commission commends the recent public commitment of the National Council of the Building and Construction Trades Unions, AFL-CIO, to encourage and recruit Negro membership in apprenticeship programs. This commitment should be intensified and implemented.

EDUCATION

Education in a democratic society must equip children to develop their potential and to participate fully in American life. For the community at large, the schools have discharged this responsibility well. But for many minorities, and particularly for the children of the ghetto, the schools have failed to provide the educational experience which could overcome the effects of discrimination and deprivation.

This failure is one of the persistent sources of grievance and resentment within the Negro community. The hostility of Negro parents and students toward the school system is generating increasing conflict and causing disruption within many city school districts. But the most dramatic evidence of the relationship between educational practices and civil disorders lies in the high incidence of riot participation by ghetto youth who have not completed high school.

The bleak record of public education for ghetto children is growing worse. In the critical skills—verbal and reading ability—Negro students are falling further behind whites with each year of school completed. The high unemployment and underemployment rate for Negro youth is evidence, in part, of the growing educational crisis.

We support integration as the priority education strategy; it is essential to the future of American society. In this last summer's disorders we have seen the consequences of racial isolation at all levels, and of attitudes toward race, on both sides, produced by three centuries of myth, ignorance and bias. It is indispensable that opportunities for interaction between the races be expanded.

We recognize that the growing dominance of pupils from disadvantaged minorities in city school populations will not soon be reversed. No matter how great the effort toward desegregation, many children of the ghetto will not, within their school careers, attend integrated schools.

If existing disadvantages are not to be perpetuated, we must drastically improve the quality of ghetto education. Equality of results with all-white schools must be the goal.

To implement these strategies, the Commission recommends:

- Sharply increased efforts to eliminate de facto segregation in our schools through substantial federal aid to school systems seeking to desegregate either within the system or in cooperation with neighboring school systems.

- Elimination of racial discrimination in Northern as well as Southern schools by vigorous application of Title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964.
- Extension of quality early childhood education to every disadvantaged child in the country.
- Efforts to improve dramatically schools serving disadvantaged children through substantial federal funding of year-round compensatory education programs, improved teaching, and expanded experimentation and research.
- Elimination of illiteracy through greater federal support for adult basic education.
- Enlarged opportunities for parent and community participation in the public schools.
- Reoriented vocational education emphasizing work-experience training and the involvement of business and industry.
- Expanded opportunities for higher education through increased federal assistance to disadvantaged students.
- Revision of state aid formulas to assure more per student aid to districts having a high proportion of disadvantaged school-age children.

THE WELFARE SYSTEM

Our present system of public welfare is designed to save money instead of people, and tragically ends up doing neither. This system has two critical deficiencies:

First, it excludes large numbers of persons who are in great need, and who, if provided a decent level of support, might be able to become more productive and self-sufficient. No federal funds are available for millions of men and women who are needy but neither aged, handicapped nor the parents of minor children.

Second, for those included, the system provides assistance well below the minimum necessary for a decent level of existence, and imposes restrictions that encourage continued dependency on welfare and undermine self-respect.

A welter of statutory requirements and administrative practices and regulations operate to remind recipients that they are considered untrustworthy, promiscuous and lazy. Residence requirements prevent assistance to people in need who are newly arrived in the state. Regular searches of recipients' homes violate privacy. Inadequate social services compound the problems.

The Commission recommends that the federal government, acting with state and local governments where necessary, reform the existing welfare system to:

- Establish uniform national standards of assistance at least as high as the annual "poverty level" of income, now set by the Social Security Administration at $3,335 per year for an urban family of four.

- Require that all states receiving federal welfare contributions participate in the Aid to Families with Dependent Children—Unemployed Parents program (AFDC-UP) that permits assistance to families with both father and mother in the home, thus aiding the family while it is still intact.
- Bear a substantially greater portion of all welfare costs—at least 90 percent of total payments.
- Increase incentives for seeking employment and job training, but remove restrictions recently enacted by the Congress that would compel mothers of young children to work.
- Provide more adequate social services through neighborhood centers and family-planning programs.
- Remove the freeze placed by the 1967 welfare amendments on the percentage of children in a state that can be covered by federal assistance.
- Eliminate residence requirements.

As a long-range goal, the Commission recommends that the federal government seek to develop a national system of income supplementation based strictly on need with two broad and basic purposes:

- To provide, for those who can work or who do work, any necessary supplements in such a way as to develop incentives for fuller employment;
- To provide, for those who cannot work and for mothers who decide to remain with their children, a minimum standard of decent living, and to aid in the saving of children from the prison of poverty that has held their parents.

A broad system of supplementation would involve substantially greater federal expenditures than anything now contemplated. The cost will range widely depending on the standard of need accepted as the "basic allowance" to individuals and families, and on the rate at which additional income above this level is taxed. Yet if the deepening cycle of poverty and dependence on welfare can be broken, if the children of the poor can be given the opportunity to scale the wall that now separates them from the rest of society, the return on this investment will be great indeed.

HOUSING

After more than three decades of fragmented and grossly underfunded federal housing programs, nearly six million substandard housing units remain occupied in the United States.

The housing problem is particularly acute in the minority ghettos. Nearly two-thirds of all non-white families living in the central cities today live in neighborhoods marked with substandard housing and general urban blight. Two major factors are responsible.

First: Many ghetto residents simply cannot pay the rent necessary to support decent housing. In Detroit, for example, over 40 percent of the non-white occupied units in 1960 required rent of over 35 percent of the tenants' income.

Second: Discrimination prevents access to many non-slum areas, particularly the suburbs, where good housing exists. In addition, by creating a "back pressure" in the racial ghettos, it makes it possible for landlords to break up apartments for denser occupancy, and keeps prices and rents of deteriorated ghetto housing higher than they would be in a truly free market.

To date, federal programs have been able to do comparatively little to provide housing for the disadvantaged. In the 31-year history of subsidized federal housing, only about 800,000 units have been constructed, with recent production averaging about 50,000 units a year. By comparison, over a period only three years longer, FHA insurance guarantees have made possible the construction of over ten million middle and upper-income units.

Two points are fundamental to the Commission's recommendations:

First: Federal housing programs must be given a new thrust aimed at overcoming the prevailing patterns of racial segregation. If this is not done, those programs will continue to concentrate the most impoverished and dependent segments of the population into the central-city ghettos where there is already a critical gap between the needs of the population and the public resources to deal with them.

Second: The private sector must be brought into the production and financing of low and moderate rental housing to supply the capabilities and capital necessary to meet the housing needs of the nation.

The Commission recommends that the federal government:

- Enact a comprehensive and enforceable federal open housing law to cover the sale or rental of all housing, including single family homes.
- Reorient federal housing programs to place more low and moderate income housing outside of ghetto areas.
- Bring within the reach of low and moderate income families within the next five years six million new and existing units of decent housing, beginning with 600,000 units in the next year.

To reach this goal we recommend:

- Expansion and modification of the rent supplement program to permit use of supplements for existing housing, thus greatly increasing the reach of the program.
- Expansion and modification of the below-market interest rate program to enlarge the interest subsidy to all sponsors and provide interest-free loans to nonprofit sponsors to cover pre-construction costs, and permit sale of projects to nonprofit corporations, cooperatives, or condominiums.
- Creation of an ownership supplement program similar to present rent supplements, to make home ownership possible for low-income families.
- Federal writedown of interest rates on loans to private builders constructing moderate-rent housing.
- Expansion of the public housing program, with emphasis on small units on scattered sites, and leasing and "turnkey" programs.
- Expansion of the Model Cities program.
- Expansion and reorientation of the urban renewal program to give priority to projects directly assisting low-income households to obtain adequate housing.

CONCLUSION

One of the first witnesses to be invited to appear before this Commission was Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, a distinguished and perceptive scholar. Referring to the reports of earlier riot commissions, he said:

> I read that report . . . of the 1919 riot in Chicago, and it is as if I were reading the report of the investigating committee on the Harlem riot of '35, the report of the investigating committee on the Harlem riot of '43, the report of the McCone Commission on the Watts riot.
> I must again in candor say to you members of this Commission —it is a kind of Alice in Wonderland—with the same moving picture re-shown over and over again, the same analysis, the same recommendations, and the same inaction.

These words come to our minds as we conclude this report.

We have provided an honest beginning. We have learned much. But we have uncovered no startling truths, no unique insights, no simple solutions. The destruction and the bitterness of racial disorder, the harsh polemics of black revolt and white repression have been seen and heard before in this country.

It is time now to end the destruction and the violence, not only in the streets of the ghetto but in the lives of people.

A RESUME OF RACIAL SEPARATION LAWS

Southern Regional Council, Inc.
63 Auburn Avenue, N. E.

July, 1945

A RESUME OF RACIAL SEPARATION LAWS

Note: The following statements and listings are general and unspecific, in that a detailed statement of the Jim Crow laws and regulations of the Southern Region and the rest of the United States where Jim Crow laws exist would be lengthy, and defy the critical examination of most readers.

This resume is taken from Charles S. Mangum, Jr., The Legal Status of the Negro (1940).

1. "The southern and border states have sought to handle the matter (of racial antipathy) by means of Jim Crow laws and regulations which make it unlawful for any carrier...to transport white and colored passengers in the same vehicle or the same portion thereof."

2. "Oklahoma and all former slaveholding states, with the exception of Delaware, Missouri, and West Virginia, have made provision by statute for an enforced separation of the white and Negro races on railways operated in the jurisdiction..."
"Most of the statutes contain provisions punishing the carrier for a failure to carry out the terms of the law, making such a dereliction of duty a misdemeanor."
Members of one race are not permitted to "remain" in the coach, or coaches, provided for members of another race in the Southern Region without likelihood of penalty or charge of violation of the regulations of these states.

3. Maryland, North Carolina, and Virginia exempt "pullman cars from the operations of the Jim Crow law, thereby relieving the railways of the duty to segregate passengers and to provide equal accommodations for the two races."

4. Arkansas, Oklahoma, and Texas "have clauses which provide that railways may haul pullman or chair cars for the exclusive use of the members of either race." Oklahoma and Texas mention diners in this connection.

5. "In Georgia a special statute makes compulsory the separation of the races on pullmans."

6. Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Virginia "give express permission to use partitioned or compartment cars, one portion for whites and the other for Negroes.
Kentucky, Maryland, Oklahoma, Texas, and Virginia "require signs designating the race which is to use the particular coach or compartment."

7. "The fact that at a particular time there are no Negroes on a train does not excuse non-compliance with the separate coach law" for each race.

8. "Practically all of the eastern and middle western states and a few in the far west have Civil Rights Acts. A typical statute of this kind provides that there shall be no racial discrimination by public carriers on land or water." (These states are California, Colorado, Connecticut, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Nebraska, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Washington, Wisconsin.)

9. "In a jurisdiction where there is neither a separate coach law nor a Civil Right Act, it has been held that railway companies, if they so desire, may make their own Jim Crow regulations. Missouri and West Virginia are in this category but there is no segregation on the railways of these two states at the present time."

10. Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Texas, and Virginia "make statutory provision for separate waiting room accommodations for the two races in stations or depots.... In the absence of statutory regulations, a (South Carolina) court has held that a railway company may establish rules requiring separate waiting rooms."

11. "A railway company is not permitted to offer to persons of one race accommodations in the waiting room which has been set apart for members of the other."

12. The following southern states having railway Jim Crow laws also require separate accommodations on street railways: Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia. Alabama, Kentucky, and Maryland are exceptions here.

Note: A recent study of the City of Jacksonville, Florida, showed that the city law does not require separation of races in local bus transportation, but that the races nevertheless follow the usual separation pattern in the use of these facilities.

13. Arkansas, Tennessee, and Virginia "give the conductors on street railways authority to change the line of division between the races," and the statutes of Georgia, North Carolina, and South Carolina could easily be so interpreted.

Florida, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, and Texas "provide for signs designating the portion of the car which is to be used for the accommodation of each race." Louisiana and Mississippi "require screens or partitions."

14. In statutes relating to Jim Crow accommodations on street cars, Oklahoma and Virginia "exempt from the operation of the statute officers in charge of prisoners;" Oklahoma, Texas, and Virginia,"exempt company employees engaged in operating the cars;" while Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Virginia exempt nurses in charge of children or infirm persons.

15. "Maryland, North Carolina, and Virginia have Jim Crow legislation applying specifically to steamship lines."

16. "It has been decided that southern steamship companies and those engaged in interstate traffic may make reasonable regulations for the separation of the races on their boats."

17. "Nine states have special Jim Crow laws requiring a separation of races on motor carriers." They are: Alabama, Arkansas,Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, and Virginia. "The Alabama, Mississippi, North Carolina, and Oklahoma acts require separate waiting room facilities at bus stations."

18. "There are no Jim Crow laws applying to air carriers." Commercial air lines "may mix or segregate the races as they wish."

19. "It is an established fact that a policy of racial separation and segregation has been adopted in respect to the inmates of state-established charitable and penal institutions throughout the South. The same is also true of that region which is occupied by what are commonly known as the border states."

20. "Segregation in convict camps is commanded by statute in Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, North Carolina, and Texas; and in jails of Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Louisiana, Mississippi, and North Carolina..."

21. "All of the former slaveholding states, most of the states of the Far West (Kansas, New Mexico and Washington excepted) beyond Iowa and Minnesota, and one lone middle western jurisdiction, Indiana, prohibit marriages between whites and Negroes.

22. "Fifteen states, most of which are in the Far West, have enacted laws which expressly or impliedly forbid marriages between persons of the Caucasian and Mongolian races." A few states have prohibitions against marriages of whites and Malays or Indians.

23. "The problem of industrial segregation in the South is usually left in the hands of private business."

24. "In Alabama, Arkansas, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Mississippi, Missouri, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, West Virginia, and the District of Columbia all public schools must be separate and pupils of the white and Negro races are not permitted to attend the same school."

"Ten states, Connecticut, Illinois, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, New Jersey, New York, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, and Washington, either by statute or constitutional provision, provide that there shall be no racial discrimination in the public schools -- or else the state laws are subject to this interpretation. In all of these states except New York, which has a separate school law, segregation of the Negroes in separate rooms or buildings is not permitted.... This is also the law even in a number of states where there are no statutes forbidding discrimination."

25. There seems to be no general and common approach to the problem of the separation of races in the ownership and occupancy of real property.

Frequently the inclusion of restrictive covenants in deeds is used to accomplish the separation of races in places of residence. "A typical covenant of this kind provides that the property shall not be owned or occupied by persons of the Negro race."

A SAMPLE OF LAWS ON THE SEPARATION OF RACES
IN TRANSPORTATION IN THE SOUTHERN REGION

The following statutory provisions are taken from Charles S. Mangum, Jr., The Legal Status of the Negro (1940).

1. "The southern and border states have sought to handle the matter (of racial antipathy) be means of Jim Crow laws and regulations which make it unlawful for any carrier . . . to transport white and colored passengers in the same vehicle or the same portion thereof."

2. "Oklahoma and all former slave-holding states, with the exception of Delaware, Missouri, and West Virginia, have made provision by statute for an enforced separation of the white and Negro races in railways operated in the jurisdiction. . ."

   "Most of the statutes contain provisions punishing the carrier for a failure to carry out the terms of the law, making such a dereliction of duty a misdemeanor."

   Members of one race are not permitted to "remain" in the coach, or coaches, provided for members of another race in the Southern Region without likelihood of penalty or charge of violation of the regulations of these states.

3. "In Georgia a special statute makes compulsory the separation of the races on Pullmans."

4. Alabama, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maryland, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Tennessee, Virginia "give express permission to use partitioned or compartment cars, one portion for whites and the other for Negroes."

   Kentucky, Maryland, Oklahoma, Texas and Virginia "require signs designating the race which is to use the particular coach or compartment."

5. The following southern states having railway Jim Crow laws also require separate accommodations on street railways: "Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Virginia. Alabama, Kentucky, and Maryland are exceptions here."

   Note: A recent study of the city of Jacksonville, Florida, showed that the city law does not require separation of races in local bus transportation, but that the races nevertheless follow the usual separation pattern in the use of these facilities.

6. Arkansas, Tennessee, and Virginia "give the conductors on street railways authority to change the line of division between the races," and the statutes of Georgia, North Carolina, and South Carolina could easily be so interpreted.

OUR CONFLICTING RACIAL POLICIES

WILL W. ALEXANDER

WHILE there is nowhere any official statement of the policy of this country as to its Negro citizens, an examination of our actual dealing with Negroes indicates that over the years unofficial policies have been developed. In fact, there have been two well-defined policies in race relations and only two.

The first of these is the policy that Negroes shall be educated. Negro education had its beginnings in the activities of Northern churches when, immediately following the Civil War, they established schools for Negroes in the South. These schools have had a profound influence. Their establishment was followed by the inauguration of separate state-supported schools for Negroes in the South, and by the opening to Negroes of schools in the rest of the country. So firmly has the idea of educating Negroes taken hold that today the annual expenditure in the Southern states for the higher education of Negroes exceeds the total income of all private schools for Negroes. The increase in educational opportunity has caused the Negro illiteracy rate to drop from 95 per cent at emancipation to less than 10 per cent today. And the Southern states are showing a tendency to move toward equalization of educational funds for Negro and white schools.

Everywhere the idea of education for Negroes is accepted as part of our American way. Howard, Fisk, and Atlanta Universities have come to take their place as institutions of higher learning which are making an important contribution not only to Negro life but to national life. In the great graduate schools of the North, wherever knowledge is pursued, increasingly Negro scholars are doing creditable work. In many cases these men and women are doing superior work in fields that have nothing to do with Negroes as such; they are contributing to the enrichment of American culture. The superior quality of the educated American Negroes always impresses foreigners as a striking aspect of American life.

FOREIGNERS are also puzzled by America's second policy regarding her Negro population: segregation. Segregation is not only Southern, but national—it varies not so much in degree as in method in different sections of the country. In the South segregation in schools, transportation, entertainment, and community services is maintained by law and by custom. In the North segregation is maintained by social pressure and by such quasi-legal arrangements as restrictive covenants. In connection with many public services, such as hotels and restaurants, segregation is as rigid in the North as in the South. Thus segregation is accepted in all sections of the country to about the same degree that education is provided and accepted.

Much of the uncertainty and tension in connection with our American race relations grows out of the conflict in these policies. Education is the most hopeful aspect of American race relations. Segregation is one of the most puzzling aspects of American life, and one of the most difficult questions in American race relations. It is generally recognized by Negroes as their number-one problem and is insisted upon by many whites as the one thing in the American race scene that can never be modified or dispensed with. Here we have the greatest conflict between our professed democratic doctrines and our actual practice in day-by-day living. Segregation tends to defeat the inspiring work of Negro education. Unless the problem of segregation can be solved, there is no hope of any alleviation of the race problem in America.

II

THE fact that segregation exists is bad enough. To make matters worse the patterns of segregation are so inconsistent as to be completely bewildering to Negroes. Often they cannot tell just what is expected of them. For example, in one railroad station in the South, Negro and white passengers have to board the railroad trains through separate gates; but leaving the trains in this station, they use the same gate.

In some Southern communities, Negroes are supposed to sit in the front of the streetcar or bus in order to maintain racial separation; in others, they must be seated in the rear of the car.

In some office buildings in the South, Negroes have access to the general elevator service. In other buildings, a special elevator is provided which carries both white and colored passengers. Occasionally special elevators marked "Negroes and Freight" are provided.

In the past, the use of Pullmans by Negroes has been usually confined to "Lower 13"—which means that an influential Negro traveler could occupy the drawing room for the price of a lower. Now, in some cities, Negroes can secure Pullman reservations.

Both North and South, Negroes are usually denied service by hotels and restaurants that serve the general public. Occasionally, however, if sponsored by some white person with sufficient influence, they are admitted as a special privilege to limited service. This lack of consistency and uniformity occurs all the way through the pattern of American Negro segregation and is very confusing and irritating to Negroes and to white persons who are with them.

MUCH more important than these vagaries is the fact that segregation has meant inferior service to Negroes. The constitutions of most Southern states require that there shall be equal, but separate, schools for Negroes. But an examination of the expenditures for Negro and white education in those same states, and the cities within the states, indicates that segregation in education has meant not equal but inferior service to Negroes. Studies of nine Southern states in 1940 showed average annual expenditures of $58.69 per white student and only $18.82 per Negro. In Mississippi the discrepancy was much greater—$52.01 compared to $7.36.

In cities North and South, housing is far poorer for Negroes than for whites. Colored people are largely forced to live in slum areas which have been abandoned by other groups. And Negroes who are financially able to secure better accommodations find it almost impossible to do so outside the segregated areas. Residential segregation has forced Negroes to pay higher rents and higher purchase prices for inferior accommodations in every city where they seek housing. Residential segregation, as well as administrative arrangement, has led to a definite tendency in Northern cities toward segregated Negro schools. Since Negroes are usually required to live in the overcrowded sections of these cities, separate schools for Negroes in Northern cities are usually housed in run-down buildings and are similarly overcrowded. In Chicago, sixteen public schools have double shifts—all of them Negro schools.

Where segregation has been enforced in transportation, Negro travelers have had less space per traveler, older and less sanitary cars, less safety, and less courtesy and consideration from the servants of the railroads—not only the ticket sellers but the brakemen and flagmen, who usually occupy much of the space set aside for Negro travelers.

IN MANY ways the most subtle and most damaging form of segregation results from the fact that while educating Negroes for participation in American life, we have denied them free participation in the economic life of the country. Consciously and unconsciously we have developed, both North and South, so-called Negro jobs which tend to freeze Negro employment in the lower income brackets and to exclude Negroes from an opportunity to acquire skills in other than the poorer jobs. This has tended to lead to segregation within the labor movement; this, until the coming of the CIO with its new patterns of organization, was a means of excluding Negroes permanently from large areas of employment in organized industries. It left Negroes little choice but to become strike-breakers, divided the ranks of labor, and weakened the labor movement in America perceptibly. Even when labor unions were friendly, qualified Negroes were often turned away by employers.

There are some white people who assume that we can have two economic systems—one for Negroes and another for whites. A very charming lady in a discussion of the problems of Negro employment said, "Why don't Negroes employ each other?" When it was called to her attention that there were great difficulties as to capital and organization, she said, "Why, Marian Anderson makes lots of money. She could use that to set up business concerns to meet the economic needs of Negroes." This is quoted because it is typical of much of the thinking on this question.

In an effort to solve their economic problems, Negroes have established some business concerns that employ Negroes and serve the Negro community. The Negro insurance companies are the most successful of these enterprises and the best of them have made large contributions to sustaining the economic life of the American Negroes. But to adopt economic segregation as a means of solving the economic problems of Negroes bears on its very face the stamp of futility. There can be no adequate provision for the economic life of these thirteen million Americans except as they share in the general economic life of the country.

III

THE segregation of Negroes in jobs, their exclusion from free access to the ways in which other citizens earn their living, has meant permanent poverty, degradation, and defeat—not only for the majority of Negroes, but for other large sections of the American people One of the causes for the general poverty of the South is the failure to develop the economic potentialities of Southern Negroes. By allowing the Negro to remain at a low economic level, the South has kept itself on the bottom rung of the economic ladder. Slavery was responsible for the plight of the poor white in the South, and the low wages and generally low standards of living for Negroes since Emancipation have added greatly to the difficulty of improving the status of the Southern white worker. He is perhaps the poorest and least skilled white man in the world. He will remain so until better economic advantages are available both for him and his Negro neighbor. Poverty cannot be segregated—North or South. Economic realists in the South admit privately that if the South is to succeed, something must be done about the economic status of Negroes. An effort to deal realistically with the question of Southern poverty will reveal that segregation is wasteful, expensive, and economically unsound.

Segregation has impeded the nation in the use of its manpower in the war effort. When the manpower shortage developed, it was discovered that, because they had been denied free access to work experience, many of our Negro workers were lacking in the required skills. But a greater handicap was the fact that in many plants even qualified workers were not accepted, or were accepted only in the lower, unskilled brackets. Their employment and advancement were opposed by other workers and by many employers, who, despite the long and creditable history of Negro workers in this country, insisted that Negroes could not build ships and planes and guns. Finally the President, in order to meet the emergency, was forced to issue Executive Order 8802, requiring that all war contracts should provide that there should be no discrimination in employment "because of race, creed, or national origin," and that an agency—the Fair Employment Practice Committee—should be set up to enforce this provision. While this has resulted in wider and more intelligent use of Negro labor, much time and manpower had already been wasted by the time the order was issued. And the new arrangement has been only partially successful because of continued opposition and the limited authority of the Committee.

OUR American policy of segregating Negroes has created an almost impossible task for the armed forces. Because of this, in the past the Navy has used Negroes only in the most limited way. The Army has, on the other hand, used Negroes as enlisted men and, to a limited degree, as officers—but always in segregated units. This arrangement has been expensive and difficult to administer, and has limited the use which the Army could make of Negro troops.

Because of the special conditions under which the Negro soldier serves and the attitudes which he encounters outside the Army camps, it is difficult for him to develop a high morale. He feels that he is being asked to give his service and perhaps his life for a country that guarantees him only second-class citizenship. His segregation in the Army symbolizes the limitations he suffers as a citizen. He often feels that he is a limited kind of a soldier—outside military reservations his uniform does not secure for him the respect and consideration given to other men in uniform. In World War II, it has been reported that in some unusual cases prisoners of war have been admitted to eating places in which Negro men in the uniform of their country have been denied service because of their color. If American Negro soldiers could fight in this war in voluntary, unsegregated units of Americans or with the French or Russians, the question of their morale would be less of a problem. They have already made excellent records in combat, and on today's battlefields are proving themselves able fighting men. But our discriminatory policies—our refusal to use them as widely as their capabilities deserve—are handicapping the war effort. The Negro contribution to it would be much greater if we would only allow it to be.

THERE is no better evidence of our conflicting racial policies than in the churches which have been the champions of Negro education. Certainly, what the church has done for Negroes has been largely within the pattern of segregation. This is especially true of the Protestant churches. It seems to be less true of the Catholic church. The difference is to be found in the fact that, in most cases, a Protestant church is to some extent a social organization as well as a place of worship; the Catholic church, with its emphasis on worship, is more nearly an altar before which all men are equal.

On many Protestant churches are announcements to the effect that "all are welcome." A Negro reading this announcement knows that, in most cases, if he turned up at any of the activities he would not be welcome or the embarrassment on the part of the preacher and the congregation would be such as to destroy any sense of spiritual fellowship. These churches give money for the support of Negro schools, hospitals, and orphanages, but would be embarrassed at accepting Negro Christians into full fellowship in their church activities. In most Southern Protestant churches, Negro worshipers would be seated in the gallery or otherwise segregated.

In many American cities, Negro communities have grown by infiltration into old communities formerly occupied by whites. In spite of the fact that Negroes are Protestants and speak the same language as the old congregations, the churches in these areas do not, as a rule, offer any service to the incoming Negroes. The advent of Negroes is not looked upon as an opportunity for service, but as a reason for moving on.

In institutions owned and operated by the church, the segregation pattern is usually accepted—at least in a modified form. One of the largest church-controlled universities in the country, while accepting Negro students, does not allow them to live in its dormitories. Church-controlled hospitals do not, as a rule, admit Negro physicians for practice or train Negro nurses. Many of these church-controlled institutions own real estate, held in the form of endowment. Restrictive covenants as to Negro occupancy usually cover such property.

One of the great inconveniences to Negroes is the general denial of service by hotels and public eating places, in violation of the civil rights laws. The American population is mobile. Our type of life necessitates travel. The result is our remarkable hotel system, upon which large sections of our population depend for comfort and health. In being denied access to this public service, Negroes are greatly handicapped. Anyone who knows the facts wonders how even so distinguished a person as Marian Anderson can stand up under the hardships of travel which she encounters because of the lack of hotel service.

Segregation carried to its logical conclusion is often dramatized by cruel and inhuman aspects. A few years ago a graduate of Fisk University, Miss Julie Dericott, a young woman of charm and culture, was seriously injured in an automobile accident in north Georgia. She was taken to the nearby hospital, where emergency treatment was requested. She was very fair but when it was discovered that she was classified as a Negro, she was refused emergency treatment. She died on the long journey to Atlanta attempting to reach the nearest hospital known to give emergency treatment to colored people.

Recently in Atlanta a Negro girl stepped off the streetcar on one of the wider streets. A speeding driver knocked her down and left her lying unconscious. A crowd gathered and one white woman who had seen the accident requested that an ambulance be called. The ambulance came but the driver, seeing that the victim was a Negro girl, said, "We can't haul a nigger," and drove away, leaving the victim of the accident by the roadside. Such incidents are not isolated. They happen frequently and seem to be an inevitable consequence of segregation as it works out in practice in many sections of America. Most white people are not aware of them.

IV

Segregation in the South not only separates the races but symbolizes the idea of the inevitable inferiority of Negroes. It "keeps the Negro in his place," not only on the streetcars and busses, but in the social and economic system. It is more effective as a symbol than as a means of preventing contact between the races. In fact, racial contacts are more intimate in the South than in any other section of the country. Southerners as a rule do not object to contact with Negroes so long as the idea of Negro inferiority is maintained. Segregation does this. This fact explains why the South has never claimed that under segregation there are equal services for the races.

Under the new pressures that have come with the war to save democracy and the stronger pressures that will come when the war is won, the South will probably attempt to attain equal services within the framework of segregation. There are two reasons why this will not be possible—one psychological and the other practical. There will be resistance in the South to any modification of the symbol of the Negro's inferiority. When a person speaks of the Negro "getting out of hand," he usually means getting out of his inferior status. Therefore, equal service would destroy to some extent one of the chief functions of segregation. If Negroes in the South had equal service under segregation, they would have gone a long way toward "getting out of hand," because the symbolic function of segregation would have lost much of its meaning.

As a practical matter, separate but equal service under segregation cannot be rendered. Such service would require, for example, the duplication of the present most expensive phases of transportation, and the duplication of the state university systems, already poorly supported. Separate and equal services for the races in the South, or any other section, are a luxury which cannot be afforded.

It is generally accepted that human beings behave better in the long run when they enjoy a maximum of freedom. Human relations are certainly more satisfactory when they are a result of free choice. Left with the maximum amount of freedom, white and colored Americans would probably adjust amicably most of the difficulties that arose between them. Under the denial of freedom which segregation enforces, there is constant and increasing friction. An examination of incidents where tension has become acute will indicate that most of the tensions are involved in and aggravated by segregation. Rioting is less frequent in mixed residential neighborhoods than elsewhere. Segregation accentuates unduly the racial factors in our civilization and obscures the wide cultural differences that exist within the racial groups. To many white people, every Negro looks like every other Negro and any white man, no matter how unworthy, is better than any Negro, however distinguished. Segregation tends to make every row between a white man and a Negro, whatever the initial cause may have been, a race quarrel.

Left free, human beings group themselves according to their tastes, interests, and cultural backgrounds. American Negroes are not seeking an opportunity to mingle with whites. They desire freedom and opportunity to live as Americans. If there were no arbitrary segregation, common interests and common backgrounds would probably lead most American Negroes to develop their own way of living and find much of their association among themselves as other groups do.

Whenever the matter of freedom or equal opportunity for Negroes is discussed, the question of intermarriage usually arises. It will probably be sufficient to point out that miscegenation in this country has already gone a long way —chiefly in those very sections where the relations between whites and Negroes have been "least free" and where segregation has been most deeply rooted in law and custom. The majority of our colored people in America today are the result of racial intermixture which has taken place under segregation.

There are some evidences of changes in the pattern of American segregation—small but significant. There are evidences of dissatisfaction with it. One such evidence is the very vehement declaration by some that segregation must not and cannot be modified in any way. The advocates of segregation protest too much. In the very loudness and continuousness of their protests is one of the best evidences that the country is not satisfied, and that segregation is not succeeding.

The change in government attitude is especially significant. In the past the federal authorities, on the whole, accepted the segregated pattern of employment in government. Government work was open to Negroes only in the lower service brackets. There were many Negro messengers, porters, charwomen, but outside of the postal service no Negroes were employed in positions that required education or technical training. Negroes were excluded from restaurants in government buildings. Since the beginning of World War II this has changed, and today there are in government departments large numbers of Negro clerical workers and an increasing number of Negroes doing technical work. Here the educated Negroes are finding an opportunity for work in which they can use the training they have acquired. The federal government will continue to be one of the large employers in the country, and its employment patterns should have real influence on other employers.

In the long run, it may turn out that the new attitude of labor toward Negro workers, as expressed by the CIO, will have more significance than the changes that have taken place in government employment patterns. Officially, the CIO has abolished the color line as to opportunity and privileges for Negroes in it unions. An educational division has been created in part for the purpose of bringing the rank and file of the CIO to accept the idea of the essential unity of all American workers without regard to race. Negro workers are finding in the CIO a champion where they most need it, among the masses of workers to which most Negroes belong. The CIO is, at the moment, the most promising force for correcting the inconsistencies in our racial patterns. Furthermore, its policy is already having an effect upon older, more conservative unions and is giving support to many liberal-minded employers who are willing to give Negro workers a chance.

Another source of encouragement is the growing pressure within and without the South for some kind of change. This will probably lead to an effort to furnish equal but separate services to the races. While such an effort cannot succeed, it will certainly result in some improvement of service to Negroes under segregation. In the long run, it may lead to the modification of the present patterns of segregation in the South. How rapidly and how far these changes will go depends upon many factors, chief of which are the strength of the growing liberal movement in the South and the amount of political influence Southern Negroes acquire.

V

In the acquisition of political power lies one of the Negro's great hopes for improving his status. Certainly the Negro's vote in border and Northern states will hold for him the gains made in government employment. The organized political power of the CIO is on his side; through its affiliation with Negro political groups and its fight in behalf of all liberal movements, it gives the Negro real help in obtaining the things all citizens want. By the strength of their votes and increasing political representation, Negroes could get better schools, housing, health facilities—all the public services. And they could use their influence to assure the enforcement of the civil rights statutes that are already enacted.

For example, New York is America's most liberal city. Negroes in New York have more political influence than in any other city in America. New York is a city of hotels which deny service to Negroes. New York State has good civil rights laws. It would seem reasonable to expect that before much longer, New York hotels may find themselves liberalizing their service to Negro travelers. Such a thing—if it could be brought about—would have an influence that would be far-reaching. To achieve it would be a good use of the power of New York's able Negro political leadership.

Under the Constitution, as liberally interpreted by our present Supreme Court, many of the legal devices by which segregation is protected could no doubt be declared unconstitutional if properly presented to the Court. This has already been done in important fields. Even though the Gaines decision has not yet put any colored students in the University of Missouri, the fact that prevailing systems of segregation in higher education are unconstitutional has caused uneasiness in the states where such systems prevail. Since the Supreme Court decision declaring the "white" Texas primary unconstitutional, it is apparent that political participation of Negroes in the South has been greatly accelerated.

There is no doubt that the Negro vote, the power of labor, and government attitudes can profoundly affect our racial practices. If the church with its strong influence also took a firm stand, the process could be accelerated. And there are some indications that church leaders are becoming aware of the feebleness of their position. One well-known theological seminary in the South has seriously considered service to Negroes. Opposition was so strong that the idea had to be given up. The American Protestant church has ambitions for extension into Africa and Asia. Its racial policies at home stand in the way. Increasing numbers of American church leaders realize the far-reaching effect of American racial segregation on the influence of the church abroad. Because of this, within the next few years the patterns of segregation within the church and church institutions in America may be greatly modified in the direction of a more democratic and more Christian practice. The church has wide contacts with many classes and kinds of people in this country. Whatever it might do in the interest of a policy of non-segregation within the local churches and church institutions would be leaven widely placed in American life.

Most white Americans are puzzled and alarmed by the impatience and bitterness of large sections of our Negro population. They feel that Negroes are no longer pleasant to live with. Whites are inclined to charge this to some subversive influence from the outside. Many Southerners say that agitators from the North are responsible for stirring up Negroes in the South. In other sections of the country, Negro resentment and unrest are usually charged to Communists or whatever bogy happens to be current in the mind of the community.

That there is unrest and bitterness among our Negro population is a fact. This unrest is to be found not just among Negro intellectuals; it exists also in the alleys of our Negro ghettos and among the remote and inarticulate Negro sharecroppers and common laborers. It will not pass with the war. Negroes were probably never so docile as they seemed. The trouble is that they behave like other human beings. In subjecting Negroes to American education we have made them Americans. So completely American are they that they will not submit passively to being pushed around as they are under segregation. Educational opportunity for the common man is a part of the American way of life. In giving it to Negroes, we have let them in on the meaning of democracy. Their unrest under their special limitations is the result not of sinister influence from the outside, but of our education, which, with all its faults, is the best thing in our democracy.

The education of Negroes in America has not been a mistake. Here we see American faith and American idealism at their best. Segregation, on the other hand, is rooted in fear and in doubt as to whether our democratic principles will really work. It remains to be seen whether or not our faith in democracy is strong enough to overcome our fears as to what may be some of its consequences.

The Transmission of Racial Attitudes Among White Southerners

We are not concerned this afternoon with the content of racial attitudes which find expression in the behavior of Southern white people toward Negroes, nor with an appraisal of these attitudes; rather, we are interested in discovering, as far as may be, the mechanisms of transmission of racial attitudes among white Southerners. An historical consideration of the problem of the cultural education of the Southern white person would examine those influences which have built up, through time, the accepted white philosophy of race;[1] another approach is through a study of the forces which transmit that philosophy to the individual born into the society. The latter approach is used here in an effort to find how the white child finds his place in relation to the Negro.

Because racial learning is but one aspect of social learning and not a thing apart from it, an understanding of the ways in which the child learns his racial role necessarily involves or presupposes knowledge of the mechanisms of social learning itself. Learning that one is white is part of the process of learning the identity of the self and the symbols and expectations appropriate to the position of that self. The racial role is but one of many which the individual must learn, and behavior proper to these roles is socially defined. Davis points out that "socialization is not simply the process of learning the specific skills of tool-using, language, and social organization, but implies as well the learning of these cultural behaviors as they are defined by a particular society."[2] The society in which a child is reared has ready for him the answer to his question, "Who am I?" The answer is different in different contexts and relationships, and the child must discover, in a variety of ways, the answer appropriate to his immediate situation.

We have asserted that racial learning is but one aspect of social learning, and we have indicated that in learning his racial role a child finds part of the answer to the question of his identity. A major task for the developing child is the definition of his relationship to people about him. In answering the question, "Who am I?" he must necessarily answer its corollary, "And who are all of those?" He does not make these definitions alone, of course; most of them are made for him by his society through the medium of his parents, his peers, and others with whom he comes into contact. To say, though, that the child does not make his own definitions does not explain how he learns them, and this is the problem with which we are immediately concerned. We must approach the acquisition of racial attitudes as an aspect of the emergence of a sense of self.

That racial attitudes are involved in a sense of self is demonstrated in the following excerpts from interviews with Southern white young people.

> People who say "nigger" say it, I think, to make themselves feel superior. I don't feel superior, but I don't feel inferior, either, and I don't have to belittle other people to make myself big.
> I feel a protective attitude toward the Negro; I always have. But I'll have to admit that I enjoy being of the Old South, too. I know it is a pose, or at least I think it is; yet it has glamor, and I am afraid I am duped by it.
> I can remember in Junior High School being so disgusted with the kind of kid who blustered about, saying, "Why, if a nigger gets fresh with me, I'll break his neck!" Perhaps I am a little more kindly toward them because I so dislike that kind of behavior. I look on it as lower class behavior and lower class attitude. . . I don't like it.
> Perhaps my attitude has been altered by the fact that I expect to be a singer. There is no denying that in the field of music there are some great artists who are Negroes. It would be tragic to deny them their rightful place, and so deny all of us the pleasure of their talent. Then, I think that if they are to be allowed to have positions of prominence in my field, there is no reason why they should not be recognized in other fields. I guess everyone starts his thinking from himself.

A young woman who attended a summer school session at a Northern University had this to say about an experience in the classroom:

> * * * We were seated in alphabetical order, and a friend of mine and I were in seats next to Negroes. After class we went to the professor and asked to be moved. He wanted to know why. I said, "We are from the South, and we aren't used to sitting by Negroes." He was so mad at us! He said we were prejudiced and ignorant, and he said all kinds of things to us. My friend said, "Yes, I know we are all you say; but that is the way we are, and we aren't used to sitting by Negroes." Well, he raved some more, and finally I said, "I'm sorry that I feel this way, but I do feel this way, and if I can't have a different seat, I'll have to take a different course." He talked to us a long time about how wrong we were, but he moved us, and after that he was real nice to me.

Each of the statements given above is an attempt on the part of the person making it to define his attitude toward race, but it is something more than that, too; it is a public announcement of the kind of person the speaker thinks of himself as being, a projection of the picture which he has of himself. Racial attitudes, then, seem to be acquired as a part of the individual's attitude toward himself, as one of the areas of definition of his relationships with other people. It is important that we should try to understand how the sense of self arises, and it is to this question that we now turn our attention.

One of the most rewarding approaches to the problem of the emergence of self is that of George Herbert Mead,[3] and it is his concepts and his framework of analysis which we shall use in an effort to understand how the racial role becomes incorporated into the individual's sense of self. Mead points out that we learn who we are (i,e., what kind of person we are) from the reactions of other people toward us. And it is in this way that in any given situation we learn to assess our own behavior. Other individuals indicate to us, by their reactions, the meaning of our behavior; and by taking the role of the other, we are able to make indications to ourselves which serve as guides for future behavior. Sometimes these indications are made in the form of direct verbal responses; often they are but behavioral responses to our own behavior.

Where racial attitudes are concerned, direct instruction seems to play a relatively unimportant part. The most perceptive and self-analytical of the young people interviewed often are unable to produce any memories of direct teaching with respect to racial attitude. For the most part, verbal instruction is avoided, and even when it is given, it is usually justified in other than racial terms. The one exception to this seems to occur with respect to the term "lady". Over and over again the young people interviewed told of quite explicit instruction in the use of this word.

> Once when I was a little girl a Negro woman came to the door. I told my aunt a lady wanted to see her. She went to the door, and when she came back she told me that I should have said a woman was there to see her. I wondered about it a little, but I think I didn't question it.
> Once when we were in the car, I said, "Oh, Mother, look! That colored lady has on a dress just like yours." Well, Mother was a little upset about the dress, but she didn't say so. She said, "Agnes, call them colored women. There are no colored ladies."
> I remember when I learned that lesson. I told Mother the wash-lady was here. She said to say "woman", and I asked why. Mother explained that you never say Negro lady. She said "lady" was a term of respect applied to few white ladies and to no Negroes at all.
> About five years ago we were riding through Memphis one day, and I saw a Negro standing on the street corner. She was all dressed up, and she looked very pretty. I said to Mother, "Isn't that a pretty Negro lady?" Mother called me down for it. She told me to say woman. I wanted to know why, and she didn't answer me. I said, "I don't believe there is any reason. I think you just don't like them -- like Grandmother." Golly, was I sorry I'd said that! Mother lectured me about respect for my elders, and she said if I ever spoke to her like that again she'd punish me severely.

It is interesting to note that instruction was given only after a child had erred in his racial behavior. In the majority of cases reported, no explanation was given except in general terms, that these are accepted usages. If a child was not satisfied, but sought further reasons, he was told that ladies are always white; and if he questioned this judgment, he was punished for disrespectful behavior toward his elders. The rationale for the punishment was given in terms of the younger-older person relationship, but the association of the punishment with a transgression of racial patterns did not fail. In the last instance reported above, this association was strong enough to stop further questioning:

> Not long after that I came in late to lunch one day. Everyone had eaten except the cook, and I started to sit at the table with her and eat. Mother asked her to move. I didn't understand it, and I was just about to ask why when I remembered the Memphis incident and decided not to. So I did not protest. But I was embarrassed; I didn't think Mother should have done that. She might have told me later not to do it again.

In general, it seems that verbal indications that Negroes are different from whites are used only when the child has violated the racial folkways. Every instance of explicit verbal instruction, as reported by these young people, was preceded by some such incident.

> One time when I was leaving to go to kindergarten, I kissed my nurse. Father waited until I was in the car with him, and then he told me not to. I asked why, but Father is very domineering, and he told me I was too young to understand and that I'd just have to do as he said.

> I don't dare open my mouth on the subject at home. I did once, but I was already in disgrace. Daddy wasn't speaking to me at the time, but when I said I thought Negroes should have the vote, he spoke. And he told me never to discuss the subject in his house again. He thinks the professors and student body at college are all communists.

While it is generally true that direct verbal instruction is seldom used as a method for teaching racial attitudes, it is not true that verbal indications of an indirect kind are avoided. Indeed, indirect verbal instruction, given by the simple expedient of letting the child "overhear" adult conversation, accounts for most of the stereotyped verbalizations in terms of which young people express their feelings about Negroes. The importance of the kind of adult talk a child is allowed to hear can not be overemphasized. Certainly, it is not accident, except in a few cases, which determines what the child hears. Ordinarily parents are very careful to see to it that their children hear from them only those things considered appropriate to their years. Perhaps these decisions are not always made at a conscious level, but when adults talk freely about sexual looseness and immorality among Negroes, while maintaining a strict silence before their children on the subject of sexual irregularities among white people, it is difficult to escape the judgment that they make this difference because they want their children to believe the one and to disbelieve the other. Reconstruction stories are kept vividly alive not because of historical interest, but because they provide the emotional set which any good Southerner is supposed to have. Shortcomings and deficiencies of Negro servants are paraded, stereotyped, and exaggerated because such a picture of the Negro is appropriate to the treatment accorded him, and this treatment is deemed necessary to "keep the Negro in his place." When a Negro who obviously does not fit the stereotype comes upon the scene, he is explained away as an exception, but for the most part white children simply do not see these exceptional Negroes. Judgments are given the child not in any direct way, but by allowing him to listen to adult talk without participating in it.

> I knew Alma lived with men. It's funny, I never heard much talk about the morals of white people; it came to me as a decided shock that white people are often sexually immoral, but I have always known — or nearly always — that colored people are not hampered by morals. I never heard any tales of sexual immorality involving white people until I was considered grown.
> I have heard lots of stories about their criminality, about how they cut each other up and cut white people up. I've heard about that lynching a hundred times. What did I hear? Well, they told me that a nigger shot a policeman and they found him and shot him and hanged him on a telephone pole down there by Link's Cafe. They say the Negroes behaved for a long time after that and they were scared to come out for a week or two. Every time the men at the store start talking about how uppity niggers are now, someone tells about that lynching.
> I have very vivid recollections of Reconstruction stories. The Negroes were hateful and cruel to white people then. There is much unrest in Memphis at the present time. The Negroes think they can do just anything. They are forming clubs: there is the Bump Club, you know about that, and then all these Eleanor Clubs.

The following excerpt from a diary kept during the collecting of the interviews is revealing on this point.

> Tonight I went to Bea's for the evening. She and her mother were very much elated that at last they had found a Negro woman who had agreed to come to the house and do the laundry. All of us were sitting on the front porch, Bea, her mother, Sue and I. Mrs. White was laying plans for the morrow. "Bea," she said, "remind me to lock up the silver tomorrow. We don't know a thing about this nigger." Then she turned to me, "You know, you just can't trust any of them. I always lock up my good silver."

None of Mrs. White's remarks was addressed to her granddaughter, Sue, yet none had escaped her. Listening to the casual conversation of adults, she had been told once again that Negroes are untrustworthy. This lesson has been driven home every time a strange Negro has entered the house. She, like other children, mimics her mother and her grandmother, even in behavior and attitudes of which she is critical. When children seek to identify themselves with others, a common manifestation of this identification is found in imitative behavior. It is not surprising that a young person who has observed that a certain kind of behavior in an adult brings approval from his associates should "try on" this behavior, for this is the way in which a child grows up -- by practicing grown-up behavior, seeking to call out in others the desired responses. Such imitation is often the occasion for direct instruction against it, as when children begin to give orders to the servants. Then the parents make it quite clear that giving orders is the special prerogative of adult members of the household. In this case, however, the child's behavior is socially incorrect only in that he has overstepped the boundaries of his age-grade, and he is made to understand that such behavior must wait upon maturity.

Another kind of indirect indication is seen in instructions given to children that they are not to make disparaging remarks about Negroes; rather, they must not let the Negro know that he is considered inferior. Such instruction cannot but make the inferiority an unquestioned fact to the white child.

> Servants should be well cared-for, and they should be treated with consideration. We should always be considerate of their feelings; they are human beings. I was always expected to obey my nurse, and I was not allowed to abuse her.
> You know, I think from the fact that I was told so often that I must treat colored people with consideration, I got the idea that I could mistreat them if I wanted to.

Here is a very telling clue to the way in which race attitudes are instilled. The first quotation suggests respect for the Negro's feelings and rights, yet the overtone points unmistakably to the essential helplessness, servility, and inferiority which are supposed to characterize the Negro servant. There is a great difference in the respect required of young people for elders of their own family and social rank and the consideration invoked in behalf of serving people. It is one thing to respect the rights of those who hold unquestioned authority; it is another to respect the rights of those who owe those rights to the protection of an authoritative group which claims the child as its own. The white child becomes "Miss" or "Mister" very early to the servant in the home, and while this is not purely a racial phenomenon, it probably occurs earlier when the servants are Negroes than when they are members of the dominant racial group.

It should be pointed out that the servant, himself, having accepted his role in relation to the various members of the family, becomes a teacher to the child. A maid, nurse, cook, or yard man may give very direct training with regard to the expected behavior of the young white person. This is especially true when the Negro undertakes to train the child in "manners".

> I had a Negro nurse, Aunt Jennie; she nursed both my brother and me. When the doorbell rang, we wanted to answer the door. She said we were not supposed to. She told me I had to be a lady, and if I wasn't one, she would use the hairbrush on me.

Rosie is scornful of the lack of manners of young Negroes. She calls me "Elsie", and that is all right, but she thinks it is disgraceful when younger colored girls call white girls by their first names.

We have reviewed at some length examples of verbal indications, both direct and indirect, as they relate to the problem of the transmission of racial attitudes. As important as these methods are in teaching the Southern white child his racial role, they account for a very limited proportion of the total racial learning of the white Southerner. It has been pointed out earlier that the occasion for most direct verbal instruction is some kind of infraction of the rules governing the behavior of white people in their relationships with Negroes. It is the behavior itself which is most carefully taught. The prevailing norms of behavior provide a frame of reference within which the child makes his judgments, and the surer he is in the practice of these norms, the more likely he is to find a rationale which defends them.

For the most part the South does not teach attitudes to its white children, nor is such teaching necessary; in establishing practices, by precept, by example, and by law, which separate the races and make distinctions between interracial and intraracial behavior, the South has established a way of life which can have but one meaning for those who diligently practice it. And to escape such practice has, until very recent times, been extremely difficult, for racial etiquette has been woven into the entire institutional fabric of the Southern culture.

A child who is constantly treated with deference by members of a group visibly distinguishable from himself on physical grounds can hardly escape the conclusion that he is superior to members of that group. If, in addition, in learning his various roles, he is able to evoke deference by imitating the dominant example of his elders, this conception of himself is reinforced.

If in public transportation his accomodations are separate from and superior to those of the other racial group, he is likely to take this difference as a matter of course and to accept it as his due. Once the expected behavior is established, the individual can be counted on to defend it, for he must do so if any question arises which threatens his ego, and this will certainly occur if his behavior is called into question. For of what does an individual's ego consist, if not of his conception of himself in relation to others; and this relationship is a behavioral relationship. It happens that in the South great importance is attached to "manners", but manners are, of course, simply the rules which define the relationship of the individual to others and which call for certain specific behaviors as indicating this relationship.

> I guess the thing that is stressed most in a Southern girl's training is manners, etiquette. I think it is very important to be sure that your behavior is correct.
> You know, where you are makes a lot of difference about how you behave. It's all very well to say I'm for this and against that, but actually, all of us -- or I should say most of us -- fear criticism from the people we must live with. I sat down by a Negro here in Memphis one time. He was in a funny place; you wouldn't expect to find a Negro there. There were white men across the aisle, and I didn't notice that he was a Negro. I felt very strange, and when a seat opened up across the aisle, I moved. In the North or West it wouldn't have bothered me at all. But many people here were looking at me curiously, some with disgust. I wouldn't have got up if there had been no place to move to, but I'll tell you, it was hard to know what to do.

A ministerial student who can, at a church conference, declare for equal treatment for Negroes on the conference grounds, does not pursue the point in the college diningroom, where he is a student waiter and works with an elderly Negro man.

> There is an old Negro who works with us and who has been here for years. We call him "Jones", and he calls me "Mr. Peter". I would not object to calling him Mr. Jones, but it would serve no good purpose to do so. I am sure he would be embarrassed if I did, and all the white people who were not antagonized would certainly be surprised. I'd be set down as a nut.

A militant minister who appeals to the F.B.I. for justice for Negro citizens, and who insists upon preaching what he believes, thereby alienating some members of his congragation, nevertheless submits to the social dictum which requires visits with his Negro friends to be at his instigation and in their homes.

> Dr. Sales, the president of the Negro college here, is my personal friend. I like him very much, and he and his wife and my wife and I have many good visits together. I often go to his home to visit, but that is the way the visits must be. He wouldn't dare come to my home to visit.

The parent who would really rather not teach her child the prevailing attitudes with respect to race, yet feels that she must see to it that her child's behavior is correct as judged by the existing norms.

> A few weeks ago something came up that was really hard for me to handle. The people next door to us had a little Negro girl come in to wash dinner dishes. They gave her dinner and a little bit of money -- I don't know how much, but it was really very little. Well, they decided they didn't need her any longer. She lives in one of those little shacks down near the railroad. Sue came in one night and wanted to know if we couldn't give Janie some dinner. I had noticed that very often the little darkie would call to Sue over the fence. One afternoon she came over and asked for Sue. Fortunately, she was not at home. Well, as I said, Sue came to me and said, "Mother, she is hungry. Can't we give her something to eat?" So I fixed a plate, and the little girl sat on the back steps and ate, and Sue sat and talked with her while she ate. It disturbed me a little. The next day Sue wanted to know if Janie couldn't eat with us and wash our dishes. I told her I was afraid not. She couldn't understand why not. I told her we couldn't do it because we didn't need Janie, that she could get a job somewhere else. I guess actually we could have taken her on and used her very well, but we could also get along without her, and I didn't want her around because it would be so hard to explain to Sue why she must not have a little colored girl for a friend. You know, you hate to bring your child up to be a snob; but you know I couldn't have that. I didn't want the colored child to get any ideas, and I didn't want Sue doing something that other people would question and think queer. It was just an impossible situation.

Attitudes, then, seem to be transmitted not so much by verbal instruction as by providing the kinds of experiences in which the child learns behavior appropriate to his racial role, and by shielding the child from those experiences in which he might learn behavior inappropriate to his position.

An adequate explanation of the means by which racial attitudes are transmitted must take into account and explain failures of transmission. Many observers assert that racial attitudes are changing, that young people today hold attitudes considerably more favorable toward the Negro than those of their parents. If this is so, and it may well be, the change is understandable in terms of our analytical framework.

We have asserted that racial attitudes reflect the behavior of individuals in interracial relationships, that the attitude is, in a sense, the rationale of the act.[4] The racial behavior of earlier generations grew out of a social order that no longer exists. The young white Southerner is no longer brought up in the care of a "mammy"; it is a rare white family that has even one full-time Negro servant, and the behavior appropriate to the "master" class is not an ever-present example in the home. Opportunities for parents to teach racial behavior are fewer than they used to be, and the lessons can not be so thoroughly learned. Since the master-servant relationship and all the practices appropriate to it are so little in evidence, the old verbalizations and stereotypes are losing some of their authority. Perhaps some unconscious awareness of the weaknesses inherent in verbal indications of racial attitudes has accounted for the apparent reluctance of the bearers of the culture to attempt to transmit the attitudes through direct verbal instruction; certainly, without the reinforcement of carefully trained racial behavior, these attitudes are beginning to be altered.

[4]It might be more nearly accurate to speak of the attitude as the rationalization of the act. For a while the effort was made to find out what the young people meant by the term "social equality" by asking them to say whether social equality was involved in certain interracial situations. In every case the individual tested the situation by a single criterion: is it accepted practice in the South? And so they agreed that no social equality was involved or implied when Negroes and white people use the same post office, ride in the same elevators, or trade at the same stores; social equality is implied if members of the two races sit in the same section of a bus, ride the same railway coach, or attend the same schools.

It is customary in the sociological field to talk about relationships between and among different racial groups in terms of social distance. Robert E. Park pointed out that social distance might be either vertical or horizontal, and he thought of the former — with the Negro in the subordinate position — as characterizing racial relationships in the South, as opposed to horizontal social distance — with the Negro relegated to a different sphere of activity — which was characteristic of Northern racial relationships.[5] Economic changes in the South are bringing increased social distance of a horizontal type; it may well be that when this distance is great enough the vertical distance will be negligible. Perhaps this change is an important one for a change in racial attitudes, for it will certainly bring a change in definition of behavioral relationships of Negroes and whites. As more white people find themselves in jobs in which Negroes are their clients and their customers, it is inevitable that the behavior defining these relationships should give rise to new attitudes. A sixteen year-old white girl who lives in a Southern town of about 16,000 population reports:

> You know, I've been working at Wilkie's Shoe Store. A lot of Negroes come in there, and I wait on them. Once I was so startled to hear myself saying "ma'am" to one.

And a seventeen year-old boy from the same town tells:

> Last summer I worked at the ice plant. There was a Negro there I liked. He really was a swell fellow. He was a grown man. Everyone liked him . . . I wouldn't mind working with them. A year ago I might have said I wouldn't like it, but this Negro down at the ice plant did a lot to make me see things differently. I wouldn't particularly like to work under one — no, I shouldn't say that, 'cause I know I wouldn't mind working under the one at the ice plant.

[5] This is not to suggest that it would be a good thing for Southerners to adopt the Northern attitudes toward race, though many people feel that horizontal distance may be easier to combat than vertical distance.

Racial definitions are an inevitable part of the Southerner's point of view because social forces dictate a racial etiquette which can not be ignored. In many instances these social definitions of racial roles are legal difinitions as well. Jim Crow is not a folkway, only, but a law, and this fact puts a heavy drag on the rate of social change. The white person inclined to protest segregation can be hauled into court if he attempts to make an issue of the principles. Myrdal has observed that liberalism in the South holds an anomalous position in that it runs counter to law.[6] Conservative forces have not only custom, but legal right on their side. Thus, it is extremely difficult for the Southern white person to act against custom, and the social pressures are bulwarked by police and courts. The legal aspects of racial relations lag behind economic and social changes brought about by industrial development and the urgencies of war.

But laws, like attitudes, may be thought of as reflections of already established patterns of behavior, and it seems reasonable to expect that changing racial behavior will be reflected in a new rationale and an accompanying rewriting of legal definitions of racial relationships.

[6] Myrdal, op. cit., It is only with reference to Jim Crow legislation that conservatism is in so favorable a position. Constitutional law is with liberalism, and as segregation practices are declared unconstitutional, liberal forces are able to use law as a weapon in their struggle.

Subject: The American Case Against Segregation - A Reply to Thomas R. Waring

Section I

Within the past year increasingly successful attempts have been made by white Southerners to present the case for the maintenance of segregated schools in terms which are acceptable to reasonable white Northerners. The most effective of these Southern spokesmen has been Hodding Carter, who has published such articles in Reader's Digest, Saturday Evening Post, and Look Magazine. The most recent expression of this "moderate" white Southerners' point of view in a national publication is found in the article by Thomas R. Waring, published in the January 1956 issue of Harper's Magazine. There is some evidence that this reasonable pro-segregationist approach has influenced the editorial opinion of some of the more conservative national publications.

Mr. Waring, like other spokesmen for the "reasonable white Southerner," starts from the assumption that there are valid and compelling reasons - described by him as "facts" - which make it impossible for white "Southerners to accept the desegregation of the public schools." He maintains that white Southerners of good-will, who are in the vast majority, "favor uplift of the Negro," but fear that this uplift "is being forced at too fast a pace." He also insists that white Southerners resent the interference with the sovereignty of their states in their right to maintain segregated schools; and, he adds, that the Southerner believes that "he is better equipped by experience to cope with race problems than people from other regions."

These opinions are not novel. In the context of Mr. Waring's article, however, some of them are clearly inconsistent with other statements which he makes, and their lack of relevance to the basic issue of the Constitutional rights of Negro Americans appears to be quite clear. Undoubtedly there must be many Southern whites of good-will who favor the uplift of the Negro people. More pertinent questions, however, are: How effective have these people been in protecting the rights of the Negroes; and how active or open were they in supporting the Negro in his struggle for the equalization of teachers' salaries, equalization of schools, voting privileges, and adequate graduate and professional state-supported education.

The argument of "too fast a pace" is also not uncommon, but again leaves many relevant questions unanswered: What is a desirable pace for the righting of an injustice? To what extent can those who are not the immediate victims of the injustice be expected to arrive at the same judgment concerning the rate of change which the victims believe to be necessary? It is precisely because of these expected differences in opinion that it is necessary to resort to the more objective arena of the Federal courts.

The sovereignty of the states in matters of education is not in itself at issue in the discussion of the problem of segregated schools. More pertinent to this problem is the issue of whether the states have the "right" to perpetrate injustice and inequality upon some of its citizens. In its May 17, 1954 decision, the United States Supreme Court answered this question clearly by stating:

> Such an opportunity (for education), where the state has undertaken to provide it, is a right which must be made available to all on equal terms.

Mr. Waring's assertion that the Southerner believes that he is "better equipped by experience to cope with race problems than people from other regions" is made without supporting evidence. Seen in the light of his discussion of the question of the sovereignty of states, it is necessary to point out that problems of racial justice in the South are no longer matters of regional concern, but have tremendous national and international implications. Furthermore, there is no evidence that the Southern states in and of themselves have voluntarily contributed to the progress of the Negro or have stimulated or encouraged economic, political, or educational equality.

It is of ironic significance that the one extensive quotation cited by Mr. Waring in support of the "Liberal" Southerner's position was made by an Atlanta editor in 1888. Reliance upon the position considered liberal 70 years ago in an article published in 1956 is in itself evidence of the time lag in this type of thinking which seeks to understand and deal with contemporary problems in terms of the conditions and perspective of the past. This may well be the essential weakness and futility of the position of those "reasonable" white Southerners who seek to justify or explain the continuation of segregation in the modern world; namely, that segregation and other forms of racism are not compatible with the economic, industrial, technological, political, and international forces of the middle of the 20th Century.

Section II

Under the heading of "cultural differences" Waring lists the following reasons for the maintenance of segregated schools in the South:

1. That Negro children are not equal to white children in health and cleanliness;

2. That the home environment of Negroes is inferior to that of whites;

3. That the marital and sex habits of the Negro are inferior and more primitive than those of whites;

4. That there is a high incidence of crime among Negroes;

5. That the Negro child is retarded in intellectual level and achievement compared with the white child.

If one accepts, for purposes of discussion, Waring's assertions on these points, they still do not justify the maintenance of schools segregated on the basis of race. It is agreed that the "facts" which he presents do not reflect innate racial differences. They, therefore, must be interpreted as indications of the detrimental consequences of past segregation and the general inequality and discrimination associated with racism.

In view of the meretricious effectiveness and the emotional appeal of the specific points raised by Waring, it is necessary to answer each point separately:

1. Health

Waring maintains that Negro parents are not as careful, on the average, as their white neighbors in looking after the health and cleanliness of their children, and that the incidence of venereal diseases is much greater among Negroes than among whites. After admitting that statistics to document this statement are difficult to obtain, he nonetheless cites statistics from South Carolina for the year 1952-53 which purport to show that while 1.3% of the white persons examined were found to have syphilis, an average of 9% of the Negroes examined had this disease.

Waring did not state that these percentages applied to Negro and white children; but he nonetheless concludes that fastidious white parents "just don't want to take risks of any kind with their children." He presented no evidence to prove that a disproportionate number of Negro children are contaminated with contagious venereal diseases or that these diseases may be communicated to white children in a school setting.

It is now clearly understood by public health officials that communicable diseases are not to be understood or dealt with primarily in racial terms. These diseases are related to socio-economic status, overcrowded housing, and other social problems which are aggravated by problems involved in segregated living. Furthermore, white children and white adults are not immunized against these diseases by rigid patterns of segregation in the schools. Certainly, necessary and prevalent contacts with Negroes in the role of servants or workers provide greater opportunity for the transmission of communicable disease.

Utilization of advances in medicine and public health and a well-organized school health program for the benefit of the entire community should provide protection for all children from dangerous communicable diseases. Non-segregated schools will necessarily have to maintain the same health facilities and safeguards that are now maintained in any well-run school - and unfortunately not provided in the majority of segregated Negro schools. As the economic and social conditions of the Negro improve, and as the public health facilities available to the entire community are also made available to Negroes, the incidence of certain diseases among Negroes will decrease.

2. Home Environment

Waring contends that the home environment and cultural background of Negro children is different in many ways from that of white children. He states that the relationship between whites and Negroes is still generally that of the master and the servant and the boss and the laborer. While he recognizes the emergence of a middle-class among Negroes, he believes that this group is small and in the most "unenviable" position of all since they are not accepted by whites and have progressed beyond the cultural level "of the vast bulk of their own people."

Aside from the stereotyped generalizing which suggests that all whites are basically superior to all Negroes culturally, economically, and in home environment -delusions of group aristocracy - Waring's discussion of this point reveals the basic inconsistency of his whole approach. On the one hand he maintains that white Southerners of good-will favor the uplift of the Negro and that the Negro should qualify himself fully for association with "the white man's company"; while on the other hand he betrays the fact that even if the Negro were to raise his cultural and economic level to a point acceptable to whites, that this would not lead to "the white Southerner's acceptance of non-segregation." He rejects the idea that the admission of "a few well-scrubbed and polished colored children of cultivated parents" may be an opening wedge for integration in the schools by stating that "this would be no more acceptable to the colored people than to the whites." He insists upon a continuation of segregation even among middle-class Negroes by suggesting "private schools for prosperous Negroes as for prosperous whites." This point of view clearly reveals the intransigence of the pro-segregationists and the fact that they really want no part of non-segregation. The issue of cultural differences and inferior home environment of the average Negro as a reason for maintaining segregation is revealed to be spurious.

3. Marital Habits and Sexual Looseness

Waring opens his introduction of the problem of marital habits and sexual morals of the Negro by again admitting that "statistics are not readily available, for obvious reasons..." He maintains, however, that on the average "one Southern Negro child in five is illegitimate," and that even among Negroes who observe marriage conventions, "illegitimacy has little if any stigma."

His position is revealed in its essential inconsistency when he, on the one hand, discusses the "more primitive view of sex habits" found among Negroes, and, on the other hand, is forced to recognize that extra-legal inter-racial sex relationships were "due largely to lustful white men seeking out acquiescent Negro women..." Certainly these "lustful white men" developed their lust and "primitive view of sex habits" in a rigidly segregated society.

Problems of sex and inter-racial marriages were not at issue and do not appear to be relevant to the struggle for racial justice and equality before the law. The fear of social and sexual mingling among races, understandable though it may be in a segregated society, cannot be offered as a justification for the continued denial of the full citizenship rights of any group or individual. Social relations and marriage are always matters of personal choice and decision. These intimate aspects of inter-personal relationships cannot and should not be legislated and were not involved in the judicial decisions preventing the states from segregating children in public schools solely on account of their race.

A confusion of the issues of citizenship rights of the Negro with problems of personal, social, and sexual relations may reflect, among other things, the anxiety on the part of certain whites that if the barriers imposed by the state against equality of treatment for the Negro were to be removed, then the whites themselves would not be able to exercise personal restraint and control in the expression of positive feelings for Negroes. In a curious sense these types of arguments may be viewed as an attempt on the part of individuals to have the state deny equality of citizenship rights to Negroes in order to protect whites from the consequences of their own confused, mixed, and ambivalent feelings toward Negroes. The rights of Negroes, however, cannot be denied on the implicit grounds that whites might find them acceptable if the barriers are removed.

4. Crime

In his discussion of crime, Waring maintains that crime in the South has been more prevalent among Negroes than among whites and that much of the outbreak of crime and juvenile delinquency in Northern cities is due to the influx of the Negro population. Again he does not present the evidence or statistics upon which he bases these assertions.

The problem of differential definition and the meaning of crime statistics according to race has long concerned objective criminologists. The ease with which Negroes are arrested and convicted for minor infractions, which under certain circumstances would be over-looked among whites, certainly has been observed and must be taken into account in any evaluation of racial factors and crime.

Students of the psychological consequences of segregation have recognized that one of its most obvious manifestations among Negroes is an increase in hostility toward whites and toward other Negroes. This may well, under certain circumstances, express itself in delinquent and criminal behavior. Again, therefore, the discussion of crime among Negroes must be seen as at least in part a consequence of segregation rather than as a justification for continuing segregation.

Waring makes the blanket statement: "Maintaining order is a first concern of Southerners." This statement must be scrutinized in the light of his own implicit admission that conservative, law-abiding Southern whites are helpless in their fear "that hatred and bloodshed would increase without separation of the races." He supports this fear by the warning that "The thin tolerance of the ruffian and lower elements of the white people could erupt into animosity and brutality if race pressure became unbearable." He warns further that in this riotous bloodshed it will be "Negroes' blood which will flow for the most part." Certainly it is difficult to reconcile these dire predictions and the inevitability of racial lawlessness among the lower elements of white Southerners with the stability of the government of these sovereign states whose leaders are concerned with the maintenance of law and order. Furthermore, it might be germane to point out that the hatred, violence, and bloodshed described by Waring are more likely to occur under conditions of racial segregation or in the transition from segregation to non-segregation than under conditions of equality of the races.

In his anticipation of racial disturbances associated with desegregation in the public schools Waring states that such disturbances would occur "first among pupils themselves, and later by enraged parents." Systematic studies of the desegregation process show that there is no evidence that prolonged racial disturbances associated with the desegregation of schools ever occur spontaneously among the pupils themselves. Whenever there has been such trouble among the students, it has been found that these disturbances were initiated and encouraged by adults.

5. Intellectual Development

Waring maintains that "colored children are about two grades behind the whites in attainment..." He insists that the integration of Negro and white children will place an excessive burden on "a single generation of white children," and that, "while they are rubbing off white civilization onto the Negro children, Negro culture will also rub off onto the whites." Again the sense of Waring's argument is that one of the consequences of past segregation - academic retardation of the Negro child should be used to justify continued segregation. The lack of validity of this argument is apparent and is clearly illustrated by the fact that in the legal fight against segregated schools some of the states argued that the Negro child was not being harmed by being required to attend all-Negro schools. Now that this point is no longer at issue before the courts, the proponents of segregation not only admit this intellectual damage resulting from past segregation, but attempt to use it in support of continued segregation.

Many generations of Negro children have borne the brunt of the educational and psychological damage inherent in their attendance in segregated schools. There is no evidence that a single generation of white children will suffer any permanent damage as a consequence of attending well-regulated, non-segregated schools.

Existing psychological evidence obtained from the research of such outstanding psychologists as Otto Klineberg reveals that when Negro children are transferred from segregated schools to non-segregated shcools with higher educational standards they tend to make up their academic deficiency within a few years. More recent evidence involving older children shows that Negro children of superior intellectual ability who attend inferior segregated high schools are able to overcome their academic deficiency during the first college year and compete successfully in northern interracial colleges. It is clear, therefore, that the academic handicap resulting from segregated education is not a permanent one if the child is provided with an opportunity for an education in a non-segregated school with high educational standards. Under these conditions there is evidence that the Negro child benefits and no evidence that the white child is disadvantaged.

Section III - Summary and Conclusions

The latter part of Waring's article is devoted to a general castigation of the role of the NAACP in the struggle of the Negro for racial justice and equality. Waring maintains that until the school question became agitated in recent years, race relations in the South "on the whole were good"; that the leadership in this racial crusade comes from outside of the South and is sparked by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People; that if the schools were integrated, Negro school teachers would be displaced by whites; and that Negroes in general are not eager for mixed schools "so long as the schools for Negroes are adequate." These arguments, too, are not new and probably reflect a perspective of race relations which is tolerable and acceptable for some "reasonable" white Southerners. The question, however, is the extent to which they are compatible with the actual facts and the social reality which the South faces today.

In asserting that race relations in the South were good up until the agitation for non-segregated schools, Waring takes the position that good relations are synonymous with the Negroes' acceptance of the status quo. From another point of view one could argue that such acceptance in the face of the reality of injustice is evidence of the poorest type of race relations and synonymous with social stagnation. Social progress, on the other hand, necessarily brings with it symptoms of tension, disturbance, and inevitable transitional difficulties. These are the concomitants of progress and the indications of an eventual bettering of the substance of race relations.

The NAACP is a convenient target or scapegoat for those who are disturbed by the insistent demand of the Negro for his full citizenship rights. It is true that the national headquarters of the NAACP are in New York City. It is equally true, however, and should be known by all, that the role of the NAACP in the school segregation cases and in any other area of its activities is determined exclusively by the degree to which the Negroes in a given community initiate a case and seek and invite the participation of the NAACP in the quest for justice. Under no circumstances does or can the national NAACP initiate a case prior to the desire or the demand of the Negro citizens of a given community.

The argument that Negro teachers would lose their jobs in integrated schools must be evaluated in the light of the national problem of a general shortage of competent teachers, which is no less acute in the South. Certainly, in the transition for a system of segregated to non-segregated schools in a given community there will be questions of the most efficient utilization of teaching personnel. In an attempt at solution of these problems there may be instances in which less competent and professionally qualified Negro teachers will be displaced by more competent Negro or white teachers; presumably, also, there will be cases in which less qualified and competent white teachers might be displaced by more competent and qualified Negro and white teachers. If, however, there are cases of discriminatory and punitive discharge of Negro teachers, these cases will have to be brought to and decided within the halls of the Federal courts.

The assumption that Negroes in general are not eager for mixed schools, but would settle for adequate Negro schools, is one which may be seriously questioned in the light of the social tensions, potential disturbances, and worsening of race relations which Waring himself so graphically describes. If the Negro people on the whole were content to repudiate the clear decision of the United States Supreme Court, which maintained that separate educational facilities can never be equal, then there would be no agitation on their part for non-segregated schools. They would passively accept the pious and belated offers of even the most backward states to "equalize" the physical facilities of Negro schools, It has become clear to almost every Negro who is aware of the problem that it is not only psychologically but economically impossible for the Negroes to have separate schools that are equal. This is particularly true in those states in which there is the maximum amount of resistance to the Supreme Court's decision. A dual school system in these states would necessarily be at the expense of the Negro schools. The fact is that there is no possibility of compromise on this issue without continuing the hardships on the Negro children or imposing additional and new hardships on white children.

Section IV - What Has the Supreme Court Decided?

In presenting the hope that Negroes will accept voluntarily continued segregation, Waring leans on Judge John J. Parker's interpretation of the May 17, 1954 decision of the United States Supreme Court. In this interpretation

Judge Parker states:

> It (The United States Supreme Court) has not decided that the states must mix persons of different races in the schools... Nothing in the Constitution or in the decision of the Supreme Court takes away from the people freedom to choose the schools they attend. The Constitution, in other words, does not require integration. It does not forbid such segregation as occurs as the result of voluntary action. It merely forbids the use of governmental power to enforce segregation.

A further interpretation of the meaning of the Supreme Court's decision which Parker does not give, but which might be relevant to an evaluation of many of the issues raised by Waring, is that the United States Supreme Court, in its May 17, 1954 decision, did not forbid the states from segregating its pupils in state supported public schools on the basis of health, home environment, marital status, legitimacy or illegitimacy of students, criminal or delinquent behavior, and level of intellectual functioning. Nothing in that decision prevents a state from setting up schools for children with or without communicable or venereal diseases; or setting up schools for children from broken homes or who are adjudged legitimate or illegitimate; nothing in the decision forbids the state from setting up schools in terms of intellectual level of students. Some groups of educators or welfare workers might wish to test the constitutionality of these forms of segregated schools when and if they are established.

The present decision, however, clearly, specifically, and only forbids the state from setting up schools for children "solely on the basis of race." This application of the equal protection clause of the 14th Amendment of the United States Constitution means that all explanations, rationalizations, techniques, devices, and subterfuges which result in racially segregated schools are unconstitutional. If a state desires to protect the health of the 98% of the white children whose parents do not have syphilis, it must equally protect the health of the 91% of the Negro children whose parents do not have syphilis by setting up, if it so desires, schools for those Negro and white children whose parents have syphilis. If the state desires to protect and nurture the cultural and intellectual potentials of those white children from higher cultural and intellectual backgrounds, then it must equally and without separation protect and nurture the cultural and intellectual potentials of those Negro children from similar cultural and intellectual backgrounds by setting up schools attended by Negro and white children of similar cultural and intellectual backgrounds and potentials. Anything short of this is a clear violation of the supreme law of the United States as interpreted by the United States Supreme Court and is therefore illegal. Widespread illegality, rationalized or not, is anarchy - a government by whim and prejudice rather than a government by law. No amount of "reasonable" or emotional arguments and explanations can obscure this basic fact.

Services to Negro Veterans In Louisiana

By George S. Mitchell
Director of Veterans Services
Southern Regional Council

OVER half of Louisiana's young men between the ages of nineteen and thirty-five are now veterans of World War II. The State's population is a little over one-third Negro. Some 160,000 white veterans and 70,000 Negro veterans have returned to the State. For many years to come the experiences as service men and as veterans of this selected third of this generation of young men will be a ruling factor in the life of Louisiana. If the veterans find or make places acceptable to them, the State's gain will have been great; if any large proportion of them in two or three years time feel that opportunity has been unfairly denied them, bitterness and heightened friction will be inevitable. There is still time for Louisiana to see to it that her very best is done in meeting the needs of all her veterans.

Their needs come under five main headings: medical and hospital care, housing, claims, employment, and educational training. The first two have not been particularly looked at and will not be treated in this survey. The remaining three have been gone into by interview and travel and by conversations with a large number of veterans*.

The Machinery

A very considerable administrative apparatus, Federal, state and local, has been set up for dealing with these needs. The Veterans Administration has a regional office for the northern half of the state at Shreveport, and one for southern Louisiana at New Orleans. Between them they operate some seventeen full-time field contact offices, which in turn send out field personnel to reach many small points one day a week. The U. S. Employment Service (which returns to state management in November) and the unemployment compensation agency each cover the state either with settled offices or with itinerant service.

Educational training, including job training and farm training, is under the supervision of the Louisiana State Department of Education. Apprenticeship training is handled by the legislatively established State Apprenticeship Council in coordination with the Apprentice Training Service of the U. S. Department of Labor. Appropriate federal agencies administer farm loans, veterans preference on surplus disposal, and other particular services. New Orleans and Shreveport are the only Louisiana cities that have a locally supported Veteran's Information Center.

Veterans Claims

On matters of claims for pensions, record adjustments, payment for leave, and so on, Negro veterans have no strongly felt grievances. While they uniformly confront white contact men and claims officers, and thereby are exposed to the risk of minor discourtesies, the feeling is general that actual claims arising from service in the armed forces are impartially handled. The facilities are ample. The Veterans Administration will handle claims directly, or the American Red Cross, or any of the leading veterans organizations, or the Parish Service Officers will take them up for the veterans. Even those veterans organizations which do or did lately exclude Negroes from membership service claims of Negro veterans upon request, and such channels have been used by many Negroes.

*In this work the author had the invaluable assistance of three veterans: Ibra January, of Monroe, and Wesley R. Brazier and Theodore R. Moses, of New Orleans.

Jobs

On the vital matter of employment the picture is not so good. Prejudice can and does enter into the efforts of officials of the Employment Service. In Louisiana it is an all-white agency. Most of the full-time offices are divided into white and Negro sides with separate entrances, and even the Negro sides are entirely staffed with white interviewers and white clerks.

Jobs available have held up well. The state lost around 100,000 strictly war-production jobs, but offerings in service trades, in the oilfields, in lumbering, and in construction have taken up the slack. For Negroes the rub has come not in getting a job, but in getting a job with a future or that will use their best abilities. The Employment Service protests that vacancies are notified without discrimination to the clerks who handle both the white and the Negro applicants, and that it is the practice to send men out to vacancies without distinction of race. Many Negro veterans who have used the Employment Service laugh at this contention. It is their belief that the agency makes a reasonable effort to get white skilled and semi-skilled men in their proper jobs, and seldom exerts itself in the same way for Negroes claiming jobs better than common labor.

It is hardly to be supposed that with an all-white staff the situation could be otherwise. Even your occasional white Employment Service official who is fully informed about the capabilities of the Negro applicants and sympathetic with their wishes confronts in the body of the agency prejudice and practices that work against the perfectly fair arrangements that he might wish to make. Again one has only to stand by while the employment counseling is in progress to feel the difference between the interviews with white and Negro applicants. Your white counselor in a matter of minutes is inside the mind of the white man who wants a job.

Personal observation in Employment Service offices in the State left the view that it is rare for the Negro applicant to give the appearance of being entirely at ease or to use in his replies the shades of meaning that effect understanding. For some Negro veterans the mutual barrier of prejudice is undoubtedly overcome in the interview, but for a broad group it remains, and leaves a wound. An ambitious veteran, Negro or white, when on the hunt for a job is watchful and sensitive; misunderstood and blunted here, a Negro veteran can hardly be blamed for a conclusion adverse to the effort being made on his behalf. Numerous offices of the employment service in Virginia, North Carolina, Georgia, Florida and Oklahoma have met this situation by providing Negro interviewers or entire Negro staffs for servicing Negro applicants. Negro Employment Service officials, where used, have shown ingenuity and diligence in opening for Negro applicants the kind of jobs they wish. Louisiana is without the advantage of this useful service.

In simple matters of housekeeping the Employment Service in Louisiana could do a good deal more to convince both white and Negro veterans that it is up-to-date and solicitous of their welfare. Many offices are crowded and dingy; some are dirty. In several the Negro entrance is from a back street or even from an alley. In the large New Orleans office the white side customarily has its blackboard and walls plastered with notices from private employers appealing for workers to take desirable jobs or to enter trade schools, while on the Negro side no such notices have been seen in three separate visits. The explanation is said to lie in the rule of the agency against postings of jobs for which the files contain qualified applicants.

Employment, in good jobs and in poor jobs, is not made by the employment service. Nearly all of it is offered by private firms, and the official agency is not to be blamed for the general difficulties that Negroes face in getting good jobs. Neither does the Employment Service handle more than a small proportion of all the hirings. Still a good deal could be done by the agency in mitigation, and it is a widespread complaint among Negro veterans that far less than might be expected is done by USES.

Unemployment Pay

Here and there in the state, Negro veterans complain that they are cut off the readjustment allowance ($20 a week for up to 52 weeks) while still actively seeking work at their highest skill, sometimes after only a few weeks, on the excuse that unskilled work is available and they should take it. There is little reason to suppose that Negro veterans have thus far in general been denied their rights under this benefit. Many, including many farmers, have had the advantage also of the compensation for self-employed veterans. Figures are not available by race, but the State was the agent for paying the readjustment allowance in September to thirty-two thousand veterans, and the self-employment allowance was reaching nine thousand. Both figures were lower for September than for August, and the readjustment allowance payments had been declining for several months. The Division of Employment Security, which administers these benefits, has been pressing to reduce the load of qualified claimants. The agency is currently reinterviewing men who have had the readjustment allowance for thirty weeks or more. In a release of September 18, 1946 it was stated that "we have found that it was possible in many instances to change the working classification of claimants to one where a job was available. Others have been referred to a training program that will fit them for other types of work." Of 1881 claimants reinterviewed "only 232 refused a referral to a job on the grounds that the job to which they were referred was not suitable."

Veterans whose entitlement to the unemployment allowance (52 weeks) had expired numbered 625 in September, 1946, and those who had used up the whole of their self-employment allowance (about eleven monthly payments) were 1,019.

The existence of these particular benefits challenges every community's ingenuity in finding promising work at top skills for the men who are drawing the readjustment allowance. Additionally, they add to the urgency of providing job-training, farm training and trade training. At present in Louisiana nearly a fifth of the veterans of World War II are drawing one or the other of the unemployment allowances. Twice as many are getting these as are getting educational benefits of all kinds.

The Educational Benefit

Educational training is the master opportunity of the GI legislation. It not only provides tuition and modest subsistence pay to veterans going to college, but is available for high school work, regular or vocational, for correspondence courses, and (subsistence only) for training in formal apprenticeship and for training on the job or on the farm. Louisiana has hitherto ranked at or about the bottom among the states in percentage of population with five years of schooling or less, though she has lately been thirty-fourth in her educational effort. With this handicap, undoubtedly the great number of the Negro veterans stopped school somewhere between the early grammar grades and the early high school years, and therefore only a small percentage of them can be expected to get into college work.

The college-level men have crowded all available institutions. State-operated colleges alone had enrolled by September 30, 1946 about 4,000 white veterans and some 800 Negro veterans. The many private colleges will carry these figures to a total of 14,000 or more, of whom possibly 1,500 will be Negroes. Nothing is heard in Louisiana of such a plan as North Carolina has begun, under which high school faculties give the first year or two of college work in afternoon and night classes, in many local communities, under the supervision of established colleges.

Regular high school work is not inviting to any large number of veterans anywhere. In Louisiana only a few hundreds of white veterans and a smaller number of Negro veterans have gone in for it, although school boards have offered flexibility to meet the needs of the veterans. The men who are not going to college, but are willing to take further training, are asking for other full-time vocational or technical instruction or are trying to hook onto apprenticeship or job or farm training.

Apprenticeship

Apprenticeship training is open to only an occasional fortunate Negro veteran. In all but a few instances it is operated in agreement with craft unions. Better than 90 percent of the indentured apprentices in Louisiana are believed now to be veterans. The unions which formerly set their upper-age limit for learners at twenty-five now admit veterans up to twenty-seven. The established low ratios of apprentices to journeymen are being held. The only opportunities for Negro veterans to get into apprenticeship training are in a few cases where formal apprenticeship training is operated by employers in the absence of a craft union, or where a vigorous Negro local, in a craft that has traditionally had Negro journeymen, has had a green light from the other craft locals and has worked out apprenticeship training for a handful of Negro veterans.

The whole state has about 1,770 apprentices, of whom about 600 are in New Orleans. Negro apprentices in New Orleans numbered, in October, twenty-odd brickmasons, 15 plasterers, 60 carpenters, 15 painters; and four barbers. Baton Rouge has 15 Negro brickmason apprentices, and such training is expected to be open soon in connection with Negro locals of plasterers and carpenters. Shreveport is said to have a few Negro apprentices in bricklaying, plastering, and cement finishing. Alexandria has 37 white apprentices and no Negro apprentices. Lake Charles has 64 whites and no Negroes. All told, 175 would be a high estimate for the Negro apprentices in the state, a ratio of less than 1 to 10. It should be said that the proportion is improving a bit as additional Negro locals push apprenticeship through. The State and Federal apprenticeship agencies are aware of the disproportions in the present situation, and the officials appear ready to help Negro trade groups, but they take the position that the conflict has to be settled in the sphere of private employment contracts.

On-the-Job Training

Although Louisiana entered the field early she has been slow to unroll on-the-job training and on-the-farm training. For many months in 1945-46 the power to approve factories or business firms whose trainees might receive the GI pay from the Veterans Administration was held only by the Baton Rouge office of the State Department of Education. That office employed little if any additional personnel for the work. Approvals were slow, inspection was not rigorous, and little was done to spread knowledge of this benefit among employers or veterans. Beginning in March, 1946, the State Department of Education asked parish superintendents of education to accept a duty of examining and recommending business and individual applicants for approval. This decentralization has speeded matters. As of October 1, about 2,250 training establishments had been approved. On-the-job trainees (including apprentices) numbered close to 6,000. By comparison, Alabama had about 20,000, Mississippi over 15,000 and Arkansas 9,113.

It is of course up to the veteran to find an employer who will take him on and offer to give him the training toward a skilled or semi-skilled job under which, if the employer is approved, subsistence pay can be granted. Louisiana Negro veterans have had a hard time getting on-the-job training. A responsible New Orleans official estimated recently that not over three percent of on-the-job trainees in that city were Negroes and there is no reason to suppose that this percentage is exceeded elsewhere in the State.

This again is a field in which the use of Negro officials would quite probably step up the Negro veteran's chance to get the benefit. The State Department of Education uses no Negro officials in its supervision of job-training, and none of the Parishes which have put on additional personnel for the purpose are known in Baton Rouge to have added Negro staff. The Veterans Administration employs thirty-five training officers, working out of its New Orleans regional office, in follow-up on job training, and none of them is a Negro. The State and Federal governments might well try whether the use of some Negro coordinators and training officers would not turn up directly additional training opportunities in Negro businesses and, through contacts with the general staff of coordinators, in white businesses as well. Alabama uses a dozen or more Negro coordinators for job training and about the same number for on-the-farm training, and white officials in the State Department of Education have been pleased with the results.

Farm Training

On-the-farm training is fairly well developed. Under this program an owner or renter of a full-time farm may enroll with his nearest vocational agriculture teacher to work the farm in accordance with an approved plan and to take a stated amount of classroom and farm instruction. He may then draw for a year or sometimes longer his full G.I. pay ($65 if single, $90 if with dependents, more if disabled) in addition to his farm earnings. About 1,400 veterans are on this plan. Statistics by race are not collected, so there is no knowing exactly how many of these are Negro veterans. The writer's guess would be 350.

The program is available in nearly every parish. Regular State - Federal vocational agricultural teachers may take on up to eight on-the-farm trainees apiece. For larger loads (up to twenty) new teachers are employed with tuition money paid the State by the Veterans Administration. Regular white vocational agricultural teachers in Louisiana number 208; Negroes are 83. Some fifty-five additional white vo-ag teachers and one Negro teacher have been taken on to teach veterans in on-the-farm training. Salaries are low and the State has present vacancies for a few Negro vo-ag men which it has not been able to fill.

The program suffers in Louisiana, as elsewhere, from the competition of the self-employed allowance to farmer-veterans who make less than $100 a month, and from the readjustment allowance as well. Officials expect on-the-farm training to grow considerably when the men have used up these benefits or decided to postpone their use till later.

Technically speaking, on-the-farm training is available to farmer-veterans who are not owners or renters. Such men would work under employer-trainers (established farmers) who would agree to teach the veterans some specialized skill, such as plantation management, dairy-farming, or truck-farming. Provision is made even for instruction in general farming. Officials in Louisiana have been reluctant to approve these arrangements, fearing exploitation of such hired-hands. A few cases have been approved. The effect of this reluctance is to exclude from on-the-farm training men who are croppers or laborers, and in many areas it is difficult to rent and just now prohibitive to buy a place on which to grow the prevailing crops. On-the-farm training in Louisiana is least developed in the rice country, does better in the sugar area, better still in the cotton and small-farm country in the northern part of the State, and is furthest along in the mixed farming and truck farming area east of the Mississippi.

Institutional Trade Training

Where the earn - while - you - learn forms of veterans trade training are difficult to get, an extra pressure arises for full-time trade education. The return of the veterans caught Louisiana ill-equipped with such schooling for Negroes. For white students of about high school level the State has ten conveniently placed area trade schools. About 1,000 white veterans attend them. They offer such courses as radio, electricity, sheet metal work, and automotive repair; in general, a good range of modern trade subjects. In addition, New Orleans has 350 white veterans taking full-time trade courses at Delgado Trade School (city operated), plus 650 apprentices who take their related part-time instruction in night classes. For Negro veterans of below-college level wishing trade teaching, the State offers work for about 200 at Southern University at Scotlandville, and for a smaller number at the Negro Normal and Industrial Institute at Grambling. Both these institutions also teach trades on the college level. Total veteran enrollment at both, including pre-college and college, trades and other courses, is 800. New Orleans has a public high school for Negroes which, while not formally a vocational school, does offer a few trade subjects. Veteran enrollment October 1 was 121 in day courses and 21 in afternoon and evening courses. Three or four other parishes offer some vocational training for Negroes —notably Natchitoches, Caddo, and Webster. Five hundred is probably a high estimate of the below-college Negro veterans able to get full-time trade training in public institutions in the State, as against at least three or four times this number for white veterans. The white veterans have the advantages of schools nearer their homes, a much wider range of skills to be learned, better equipment, and easier access to apprenticeship and job training.

Something is being done privately to meet the demand by Negro veterans for such study. In New Orleans, Xavier University has started a radio course for 25 men (below college level), and a Negro machinist teaches auto mechanics to nearly 50 Negro veterans in his own (State-approved) school. The State Department of Education has given approval for veterans' work to twenty-odd other private Negro training institutions. Most of these are barber and beauty schools, but several are business colleges, one teaches photography, and another battery work.

The State Department of Education offered unsuccessfully a measure in the 1946 Legislature which would have greatly expanded Negro trade school opportunities.

Louisiana is a state into which industry is pushing, and it is also a state whose plantation agriculture is clearly in for a great deal of mechanization. Industrialization will offer its best opportunities to people with a background of trade knowledge. The crisis that many foresee on the land could be softened if the present-day cotton choppers and sugarcane hands, as well as general farmers, knew something about industrial materials, tools, machines, and measurement. The Federal Government, at this particular juncture, stands ready to provide teachers' pay, surplus technical equipment, books and tools, and under some circumstances buildings and housing for institutional education including trade education for veterans, and in addition will pay the veterans for taking the training. The main price of a network of good trade training schools over the state is ingenuity and local civic push.

Self-Organization

One of the problems that Negro veterans have in obtaining benefits possible under the veterans legislation is the weakness of contact between the official agencies and the Negro veterans themselves. Notwithstanding a good deal of effort made in the past year by some white veterans service officers, Negro community leaders, and such organizations as the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and the Urban League, it is still perfectly possible to go into many a small Louisiana town and find that a lot of the Negro veterans have not heard of job training or farm training, do not know where the parish service officer or the nearest Veterans Administration contact officer is to be found, and have not given serious thought to the benefits they might obtain. Newspapers do not bridge this gap. In a great many localities the recognized Negro leaders know amazingly little about veterans' rights and benefits. The Veterans Administration, the State Department of Veterans Affairs and other agencies involved take the position that their services are there for those who come for them, and they have no duty to beat up trade. The situation could be bettered if traveling Negro officials were employed by the appropriate agencies. In the New Orleans area Negro leadership has taken special steps to inform the veterans and press for improvement by organizing a Citizens Committee on Veterans Affairs.

Negro veterans have begun to find their way into the various veterans organizations. This promises them new and informed local leadership, as well as access to influential white veterans' leaders. The Louisiana Department of the American Legion, which refused to accept Negro members for all the years between the wars, altered its rules in its 1946 convention, and offered to charter Negro posts wherever the local white posts would sponsor them. Within a few weeks 13 such posts were chartered and others are said to be starting up. The Negro posts have the same rights to convention delegates as white posts. The Veterans of Foreign Wars in Louisiana have long accepted Negro posts. The Disabled American Veterans in Louisiana admits Negro members, with the requirement that they join a Cincinnati post. AMVETS has 24 local posts in the state, all of them white. The American Veterans Committee has a mixed chapter of sixty-odd, of whom 25 are Negroes, in New Orleans, and one or two other chapters elsewhere in the State. The two strongest Negro veterans organizations — The National Council for Negro Veterans and the United Negro and Allied Veterans of America—have only just begun to organize in the State. Additionally, a number of cities and towns have purely local clubs of Negro veterans, usually almost entirely World War II men. While organization has not gone far, it is now established that the old line organizations and some of the new ones are open to Negroes, and membership is growing steadily.

Steps to Take

(1) Negroes have a proper as well as a lawful place in the administration of veterans services. In Louisiana the Federal, State and local agencies systematically exclude them. The Veterans Administration which recruits itself mainly from veterans, and whose Personnel Circular No. 165 says "there will be no discrimination either for or against individuals because of race, creed, color, national origin or other irrelevant factors," has over a thousand employees in the State. Of these the only Negroes who are not janitors or porters are seven or eight clerical and professional persons stationed at the Guidance Centers at Dillard University and Louisiana Southern University.

The most pressing need is in offices used by numbers of Negro veterans. It would be a welcome sign of recognition of the needs of the Negro group if the Veterans Administration would take on Negro contact officers and training officers, if the Employment Service would add Negro staff, and if the state agencies and the local veterans information centers would do likewise.

(2) Job training and farm training should be considerably stepped up. The techniques of sound administration of these benefits have been worked out. Conscious effort should be given to the problem of finding more opportunities in both fields for Negro veterans. The probability is that this will come in rough proportion to the share permitted Negro officials in these programs.

(3) The Federal, State and local officials should provide themselves with statistics about their services to Negro veterans. The Veterans Administration does not know what proportion of the Louisiana veterans receiving subsistence payments are Negroes, nor what part of those getting different educational benefits are Negroes. Neither does it know the number of business or farm loans guaranteed for Negro veterans. The employment service does not publish figures on placements of veterans by race. The Louisiana Division of Employment Security cannot say how many veterans by race are getting unemployment compensation. The State Department of Education has no accurate figures as to Negro and white firms approved for job training, and does not know by race the number of veterans getting farm training or job training. No one collects figures by race on apprentice training.

At each office the inquirer is met with a statement that "all veterans are treated alike," and it is implied that collection of figures by race would be a backward step. As it is, the agencies are without the means of knowing accurately how far their services have reached into a disadvantaged population group.

(4) One of the things that hold back understanding between the races is the paucity of legitimate opportunities for discussion, planning, and cooperation in the conduct of matters that the two races have in common. One of the few institutions which today bridges that gap is the trade union. Veterans organizations offer another such occasion for working together. While it does not appear probable that the leading organizations will do much in the near future to build acquaintance between the body of their Negro and white memberships, the leadership of both groups already and customarily confer and plan together. The confidence so built can hardly fail in the future in many a local difficulty to act as a stabilizing force. The growth of self-organization among the veterans of both groups might well receive even greater encouragement.

(5) Louisiana has now, because of the Federal assistance to veterans training, an unprecedented opportunity to provide itself with a rounded system of trade education. If job training and trade training were expanded to the fullest, possibly a hundred thousand veterans could acquire the basis for security in skilled or semi-skilled employment.

SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

The Members Meet . . . .

The recent annual meeting of the Southern Regional Council marked a forward step in the life of movements designed to make human relations democratic in the South. Paradoxical as it may seem race relations movements seldom have been democratic in their structure and function. In the past they operated in two ways: first, they relied very heavily upon the one-man type of leadership, one person being a spokesman for each race; second, they leaned very heavily upon the wisdom and wishes of a select few whose actions were either supported or repudiated. Today, more so than ever before, the wishes of the many become the foundation stone of action in the field of race relations. As we have implied, this is a very significant index to the changing character of movements in race relations, and if the Southern Regional Council's Member Meeting may be regarded as indicative of any trend at all it does reflect a growing desire on the part of people to face situations frankly, collectively, and fearlessly.

The executives of the Council were heartened by the courage and forthrightness with which chronic and acute problems of southern life were introduced. True, SRC members did not possess all of the information, hold to all of the beliefs, decide on every action that would make living utopian, but they did make a light for ways that have been dark. No phase of relations between the races was ignored in discussion. The members realized, however, the mighty potency of words and stultifying effect of fear in furthering or arresting any program they might undertake. Though our emotions were quickened with reports of "incidents" of sex and race, of injustices, of official lethargy and community inactivity, our reason was challenged with programs of correction, amelioration, even the complete undoing of ways that had perpetuated an undemocratic South. We met to find ways of doing something more about and with all of these people, communities, and problems. We stuck to our last.

Above all, perhaps, this achievement seems outstanding—we learned to discuss all of our ills without venom and emotional distress; we made new covenants and resolutions, openly arrived at. And though the SRC's diagnosis of the South is not yet complete, the organization's therapy for what is known continues. There is abundant life in the membership of the Southern Regional Council. That gives us hope.

Authorize . . . .

The Executive Directors, in their reports offered several suggestions and recommendations on the program of the Council during the coming year. The procedures authorized were:

1. The Organization of State Divisions of the Council

As soon as there are one hundred members of the Council in a given state, they will be organized as a nucleus for action on the state level. The by-laws and policies of such divisions would, of course, have to be in harmony with those of the Council.

2. A Series of South-wide Conferences

Within the limits of the budget and with the advice of the Executive Committee, the SRC will sponsor several important annual conferences. One would be a conference for the leaders of the state and local interracial committees. Another would be a strategy conference of the leaders of the major agencies working on problems of the South within the framework of the Council's interests. Still another would be a conference of religious leaders in programs of social action, with particular emphasis, perhaps, on the women's divisions of the various church bodies.

3. A Series of State-wide Race Relations Institutes or Forums

Each of these would run from three to five days and would attempt to reach a better cross-section of the public than is usually reached by such meetings. The Department of Race Relations of the American Missionary Association is preparing to promote a series of institutes and has asked the Council to share in their planning and sponsorship.

4. Special Visiting Committee

The officers of the Council, or such other groups as the Executive Committee might choose, are authorized to seek private conferences with as many Southern governors as possible in the next three months. Their discussions will not be confined to race relations, but will include the main problems of social and economic welfare in the South.

5. Civil Rights Committees

From time to time arise cases which the SRC might well handle for the protection of the civil rights of citizens in the region. The central staff cannot undertake to investigate personally all such cases. Therefore, the Council members approved the establishment of Civil Rights Committees in all our thirteen states. Each committee might be composed of five Council members and a legal advisor who may or may not be a member of the Council, and the duty of these Committees would be to advise the Executive Directors and the Executive Committee as to what action the Council should take in cases involving civil rights.

6. Youth Work

The Council authorized the taking of steps that would permit youth direct participation in the Council or the sponsoring of some sort of auxiliary or correlated youth division of the Council.

7. Study of Police Systems

One of the most urgent needs in the South is reform of police training and administration. Along with its program of promoting improvement wherever it can, the Council authorized the sponsorship of a comprehensive study of Southern police systems in cooperation with one or more universities. An approach of this sort would permit the Council to embark on a program which would not necessarily be tied in with the race question, yet would permit the treatment and analysis of a problem that is closely allied with race tensions.

8. Study of Segregation and Discrimination

The Council authorized the drawing of plans for a comprehensive study to be carried on throughout the South in the field of legal discrimination and segregation. It is proposed that ameliorative action be based upon a study of the facts as to the human and economic costs of segregation and discrimination. Such a study should provide useful material for molding public opinion on the question of equal opportunity. This study would be preceded by a conference on the subject of segregation and discrimination.

9. Primary Test Case

The Council authorized the Board of Directors to proceed with a legal test of the applicability of the Supreme Court decision in Smith vs. Allwright in the State of Georgia if it appears that no such case is already under way.

And Resolve for 1945

1. General Resolutions

We believe that every effort must be made to prepare the people of the South for the returning Negro and white soldiers. The problems which are arising already as they come back from active service or are demobilized into civilian life call for prompt and constructive action on local, state, regional, and national levels.

With a view to encouraging the returning Negro soldiers to have faith that the democratic principles for which they have fought are to be translated into reality, we recommend:

1. Employment of all persons on the basis of ability, with due regard for seniority rights.
2. Abolition of the white primary where it exists.
3. Extension of the growing practice of employing Negro policemen and firemen in Southern cities and equal treatment of members of both races by the police and the courts.
4. Equalization of educational opportunity and of pay for teachers of both races.
5. Extension of publicly financed low cost housing.
6. Increased publicly financed medical and dental care available to both races on an equal basis.
7. That equal accommodations for Negroes as provided under the law, be actually provided on all public transportation facilities, and that discriminatory practices now common in travel be abolished.

2. Post War Employment

The Southern Regional Council realizes the importance of encouraging and planning for an effective program of full employment in every Southern community.

We, therefore, urge that such planning include the initiation and maintenance of an effective public employment service which within its ranks and among employers will promote the effective utilization of all workers in terms of their skills and training, without regard to their race, color, or creed.

We recommend that equal and effective opportunities for the technical and vocational training of Negroes be made available.

We recommend the creation of a permanent Fair Employment Practices Committee to promote the non-discriminatory use of manpower.

3. Education

In the seventeen states and the District of Columbia which require separation of the races in their public school systems, continuing and substantial differences in the public schools for white and Negro children prevail despite requirements of educational statutes, that separate and uniform school facilities be established and maintained. These differences are reflected in the buildings and equipment, in the length of the school day, in the teacher-pupil loads, in the per-pupil expenditure, in the investments in public school property, and in teachers' salaries.

Recognizing the necessity and continuing obligation to establish equality of educational opportunity for all in order to further the establishment of a sound economy in the Southern region, and recognizing the opportunities inherent in the post-war plans for school improvements now developing in communities within these states, we accept the principles that:

1. There should exist and be available for Negro children the same types of educational opportunities as there are for white children.
2. The teacher-pupil ratio in Negro schools should be as low as that in schools for white children.
3. The length of the school day should be the same for the Negro child as it is for the white child.
4. The same types of physical accommodations and facilities in the public schools should exist and be available for Negro children as are available for white children.

We recommend these principles for the consideration of all law-abiding citizens, and responsible school officials in Southern communities, and urge, in behalf of the common welfare, that action be taken to make these principles operative in all plans for public school improvements.

4. Homer P. Rainey and the University of Texas

The Southern Regional Council wishes to protest the dismissal of Dr. Homer P. Rainey as President of the University of Texas. The Council believes this is a startling infringement of personal and academic freedom, and a severe blow to those Southern persons and agencies working for democratic rights.

The Southern Regional Council believes in Dr. Rainey because of his long and effective participation in progressive movements. It believes in him because of his close association with us in the formation of SRC which he now serves as Vice-President. The Council commends him for the stand he has taken, and applauds those Texas citizens and those students and faculty members at the University of Texas who gave him such unqualified support.

All-Southern Group Urges Tolerance

ATLANTA, Ga.—A three-way remedy—legal, educational and economic—has been strongly recommended for the "civil rights" controversy.

This was urged by the Southern Regional Council executive committee as a more statesmanlike approach to the touchy questions raised by the federal "civil rights" program.

The Southern group, meeting last week in Atlanta, emphasized in a statement that "laws cannot do the job alone." Instead, it called for a combination of educational and economic means to go hand in hand with legal machinery to do the job. But it added that laws are necessary "to protect the rights of disadvantaged minorities.

Southerners Advise South To Change Ways, But Fast

ATLANTA, Ga., Sept. 18 (AP).—An influential group of Southerners Saturday told the South the time has come to change its ways, but fast.

The group—the executive committee of the Southern Regional Council—also charged the region's politicians with "grossly" misrepresenting proposed civil rights legislation.

It told the South that States' rights means states' responsibilities and the rest of the nation was unconvinced that Southern States have exhibited any.

Across the long list of accusations that the South has mistreated Negroes, the committee wrote "guilty."

It told the South to cool its hot head a bit and it told the rest of the nation to withhold its blanket condemnation. It told both to listen to reason.

ATLANTA, Sept. 18—(AP)—An influential group of Southerners today told the South the time has come to change its ways, but fast.

The group—the executive committee of the Southern Regional Council—also charged the region's politicians with "grossly" misrepresenting proposed civil rights legislation.

It told the South that states' rights means states' responsibilities and the rest of the nation was unconvinced that Southern states exhibited any.

Across the long list of accusations that the South has mistreated Negroes, the committee wrote "guilty."

It told the South to cool its hot head a bit and it told the rest of the nation to withhold its blanket condemnation as productive of little good. It told both to listen to reason.

And it told both that "jobs and farms and schools and health—these are the underpinnings of civil rights. In all these basic needs the South is below the level of the rest of the country, and in the South the Negro is below the white.

"The job is to raise the whole South, white and Negro, up to the level of the rest of the country.

Present Civil Rights Disupte Compared to Row Over Slavery By Southern Regional Council

By THOMAS J. FOLEY

ATLANTA, Sept. 18. (INS)—The Southern Regional Council in a statement released today compared the present dispute over civil rights to the dispute over slavery 100 years ago and called for a three-way remedy.

The council's proposed "cure" involves legal, educational and economic measures.

FOREWORD

The year 1945 was a busy one for members of the Southern Sociological Society as revealed by this inventory of studies under way or completed. Members of the Society in 1945 were circularized in February 1946.

So as to make the report of maximum usefulness, studies have been roughly classified according to content, and an index of names of investigators and research directors, with their institutional affiliation, has been included.

The following classifications were used:

A. Community
B. Government, Politics, Citizenship
C. Health and Medical Care
D. Housing
E. Juvenile Delinquency
F. Marriage and the Family
G. Methods of Teaching, Educational Sociology
H. Population
I. Race, Culture, Social Differentiation
J. Recreation
K. Region
L. Social Psychology
M. Social Theory
N. Social Work
O. Sociology of Religion
P. Unclassified

Information for each study includes (when reported) title, name of investigator, director of study (if thesis), date of probable completion, place and date of publication or filed manuscript, larger project of which study is a part, financial support, plans for application or interpretation of results, abstract.

The report was compiled and edited for the Committee on Research by Katharine Jocher of the University of North Carolina.

A. COMMUNITY

THE GROWTH PATTERN OF SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH, AND ITS DETERMINING FACTORS. By Charles B. Anderson. Under the direction of Henry Pratt Fairchild (Doctoral dissertation). Completed June 1945. Publication possibilities being investigated. Manuscript filed with New York University Graduate School of Arts and Science.

This study attempts to analyze the factors influencing the growth pattern of Salt Lake City in the light of the following principles (of the human ecology theory of city growth): (1) that topography, climate, natural resources, and other natural advantages and disadvantages are factors in deciding the nature, type, size, and arrangement of the community; (2) that the competition of industries, institutions, and social classes for advantageous positions determines the pattern of a city; (3) that the typical processes of the expansion of a city form five concentric zones extending out from the center of the city. The methods used were: (1) study of primary and secondary sources covering the years 1847-1940; (2) field work during a three-and-one-half-year period of residence in Salt Lake City; (3) numerous interviews with the city planning and zoning engineer and others who were well informed on the city's history. While the planned aspects of the Mormons' embryonic city at first precluded ecological processes, the consequent development of the city was in accord with the first two principles stated above. However, the hypothesis of the concentric zone pattern does not apply to Salt Lake City.

CHURCH-COMMUNITY RELATIONSHIPS IN THE SOUTH. By Gordon W. Blackwell. Edited by Katharine Jocher. To be completed: August 1946. Manuscript to be filed with the Presbyterian Church of the U. S., Richmond, Virginia, and Institute for Research in Social Science at the University of North Carolina. A Study financed by the Committee on Religious Education Restudy of the Presbyterian Church of the U.S.

Field studies are being made of eleven representative southern communities, including subregional setting, historical backgrounds, population, housing, neighborhood structure, social problems, church participation, the church and community agencies, the church and community organization, the church and community problems.

A REVIEW OF URBAN COMMUNITY STUDIES IN THE SOUTHERN REGION. By Lee M. Brooks. Probable date of completion: Summer 1946. Monograph of 10 or more chapters to be published under the auspices of the Presbyterian Church of the U. S. with whom manuscript will be filed. This project is a part of the field studies of the Committee of the Presbyterian Church of the U. S. which is financing it and for which it is being made under the sponsorship of the Institute for Research in Social Science at the University of North Carolina. It is expected that the results will be pertinent to the program of the church.

In this study requested by the Presbyterian Church of the United States, the aim is to analyze, classify, and interpret published and unpublished urban studies in the South. This part of the larger study in which others are engaged will depend upon library research.

CONTRIBUTIONS OF COMMUNITY STUDIES TO SOCIOLOGICAL THEORY. Under the direction of A. D. Edwards. Probable date of completion: 1947.

It is the thesis of the study that community studies have not been integrated into the general body of sociological theory to the extent that they deserve. Representative community studies will be examined and classified. An attempt will be made to state certain generalizations regarding community structure and functioning which appear to be demonstrated and to point out certain areas in which further research is especially needed.

A STUDY OF BAKERS CROSSROADS COMMUNITY; A STUDY OF AILARDL COMMUNITY. By Vladimar E. Hartman. Completed November 1945. To be published for Farm Foundation, Chicago, Illinois, which now has manuscript. A study directed toward a liberal program for the rural church in the South. Financed by the Home Mission Council of North America for whom, together with the Land Tenure Committee of Town and Country Department of the Federal Council of Churches of Christ in America, the study was made. The materials have been used in planning a rural church program in the Cumberland Mountains of Tennessee.

These two community studies were made in order that an over-all picture might be obtained, not only of the two communities studied, but of the entire Cumberland Plateau of Tennessee consisting of eighteen counties. These studies were presented to a group of rural ministers, rural sociologists and rural economists at a meeting on The Church and The Land in the Cumberland Plateau. This planning conference was sponsored by the Land Tenure Committee of the Town and Country Department of the Federal Council of Churches, the Home Missions Council of North America and the International Council of Religious Education. Subjects reported in the studies are The Soil, Man-Land Relationships, Community Organization and Leadership, The School and the Church. The writer interviewed most of the families who live in the communities. He had access to school and church records as well as to those of all the agricultural and other community agencies. Representatives of all the agencies which have worked in these two communities in recent years were interviewed. No schedule or questionnaire form was used. With but few exceptions the people are part-time farmers. The size of land holdings is not adequate for full-time farming operations. Most of the families own their homes and land. There is no share-cropping or tenant farming. The attitudes of the people toward the possibilities and worthwhileness of farm life are changing with the coming to the region of TVA and other agricultural programs. The people are becoming conscious of a need for new leadership in the churches.

SMALL COMMUNITY LIFE. By Wayland J. Hayes. Completed. In press with Harcourt, Brace and Company, New York. Financed by the Institute of Research and Training in Social Science, Vanderbilt University, S.R.A.C.

THE DRIVER AVENUE AREA OF DURHAM, N. C. By Howard E. Jensen. Completed. Published at Durham, North Carolina, by the Durham Planning Council, 1945. Financed by Duke University. Undertaken for the Durham Social Planning Council. The study has been distributed to all members of the Planning Council and to agency board members as a basis for planning.

This study develops indices of area deterioration, shows concentration of physical and social needs, formulates programs, discusses agency, council and fund policies, principles determining respective fields of public and private, secular and religious, local and national agencies, etc.

SOCIAL FACTORS IN THE STABILITY OF A FOREST COMMUNITY. By Harold F. and Lois C. Kaufman. Completed. Published at Missoula, Montana, Spring 1946. Financed by the United States Forest Service and sponsored by this Service, Region #1 and the Montana Study of the University of Montana. The study was initiated to provide information for the Forest Service in carrying on its program in a community in northwest Montana. There were two reports on this project: (1) An Evaluation of the Social Implications and Consequences of the Present Forest Program; (2) Suggestions in the Field of Social and Economic Organization that Would Promote Community Stability.

There are two reports on this project: (1) An Evaluation of the Social Implications and Consequences of the Present Forest Program. (2) Suggestions in the Field of Social and Economic Organization that would Promote Community Stability.

AN ANALYSIS OF THE AVAILABILITY OF CERTAIN SOCIAL RESOURCES TO THE POPULATION OF RICHMOND COUNTY, SOUTH CAROLINA. By Charles E. King. Completed June 1945. Manuscript filed with author. The study was made available for use in newspapers of Columbia, South Carolina.

This study attempts to: (1) give an over-all picture of the extent of the availability of certain social services (health, family and child welfare, and vocational rehabilitation) to all population elements as an aid in postwar planning to meet the increased needs created by returning service personnel and war workers; (2) ascertain to what extent the population elements utilize the available services; (3) determine and reveal the problems involved in providing services needed. The investigations included: (1) interviewing the various supervisors, etc. of the agencies; (2) tabulating the records of the clients and patients of these agencies using the racial classification as a device, and working out ratios to the entire population. The findings indicated: (1) the need for more thorough inventory of the social service resources as well as the need for surveying the social services among all elements of the population; (2) the need to acquaint the population with what services are available; (3) that Negro representation should be included in the Council of Social Agencies in order that this element can be serviced better and can give better support; (4) that provisions should be made to admit Negro internes as well as Negro attending physicians and surgeons in the county hospital (Columbia Hospital); (5) that all agencies need to employ professionally trained white and colored social workers instead of the untrained workers they now employ; (6) that more adequate clinic service is needed for both white and colored children; (7) that social agencies operated by Negroes should become affiliated with the community chest; (8) that, since the Negro population is 40 percent of the total, it needs more integration into the distribution of all services that make for general community improvement.

COMMUNITY AND NEIGHBORING RELATIONSHIPS OF RURAL FAMILIES. By Morton B. King, Jr. Probable date of completion: Fall 1946. Financed by a Social Science Research Council grant. It is anticipated that this study may be a possible contribution to methodology and theory of rural locality groups.

This is an attempt to study rural locality groups from the point of view of individual and family behavior, rather than considering the group as the unit of study. Schedules were taken on all families in the neighborhoods of three BAE delimited communities in Lafayette County, Mississippi. Neighboring and trade and service relationships were determined whether circumscribed by the locality boundaries or not. The usual diagrams will be prepared showing these relationships by race, age, years of schooling of family head, and tenure status. A statistical analysis using Chi Square will be made of the data on the basis of the same four factors. Tentative conclusions: the relationships of families to each other and to service agencies are not homogeneous within identifiable locality groups, but vary by race and tenure status, and perhaps by age and educational level.

A SOCIOLOGICAL EVALUATION OF SOUTHERN URBAN COMMUNITY STUDIES. By Sara E. Smith. Under the direction of Lee M. Brooks (Master's thesis). Probable date of completion: Summer 1946. Manuscript to be filed in the Library of the University of North Carolina. The project is related to a comprehensive survey being made for the Presbyterian Church of the U. S. and is being partially financed by the Church through an assistantship in the Institute for Research in Social Science at the University of North Carolina. It is planned as a methodological aid to urban community study and understanding as basic to action programs.

Since urban studies in the South have been scattered and atomistic, few of them being sociologically comparable, and since those that have been projected by various groups for varied purposes, this study hopes to suggest methodology and postulates that will be sociologically sound with a view to facilitating comparability of data through a sociological framework. One of the basic hypotheses is that what to study about the past of a community should be determined by what matters in the present and by what seem to be the contemporary trends within the community and region.

WHAT HAPPENS WHEN INDUSTRY COMES TO THE COUNTRY (A Special study in Giles County, Virginia). By Leland B. Tate. In progress (field work completed). To be published in 1946, as a bulletin of the Virginia Agricultural Experiment Station which financed the study. The results obtained should be of benefit to leaders in communities who can see what happens when a large industrial plant moves into an agricultural area. The facts should have predictive value and help others to anticipate the changes and adjustments which need to be made in similar situations. The extension class in community development used as a part of the procedure has brought about a better working relationship between newcomers and oldtimers and is being continued by local leaders who are making a continuous study of the needs of their community and formulating plans for its future.

Information has been obtained from census records and various published materials; local leaders have been interviewed and facts obtained about various community organizations and institutions; an extension course in community development has been completed with a group of Pearisburg citizens; and a county map has been prepared with sampling segments in which interviews were held with heads of households. Facts obtained show that since the establishment of the Celanese Plant between Pearisburg and Narrows in 1940, Giles County communities have changed very much in structure and functioning. The picture is quite different from similar changes in two adjoining counties which are mainly agricultural. The newcomers who have moved into the area have changed the population pattern and modified the attitudes of the local citizens. They and the oldtimers have gone through a period of painful adjustment during which each was an irritant to the other but after five years of this condition the newcomers and the oldtimers are learning to think and work together. Certain civic organizations contain almost equal numbers of newcomers and oldtimers among their leaders and members. As surmised, the local people have made more rapid adjustments in their economic and business relations than in others. The lag in making certain adjustments is quite noticeable.

B. GOVERNMENT, POLITICS, CITIZENSHIP

KENTUCKY: DESIGNS FOR HER FUTURE. By Howard W. Beers and Associates. Completed. Published at Lexington, Kentucky, May 1945, by the University of Kentucky Press, which financed it.

Designs for the future of Kentucky cannot be submitted in final form now or at any other time. Social planning is a task that the workers and leaders of each generation must pass to others who replace them. Arduously clearing and building, the pioneers began it all, and their successors labored with undiminished zeal. But the generation that takes the Commonwealth from war to peace must work as hard as the pioneers and with more attention to planning. In the twentieth century, man's affairs are many-threaded; they can be snarled and tangled, or woven artfully into fabrics of orderly design. No other moment in history has been so full of both portent and promise as this. The call to plan and work must be answered as effectively as the call to arms or the quality of life in Kentucky will surely cheapen. But the promise is stronger than the portent. Resources lie at every hand; they can be used with increasing wisdom and effectiveness toward the broad goal, the best possible living for the most people. Kentucky in retrospect is proudly poor, romantic and great; in prospect--and by plan--Kentucky is comfortably well-to-do, still romantic, and ever greater.

SOCIOLOGICAL PROBLEMS OF THE PEACE. By L. L. Bernard. In progress with date of completion indeterminate. Publication not yet arranged. This is part of a general study of war and peace. The first volume, War and Its Causes, was published by Henry Holt and Co., New York, 1944. The plan is to publish a volume on The Immediate Consequences of War and another on The Ultimate Consequences of War, in addition to the one mentioned above. Data are being gathered for all three.

Tentatively, this study will cover: Peace, Its Nature; Its Social Conditions. Obstacles to Peace: Disrupting Factors, such as personal, cultural, and natural. Problems of the Maintenance of Peace. Social Factors supporting Peace: Economics, Political, Psychological, Cultural, Biological, etc.

TENNESSEE. A SOCIAL STUDY. By William E. Cole and William B. Jones. Probable date of completion: September 1946. Manuscript filed with Department of Sociology, University of Tennessee, Knoxville, Tennessee. Financed by a research grant from the General Education Board.

FROM DEMOCRACY TO NAZISM. By Rudolf Heberle. Completed. Published at Baton Rouge by the State University of Louisiana Press, 1945. Partially financed by the Institute of Population Research at Louisiana State University.

MUNICIPAL SURVEY. By Robert D. Highsaw. Under direction of School of Commerce and Business Administration, University of Mississippi. Completed December 1945. Published at Stoneville, Mississippi, by Delta Council, February 1946. Part of a contemplated Statewide survey financed by the Delta Council. Plan to use in revision of city government and tax structures for industrial expansion.

A HISTORY OF SELECTIVE SERVICE IN NORTH CAROLINA. By Spencer B. King, Jr. Under the direction of Gordon W. Blackwell and A. R. Newsome (Doctoral dissertation). Probable date of completion: Summer 1946. Manuscript to be filed with the University of North Carolina Library and the Institute for Research in Social Science. Financed by the State of North Carolina.

TWO YEARS OF FARM WAGE STABILIZATION IN CALIFORNIA. By William H. Metzler. Under the direction of the Bureau of Agricultural Economics. Published at Washington, D. C., by the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, U. S. Dept. of Agriculture, March 1946.

The purpose of this study was to evaluate the federal program of farm wage ceilings that were inaugurated in California in 1942 and have since spread to most parts of the nation. Attention is given to methods of wage rate determination, methods of handling adjustments, and effectiveness in management and enforcement of the wage ceiling orders. The program has given impetus to a greater amount of thought by farm operators toward calculated determination of wage and price relationships and should encourage the peaceful solution of farm wage rate problems in the state in future.

C. HEALTH AND MEDICAL CARE

RURAL HEALTH AND MEDICAL CARE. By William E. Garnett. Completed 1944. Published as Preliminary Progress Reports Nos. 27, 28, 29; "The Health and Medical Care Situation in Rural Virginia," Virginia Agricultural Experiment Station Bulletin 363; and "Rural Medical Care on the March," V.P.I. Bulletin Vol. 38, No. 4, 1944. (Leland B. Tate assisted with Experiment Station Study.) Research was accompanied by parallel effort to mold public opinion. The effort has resulted in the formation of a State Health and Medical Care Council, supported by 40 State-wide agencies and organizations. It is quite likely that the Legislature now in session will pass in part all the measures recommended.

The report recommended eight major Legislative measures for the improvement of the situation: (1) expansion of public health work to include complete State coverage with local units and periodic examination of school children with increased responsibility for correction of defects found; (2) expanded support by the State Department of Health for Tuberculosis, and for Cancer control work; (3) a State revolving fund for hospital construction to be loaned to localities; (4) provision for a hospital, health center survey as a basis for intelligent new hospital construction; (5) expanded State and county aid to the medically needy for medical and hospital care; (6) increased service scholarships for prospective rural doctors and dentists; (7) provision for a study and promotion of prepaid medical care or insurance, especially a system adapted to the needs of rural people; (8) a law requiring hospitals and nursing homes to be licensed and to meet certain standards.

SOCIAL AND ECONOMIC FACTORS IN HOSPITAL PLANNING. By C. H. Hamilton. Probable date of completion: October 1946. This is one phase of a survey by the Commission on Hospital Care. Financed by Foundations and the Federal Government. It will probably be widely used in every state.

MEDICAL PERSONNEL. FACILITIES AND SERVICES IN LOUISIANA. By Roy E. Hyde. Probable date of completion: June 1946. To be published as an Agricultural Extension Station bulletin at Louisiana State University which financed it. The bulletin will be distributed to rural leaders in the state.

MEDICAL AND HEALTH NEED FACILITIES IN RURAL MISSOURI. By Harold F. Kaufman. Completed. Published as three bulletins of the Missouri Agricultural Experiment Station: (1) Extent of Illness and Use of Medical Services in Rural Missouri, Progress Report Number 5, April 1945; (2) Illness in Rural Missouri (W. W. Morse, Junior Author), Research Bulletin 391, August 1945; (3) The Use of Medical Care in Rural Missouri, Research Bulletin, now in press. These are three publications of a larger study on health and medical care. The study was financed from Experiment Station funds.

Illness rates and use of medical and health service were correlated with certain social and economic factors, and implications for action programs were suggested.

CASS COUNTY RURAL HEALTH SERVICE, 1942-44. By Wilson T. Longmore and Theodore L. Vaughan. Under the direction of Carl C. Taylor. Completed May 1945. Published at Little Rock, Arkansas, by Bureau of Agricultural Economics, U. S. Department of Agricultural, May 1945. Part of a study of seven county experimental rural health programs sponsored by the U. S. Department of Agriculture. Plan fairly wide distribution of the study, with follow-up discussions by agricultural workers and farm people. Managers of the experimental health programs and regional FSA health specialists will discuss findings with officials of the cooperative health associations.

The focus of this study was on social organization by which medical services are made available to rural people, and not upon the technology of medicine. Structure and functions of the organization were described and appraised. Moreover, valuations of the program were recorded for members, former members, "never" members, officials of the association, and participating medical personnel. Investigators had access to association records, sampled population segments for interviews, observed the program in operation, and made use of pertinent census data.

WHEELER COUNTY RURAL HEALTH SERVICES ASSOCIATION. By M. Taylor Matthews. Under the direction of Carl C. Taylor. Completed September 1945. Published at Washington, D. C., as part of Monograph 1, "The Experimental Health Program of the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture," January 1946. Part of a study of seven county experimental rural health programs sponsored by the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture. Plan fairly wide distribution through the Pepper report, with follow-up discussions by agricultural workers and farm people. Managers of the Experimental Health Programs and Regional FSA Health Specialists will discuss findings with officials of the cooperative health associations.

Besides describing general health conditons, member-use of services and the local prepayment health plan based on the capitation principle which was largely equivalent to a salary arrangement for the doctors, the study analyzed people's attitudes regarding various program aspects: fees, services, feeling of freedom to use services, proposed program changes, etc. Briefly reported factors possibly affecting attitudes were repeated crises in Plains agriculture, the general depression, and some experience in rural planning and cooperation including an earlier scheme of non-subsidized prepayment medicine. Also studied were processes by which three-fourths of the people had come to approve Federal participation in health costs. Suggestions for further research might include: (1) restudy to ascertain any changes in attitudes regarding the health program, especially to determine factors influencing such changes; (2) study of surrounding areas to discover how the large interest developed in cooperation throughout this region.

HEALTH AND MEDICAL CARE IN ALABAMA. By Gilbert A. Sanford. Date of completion: 1945. Published at Montgomery, Alabama, May 1945. Financed by the Alabama State Planning Board and the Alabama Department of Health. Based upon the findings, legislation has already been passed providing for hospital construction.

This was a cooperative study with the State Health Department, aimed at assessing the health and medical facilities in the State in order to determine needs. A state master hospital plan was developed which would provide an integrated system of hospitals and other services.

SOCIAL PLANNING FOR THE REDUCTION OF TUBERCULOSIS IN THE SOUTH. By Virginia Stone. Under the direction of Gordon W. Blackwell (Master's thesis). Completed. Publication possibilities are being considered by the U. S. Public Health Service. Manuscript filed in the University of North Carolina Library and the Institute for Research in Social Science which sponsored the study.

NEVADA COUNTY RURAL HEALTH SERVICES ASSOCIATION, INC., 1942-44. By Theo L. Vaughan and Herbert Pryor. Under the direction of Carl C. Taylor. Completed December 1945. Published at Washington, D. C., as part of Monograph 1, "The Experimental Health Program of the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture," January 1946, Part of a study of seven county experimental rural health programs sponsored by the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture. Plan for fairly wide distribution through the Pepper report, with follow-up discussions by agricultural workers and farm people. Managers of the Experimental Health Programs and Regional FSA Health Specialists will discuss findings with officials of the cooperative health associations.

The focus of this study was on social organization by which medical services are made available to rural people, and not upon the technology of medicine. Structure and functions of the organization were described and appraised. Moreover, valuations of the program were recorded for members, former members, "never" members, officials of the association, and participating medical personnel. Investigators had access to association records, sampled population segments for interviews, observed the program in operation, and made use of pertinent census data.

D. HOUSING

THE HOUSING SITUATION IN RURAL VIRGINIA. By William E. Garnett. Probable date of completion: 1946. To be published, Fall 1946, as a Virginia Agricultural Experiment Station bulletin which has financed it. The study is accompanied by a comprehensive housing improvement campaign in cooperation with the Extension Service and other agencies.

PUBLIC LOW-COST HOUSING MANAGEMENT IN NORTH CAROLINA. By Miriam Kligman. Under the direction of Gordon W. Blackwell (Master's thesis). Probable date of completion: June 1946. Manuscript to be filed in the Library of the University of North Carolina. The study, developed in cooperation with the NHA--Region IV, was partially financed from the Smith Fund of the University of North Carolina and by the Institute for Research in Social Science at the University.

The work is a comparative study of management policies of housing projects in four selected North Carolina cities--Charlotte, High Point, Raleigh, Wilmington--emphasizing administrative practices, costs, tenant selection, eligibility, maintenance problems, manager-tenant relations, and community activities, with special attention to the last two. Conclusions will be drawn as to the Negro-white differences, effects of size of development on costs and management policies, and integration of the project with the surrounding communities. The chief method was the use of field research for the gathering of statistical and non-statistical data, and some tenant reactions. Further statistical research may be needed for background material on housing conditions in the cities studied.

CONSTRUCTION OF FARM HOUSING INDEXES FOR OKLAHOMA. By Robert T. MacMillan. Completed 1945. Published: Rural Farm Housing Characteristics in Oklahoma, Oklahoma Agricultural Experiment Station Bulletin, Stillwater, Oklahoma, Mimeo. Circ. M-140, May 1945; "Comparison of Farm Housing Indexes for Oklahoma," Social Forces, December 1945; "Farm Housing in Oklahoma," Southwestern Social Science Quarterly, December 1945. Study was financed by the Agricultural Experiment Station. Data will be used in special Rural Housing Course to be offered home demonstration agents at Oklahoma A. and M. College, July 1946.

The study compared the results of four methods used in the construction of the indexes. It also sought to determine what factors are associated with farm housing in Oklahoma. Methods used were (1) ranking, (2) relatives, (3) standard scoring, (4) factor analysis, applied to 16 items taken from the 1940 Census. Correlation techniques were used in ascertaining the relationship of selected variables to farm housing.

FARM HOUSING IN SOUTHERN OKLAHOMA. By Robert T. MacMillan. Completed 1945. Published: Farm Housing in Southern Oklahoma, Oklahoma Agricultural Extension Station Bulletin B-290, Stillwater, Oklahoma, November 1945; Social Factors Related to Farm Housing in Southern Oklahoma, Oklahoma Agricultural Experiment Station Bulletin T-22, Stillwater, Oklahoma, October 1945. The study is a part of the Southwestern Regional Land Tenure Project and was financed by the Agricultural Experiment Station and General Education Board.

A survey which describes and explains the character of farm housing in southern Oklahoma.

NEW FARM HOMES FOR OLD: RURAL PUBLIC HOUSING IN THE SOUTH. By Rupert B. Vance and Gordon W. Blackwell with the assistance of Howard G. McClain. In galley proof. E. JUVENILE DELINQUENCY

RECENT DEVELOPMENTS IN THE TREATMENT OF JUVENILE DELINQUENCY. By Belle Boone Beard. Probable date of completion: May 1946.

CHILDREN IN JAIL IN NORTH CAROLINA. By Ruth Thayer Hartman. Under the direction of Wiley B. Sanders (Master's thesis). Completed August 1945. On file in the University of North Carolina Library.

This study represents an effort to determine the psychological as well as the physical effects of jail detention on children. Ninety-five children who had experienced a period of jail confinement were interviewed at four of the training schools for juvenile delinquents. In so far as possible the attitudes of these children toward their apprehension, the physical conditions of the jail, the treatment received during detention, and the final disposition of their cases have been presented in their own words. Among the conclusions reached are: children should not be detained in jail, the insanitary conditions of the common jails jeopardize the physical well-being of the child offender; both the psychological and physical effect may permanently injure the delinquent's mental health and his social outlook; and this practice, through a lack of interpretation on the part of social workers and probation officers, virtually negates its own purpose.

JUVENILE COURTS IN NORTH CAROLINA, 1934-1944. By Wiley Britton Sanders. Probable date of completion: May 1946. Sponsored by the North Carolina State Board of Public Welfare and the University of North Carolina.

This study is divided into two parts. The first part consists of a classification of over 32,000 official juvenile court case records, collected by agents of the State Board of Public Welfare, from all juvenile courts in North Carolina covering the ten year period, July 1, 1934--June 30, 1944. Items tabulated are race, sex, date of hearing, age, charge, disposition, marital status of parents, and institutional record of parents. The second part of the study is a description of the organization and administrative procedure of the 107 juvenile courts in North Carolina, based on questionnaires filled out by field agents of the State Board of Public Welfare in joint interviews with the juvenile court judges and probation officers of each court.

YOUNGSTERS IN TROUBLE. By Walter L. Stone. Published by Council of Community Agencies, Nashville, Tennessee, 1945. Financed by the Community Chest of Nashville. Study used by Juvenile Court, child welfare and youth agencies.

Study gives 1944 Juvenile Court statistics and their relation to census tracts; trends in juvenile delinquency since 1930; causes, methods of meeting, facilities for prevention and treatment, and needs for further control of juvenile delinquency.

JUVENILE DELINQUENCY IN LAUDERDALE COUNTY, MISSISSIPPI. By W. A. Tyson. Completed January 1946. Manuscript filed with author. Sponsored by the Central Methodist Church. Planned for use in church and educational work, particularly in Meridian, Mississippi.

F. MARRIAGE AND THE FAMILY

MARITAL STATUS OF FURMAN ALUMNI, 1921 and 1936. By Joseph Leon Clark. Probable date of completion: April 1946. Not planned for publication. Manuscript filed with Furman University, Greenville, South Carolina, and Population Reference Bureau, Washington, D. C. Part of a study of Marital Status of College Alumni by Population Reference Bureau. Financed by Furman University and undertaken for the Population Reference Bureau.

Questionnaires were mailed to the alumni and alumnae of Furman University of the Classes of 1921 and 1936, requesting information concerning marriage, when, to whom, number and sex of children; full information concerning the colleges their wives or husbands attended, birth date of wife or husband, and type of business now employed in.

DYNAMIC MENTAL HYGIENE. By Ernest R. Groves and Catherine Groves. Now in page proof. To be released by Stackpole Sons, Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, 1946.

MARRIAGE ATTITUDES AND IDEALS. By Ernest R. Groves and Anna Greene Smith. Probable date of completion: 1946.

The study is based on the premarriage life histories of 300 young women. It considers family background, education, etc., with special emphasis on preparation for marriage as revealed through these biographical sketches.

SOCIAL PARTICIPATION OF RURAL AND URBAN FAMILIES IN KENTUCKY. By Harold F. Kaufman. Probable date of completion: Fall of 1946. To be published at Lexington, Kentucky, by the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station, University of Kentucky. Data were acquired from six field studies conducted by the Experiment Station over the last several years and financed from Experiment Station funds.

The participation of family heads and wives were correlated with several social and economic factors.

G. METHODS OF TEACHING, EDUCATIONAL SOCIOLOGY

SOCIOLOGICAL MATERIALS FOR THE TRAINING OF PROFESSIONAL PERSONNEL. By Belle Boone Beard. A joint study with Wayland J. Hayes. Probable date of completion: December 1946. Financed by the Rosenwald Fund.

TEACHING OF SOCIOLOGY IN THE LAST FIFTY YEARS. By L. L. Bernard. Part I: Completed and published in the American Journal of Sociology, May 1945; Part II: In progress; to be submitted for publication when completed, probably to Social Forces. This is one of several investigations made by the author, some published, others unpublished. The published project was undertaken at the request of the American Journal of Sociology.

COLLEGE TEACHING OF THE SOCIAL SCIENCES IN THE SOUTH. By Gordon W. Blackwell and Collaborators. Probable date of completion: 1946. Publication plans underway. The study was undertaken for the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools by the Institute for Research in Social Science at the University of North Carolina.

METHODS OF TEACHING SOCIAL SCIENCE IN SOUTHERN COLLEGES. By H. C. Brearley. Probable date of completion: April 1946. To be published as part of a larger volume. Part of a cooperative study being conducted by the Institute for Research in Social Science at the University of North Carolina for the Southern Association of Schools and Colleges.

This is a study, largely from secondary sources, of methods of classroom instruction in social science now prevailing in southern colleges and universities. An analysis is being made of purposes and teaching procedures in the hope of presenting a balanced picture of suitable methods of teaching.

EVALUATION AND TESTING IN COLLEGE TEACHING OF THE SOCIAL SCIENCES IN THE SOUTH. By Lee M. Brooks. Probable date of completion: September 1946. To be published as part of a larger volume. Part of a cooperative study of College Teaching of the Social Sciences in the South being conducted by the Institute for Research in Social Science at the University of North Carolina for the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

AN ANALYSIS OF SOCIAL EFFECTS OF ADULT EDUCATION IN SOUTH CAROLINA. By Mary E. Coker. Under the direction of Gordon W. Blackwell (Master's thesis). Completed January 1946. Manuscript filed in the University of North Carolina Library.

ADULT EDUCATION PROGRAMS OF NEGRO COLLEGES AND UNIVERSITIES. By William M. Cooper. Published in the Journal of Negro Education, Summer, 1945, pp. 307-11. Part of a Conference on Adult Education and the Negro.

This study attempts to discover and report: 1. What adult education programs are carried on by Negro colleges. 2. What major problems they encountered in developing adult education programs. 3. What plans they have in mind for future adult education programs. 4. Evaluation of what we have with recommendations for improvements. Information sheets and a personal letter were sent to the presidents of 106 Negro institutions listed in the U. S. Office of Education Educational Directory, 1944-45, Part III, Colleges and Universities. Replies were received from 61 institutions, 29 public and 32 private, located in 18 states and the District of Columbia.

CLASSIFIED SOCIOLOGICAL BIBLIOGRAPHY. Compiled by Laura Smith Ebaugh. Under the direction of the Commission on the Teaching of Sociology of the Southern Sociological Society. Completed. Published at Greenville, South Carolina, by Furman University Press, January 1945. Financed by the Commission on the Teaching of Sociology which will embody it into its final report. The bibliography is a compilation of six authoritative lists.

THE PHILANDER SMITH STUDENT AVERAGING BELOW "C". By John R. Ewbank. Date of completion indefinite. To be published in the Philander Smith College Quarterly.

TEACHER TENURE IN THE RURAL SCHOOL. By Wayne T. Gray. Probable date of completion: Spring or Summer 1946. Possible publication in a sociological journal. Partially financed by Union College, Barbourville, Kentucky.

This study is an attempt to find the average tenure of teachers in schools of a county in the hilly part of Kentucky and to see if there is any correlation between type of school or location of school and the tenure of the teacher. A record of the teachers in the schools of the county for a period of ten years was obtained checking those who taught in the same schools and those teaching in different schools but in the county. Visits were made to the majority of the schools in the county for personal observation of the teaching methods of many of the teachers. Experience with many of these teachers as students at Union College, Barbourville, Kentucky, was also recorded. Materials are not yet in sufficiently organized form to draw definite conclusions.

SOCIOLOGICAL MATERIALS FOR THE TRAINING OF PROFESSIONAL PERSONNEL. By Wayland J. Hayes. A joint study with Belle Boone Beard. Probable date of completion: December 1946. Partially financed by the Rosenwald Fund and Vanderbilt Institute of Research and Training in Social Science.

A REPORT OF PUBLIC SCHOOL FACILITIES FOR NEGROES IN ATLANTA, GEORGIA. By a committee of the Atlanta Urban League under the chairmanship of R. O. Johnson, Lithographed at Atlanta, Georgia, by the Urban League, January 1945. This study contributes to the effort to secure better schools for all children in metropolitan Atlanta. Financed by the Citizens' Committee on Public Education. It is serving as a factual basis for a program of community education and organization, particularly as a motivation for civic participation.

This study attempts to determine the status of public school facilities for Negroes in Atlanta, Georgia. It approaches the task through (1) an analysis of the racial composition of the total population and the location of areas of concentration of Negro population with some attention to the socio-economic status of the Negro population: (2) an analysis of the adequacy of existing educational facilities for Negroes in Atlanta as shown in the number of Negro children and the general educational facilities provided for them, and areas of youth population concentration in relation to educational facilities within the areas. On the basis of facts revealed through 1 and 2 and the aim of education in Georgia--"to help the individual to be the best possible member of a democratic society and to prepare him to assume the responsibilities, to share the benefits and to contribute to the betterment of that society," the following four principles were formulated for guiding the making of recommendations for the improvement of public education for Negroes in Atlanta: (1) there should exist and be available for Negro children the same types of educational opportunities as there are for white children; (2) the teacher-pupil ratio in Negro schools should be as low as that in white schools; (3) the length of the school day should be the same for the Negro child as it is for the white child; (4) the same types of physical accommodations and facilities in the public schools should exist and be available for Negro children as for white children.

THE SOCIOLOGICAL CURRICULUM IN THE SOUTHEASTERN STATES. By Robert I. Kutak. Under the direction of the Commission on the teaching of Sociology of the Southern Sociological Society. Published in Social Forces, 24, October 1945, pp. 56-66. Part of a project on the teaching of sociology in the South. Financed by the General Education Board. An expanded report may be published later by the Commission on the Teaching of Sociology.

This study was part of the report of the Southern Commission on the Teaching of Sociology, four sections of which were published in Social Forces, 24 (October, 1945). It was based on a study of the catalogues of colleges in the eleven Southeastern states, and on a questionnaire sent to heads of departments of sociology in this region. The main conclusions were: (1) There is no uniform program of courses for those who major in sociology. Each institution has a different set of requirements for sociology majors; (2) There should be a reduction in the number of courses offered in sociology, a clarification of course titles and contents, greater differentiation of courses on the basis of difficulty, clarification of the objectives of the sociological curriculum, greater use of new methods of teaching, better training for the sociological faculty, and greater agreement with respect to whether sociology is a cultural or scientific discipline.

A STUDY OF COMMUNITY RESOURCES AS MATERIALS OF INSTRUCTION IN SOCIAL STUDIES IN HIGH SCHOOLS FOR NEGROES IN ATLANTA, GEORGIA. By Ora D. Logan. Under the direction of R. O. Johnson (Master's thesis). Date of completion: July 1945. Manuscript filed in Atlanta University Library. Part of a study of The Status of the Social Studies in Secondary Schools (Negro) in Georgia and the Extent to which Secondary Schools in Georgia Are Relating Their Programs to the Community. Planned to use the study as a pattern for other studies and as a basis for improving the curriculum and teaching.

This study is a part of the program of the School of Education of Atlanta University to lay a scientific basis for the improvement of teaching and curriculum development, and the relating of the school program to community life. The purposes of this study were: (1) to prepare a list of types of community resources generally recommended for use as materials of instruction; (2) to develop descriptive criteria for teachers for determining proper use and functions of community resources; (3) to prepare for teachers a list of available community resources in Atlanta, Georgia; (4) to describe and give information regarding available resources; (5) to determine what resources are being used; (6) to determine the manner in which these resources are being used; (7) to determine students' evaluation of field trip experiences and community projects as a part of the social studies curriculum.

The purposes were achieved through the following method of procedure: (1) a survey of literature was made for a list of community resources generally recommended as materials of instruction in social studies; (2) a survey of literature was made in order to develop descriptive criteria for determining proper use and functions of community resources; (3) a list was made of Atlanta's community resources; (4) a detailed description was made of all available resources; (5) a check list and questionnaire were administered to social studies teachers to determine resources being used and the manner of their use; (6) a questionnaire was administered to students to determine their evaluation of field trips and projects.

A STUDY OF GRADUATES OF AGNES SCOTT COLLEGE, 1928-1945. By Louise Hughston Sievers. Under the direction of Gordon W. Blackwell (Master's thesis). Probable date of completion: Summer 1946. Manuscript to be filed in the University of North Carolina Library and the Institute for Research in Social Science. Part of a larger study of Southern Leadership.

ADMINISTRATIVE PROBLEMS IN COLLEGE TEACHING OF THE SOCIAL SCIENCES IN THE SOUTH. By Logan Wilson. Probable date of completion: September 1946. To be published as part of a larger volume. Part of a cooperative study of College Teaching of the Social Sciences in the South being conducted by the Institute for Research in Social Science at the University of North Carolina for the Southern Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools.

EDUCATIONAL SOCIOLOGY IN THE UNITED STATES. By Logan Wilson. Probable date of completion: Spring 1946. Manuscript of about one hundred pages to be published as a monograph in Spanish for use in Latin American countries. Part of American Sociology Series being edited by Kingsley Davis.

H. POPULATION

ANALYSIS OF CURRENT SOCIOLOGICAL LITERATURE ON OLD AGE. By Belle Boone Beard. Probable date of completion: April 1946.

DIFFERENTIAL FERTILITY IN LOUISIANA. By J. Allan Beegle and T. Lynn Smith. In progress. To be published as a Louisiana Agricultural Experiment Station bulletin. Financed by Louisiana Agricultural Experiment Station.

MIGRATION AND FERTILITY IN JOHNSON AND ROBERTSON COUNTIES. By Howard W. Beers. Probable date of completion: June 1946. To be published by the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station, 1946. Part of a study of Population Changes in Johnson and Robertson Counties. Financed by the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station and the General Education Board. Planned to distribute findings as Experiment Station Bulletin.

The study will analyze migration and fertility among members of farm families in two selected Kentucky counties.

NEGRO POPULATION IN KENTUCKY. By Howard W. Beers and Catherine P. Heflin. Published by the University of Kentucky, March 1946. Part of a larger study of Population Changes in Kentucky. Financed by the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station. Report in the form of an Experiment Station Bulletin distributed widely within the State.

From this study it is clear that treatment of any issue concerning Negroes in Kentucky requires recognition of several conspicuous trends and conditions: declining numbers, urbanward movements, declining birthrates, continuing out-migration, an increase in average age, an absence of Negroes in the middle ranges of the occupational ladder, a relatively low average level of school attainment, and a relatively low level of housing.

A DEMOGRAPHIC ANALYSIS OF OKLAHOMA VILLAGES. By John C. Belcher. Under the direction of T. Lynn Smith (Master's thesis). Probable date of completion: June 1945.

WOMEN IN THE LABOR FORCE IN LOUISIANA. By Gloria Count. Under the direction of Rudolf Heberle (Master's thesis). Probable date of completion: Spring 1946. Part of study of occupations and industries in Louisiana. Financed by graduate student fellowship.

OIL FIELD WORKERS IN THE SOUTHWEST. By T. Stanton Dietrich. Under the direction of Rudolf Heberle (Doctoral dissertation). Probable date of completion, indefinite. Part of study of occupations and industries in Louisiana.

VIRGINIA RURAL YOUTH STUDY. By William E. Garnett. Seven reports completed and published by the Virginia Agricultural Experiment Station; one manuscript, Virginia Rural Youth Adjustments, completed and presented for publication by Virginia Agricultural Experiment Station, Blacksburg, Virginia, June 1946; Youth Adjustments in a Tobacco Culture Setting, by Dorothy Jones, being revised for publication, by W. E. Garnett with probable publication, June 1946. Studies in the Virginia Rural Youth Studies Series, financed by Virginia Agricultural Experiment Station, State Dept. of Education, WPA, NYA, etc. Planned to use in conferences, etc.

Three approaches were used in this study: (1) analysis from a state-wide standpoint and presentation in a coordinated summary of pertinent data from various types of records and reports, especially trend data; (2) intensive study of limited number of type situations; (3) as supplementary units, study of special phases not covered by the above. The result shows the need of many adjustments in the activities of youth-serving agencies. Plans are under way for a comprehensive project under the Rural Sociology Division of the Experiment Station, in cooperation with the State Department of Education and other agencies to make an analysis of high school social science teaching and the preparation of social science teachers with parallel work to prepare social science teaching material dealing with State conditions and problems.

LABOR FORCE DEFINITIONS AND MEASUREMENTS IN RELATION TO EMPLOYMENT AND INCOME LEVELS. By Margaret Jarman Hagood (with Louis J. Ducoff as senior author). Under direction of Subcommittees on Labor Force Statistics, Labor Market Research Committee, Social Science Research Council. Draft mimeographed, November 1945, and in process of review; probable publication by Social Science Research Council in 1946.

The first objective of this monograph is to introduce a larger measure of understanding of the problems relating to the adoption of a common set of concepts among the several groups of persons who work with labor force statistics. To serve this objective an exposition of labor force concepts and measurement techniques in current use is presented along with a critical examination of the present status of current national labor force statistics. The second objective of the monograph is toexplore what further steps in the refinement and improvement of labor force measurement would serve various needs in periods of different national income and employment levels. A third objective of the monograph is to examine the implications of developments in labor force statistics for labor force analysis, to indicate certain analysis needed because of these developments, and to formulate certain specific problems in labor force concepts and measurement on which research effort should be focussed.

THE LABOR FORCE IN LOUISIANA. By Rudolf Heberle. Completed. To be published as soon as possible. Part of study of occupations and industries in Louisiana. Financed by Social Science Research Council and Institute of Population Research at Louisiana State University.

SURVEY OF THE WAR-TIME LABOR FORCE OF LOUISIANA. By Rudolph Heberle. Completed. Mimeographed, Baton Rouge, Louisiana, 1945; a condensation, "War-Time Changes in the Labor Force in Louisiana," published in Social Forces, 24, March 1946, pp. 290-99. Financed by the War Man Power Commission, State Office.

THE URBAN ADJUSTMENT OF RURAL MIGRANTS. By Catherine P. Heflin and Howard W. Beers. Probable date of completion: June 1946. To be published by the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station, 1946. Part of a larger study of the Urban Status of Rural Migrants. Financed by the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station. Planned to distribute Bulletin widely.

For the rural person contemplating life in a town or city, this study suggests that "all things are possible." It is clear that many rural people adjust fully to urban ways and reach the upper rungs of the socio-economic ladder. More of them, however, find themselves located in middle or low rent areas and somewhat less completely adjusted to the city than their neighbors of urban birth. It is clear also that adjustment in the city is greatly influenced by the experiences and the position of the migrant during the period of his rural rearing. The adequate preparation of prospective migrants among rural youth for social and economic success in the city might well become an objective for the institutions of the rural community. The successful absorption by cities of incoming rural migrants might well become an objective for the institutions of the urban community.

POPULATION TRENDS IN GEORGIA, 1900-1940. By R. O. Johnson. In progress. Probable date of completion: June 1947. Part of program to lay a sound basis for educational planning in Georgia. Study to be used as a basis for establishing broad principles to guide studies of school consolidation and school plant development.

This study will seek to determine the trends of population among Negroes and whites with particular reference to farm to village and city migrations.

EDUCATIONAL STATUS OF THE POPULATION OF LOUISIANA. By Louise Kemp and T. Lynn Smith. Probable date of completion: July 1946. To be published as a bulletin of the Louisiana Agricultural Experiment Station. Financed by Louisiana Agricultural Experiment Station.

HEALTH AND MORTALITY IN LOUISIANA. By Louise Kemp and T. Lynn Smith. Published at Baton Rouge, Louisiana, by Louisiana Agricultural Experiment Station, May 1945, as Experiment Station Bulletin No. 390. Financed by Louisiana Agricultural Experiment Station.

ETHNIC GROUPS IN THE SOUTHEAST. By Frederick B. Parker. Under the direction of Rupert B. Vance and Guy B. Johnson (Doctoral dissertation). Completed: April 1946. Manuscript filed in the University of North Carolina Library and the Institute for Research in Social Science.

A STATISTICAL ANALYSIS OF SELECTIVE SERVICE DATA FOR NORTH CAROLINA. By Kie Sebastian. Under the direction of Gordon W. Blackwell (Master's thesis). Completed August 1945. Manuscript filed in the University of North Carolina Library and the Institute for Research in Social Science which sponsored the study. Part of a comprehensive study of Selective Service in North Carolina.

This is an analysis of relationships between rejection rates and selected socio-economic indices on a county and subregional basis.

COMPARISON OF EDUCATIONAL STATUS OF RURAL AND URBAN POPULATIONS IN LOUISIANA By Marion B. Smith. Completed May 1946. Financed by Institute of Population Research, Louisiana State University.

PRIVATE SCHOOL ENROLLMENT IN LOUISIANA, 1929-1943. By Marion B. Smith. Completed December 1945. Published in Proceedings, Louisiana Academy of Sciences. Financed by Institute of Population Research, Louisiana State University.

SEX RATIO OF LOUISIANA SCHOOL POPULATION. By Marion B. Smith. Completed February 1946. Financed by Institute of Population Research, Louisiana State University.

A DEMOGRAPHIC STUDY OF THE AMERICAN NEGRO. By T. Lynn Smith. Completed. Published in Social Forces, March 1945.

THE RECENT INCREASE OF PERSONS IN THE SOCIAL SECURITY AGES. By T. Lynn Smith. Published in the American Sociological Review, 10, June 1945, pp. 414-18.

THE PEOPLE OF OUR COMMUNITY--NASHVILLE AND DAVIDSON COUNTY. By Walter L. Stone. Published at Nashville, Tennessee, by the Council of Community Agencies, 1945. Financed by Community Chest. Used by business, welfare, civic, and religious organizations in studying population trends by census tracts and by comparison of 1930 with 1940.

By means of tables and maps, the characteristics of the population of Nashville and Davidson County, Tennessee are analyzed according to sex, age, race, education, occupations, economic status, housing, social disorganization, etc. Much of the statistical data for Nashville is plotted according to census tracts.

ALL THESE PEOPLE: THE NATION'S HUMAN RESOURCES IN THE SOUTH. By Rupert B. Vance with the collaboration of Nadia Danilevsky. Published by the University of North Carolina Press, Chapel Hill, 1945.

WANTED: THE SOUTH'S FUTURE FOR THE NATION. By Rupert B. Vance. Completed. Published at Atlanta, Georgia, by the Southern Regional Council, 1946. This is a condensation of the author's latest work, All These People: The Nation's Human Resources in the South--a study of the southern people sponsored by the Institute for Research in Social Science at the University of North Carolina.

ALABAMA'S PEOPLE. By Lillian E. Worley. Under the direction of the Bureau of Public Administration, University of Alabama. Published at University, Alabama, November 1945. Financed by the University through the Bureau of Public Administration. Distributed to legislators and other governing officials, Planning Board members, educators, prominent lay citizens, in the hope that it may prove useful in certain aspects of state planning. The study has already been scored for readability preliminary to possible translation into more simple language.

THE OPERATION OF SELECTIVE SERVICE IN ALABAMA BY COUNTIES AND FOR THE STATE. By Lillian E. Worley. Under the direction of Gordon W. Blackwell. In progress. Date of completion indefinite. Possible publication by the University of Alabama. In part, a supplementary study to Alabama's People. (See above.) May be of value to planning, health, and educational forces in building legislative programs.

I. RACE, CULTURE, SOCIAL DIFFERENTIATION

PRINCIPLES OF COLONIAL SOCIOLOGY. By Werner J. Cahnman. In progress. Date of completion indefinite.

This study will use mostly African, Near Eastern, and Western Hemisphere materials. It is hoped that it will give: (a) a theoretical framework for the study of colonial problems; (b) provide thereby an opportunity to understand better the problems of race relations in the American South.

CASTE, CLASS, AND RACE: A STUDY IN SOCIAL DYNAMICS. By Oliver C. Cox. Probable date of completion: June 1946. Manuscript now being read by prospective publishers. Part of a study of modern social change from capitalism to socialism.

This study endeavors to develop a theory of race relations and class struggle. The method is historical and analytical. The conclusion appears to be that race relations are one aspect or variation of the modern political-class struggle. However, further research is needed on the place of modern social revolution in social change.

CHANGING PATTERN OF FOOD PREPARATION OF SMALL TOWN FAMILIES OF MISSISSIPPI. By Dorothy Dickins. Mississippi Agricultural Experiment Station Bulletin 415, April 1945 (In press). Financed by the Experiment Station.

A REGIONAL APPROACH TO FOOD HABITS AND ATTITUDE RESEARCH: SOME IMPLICATIONS OF RECENT FOOD PREPARATION STUDIES OF MISSISSIPPI. By Dorothy Dickins. Paper No. 106, Mississippi Agricultural Experiment Station. December 31, 1945 (to be published by Q. M. C. Subsistence Research and Development Laboratory. Office of Quartermaster General, in Proceedings of Conference on Food Acceptance Research--Regional Food Consumption Habits and Nutrition). Financed by the Experiment Station.

SOME FACTORS RELATED TO FOOD PREPARATION. By Dorothy Dickins. Now in first rough draft and will be available as a Bulletin of the Mississippi Agricultural Experiment Station, summer 1946. Financed by the Experiment Station.

Its purpose is to examine some of the factors probably related to family food preparation--factors such as family composition, schooling, and food and nutrition information of homemaker, economic status of family, family background of homemaker and male head, time expenditures in food preparation, time scheduling of homemaker, type of menus served, equipment for food preparation, and arrangement of this equipment.

RECONNAISSANCE SURVEYS: MAGOFFIN COUNTY, KENTUCKY; SCOTT COUNTY, KENTUCKY; HAYWOOD COUNTY, NORTH CAROLINA; GREENBRIER COUNTY, VIRGINIA. By Linden S. Dodson. Completed January 1945. Manuscript filed with the Bureau of Agricultural Economics, Appalachian Region, Washington, D. C. Part of a sociological study of rural America. Sponsored by the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture, Division of Farm Population and Rural Welfare. To be used as a source of information on the social organization of selected rural counties in the United States.

The purpose of these county surveys was to give an overview of such factors as physical characteristics, settlement patterns, ways of making a living, social organization and participation, value systems and leadership in 71 selected counties in the type-of-farming areas of the United States. The immediate objective was to provide guide material in certain phases of postwar planning relating to rural people. The method followed was for the worker to spend about three weeks in each county, then write a report of 30-50 pages covering the factors mentioned above. The reconnaissance survey in each county is in the nature of a pilot or exploratory study to be followed in the next four years by a carefully prepared monograph. An additional 4-6 months are to be spent in each county preparatory to writing the monograph. The monographs are designed to be of use to professional workers in agriculture and to those working in the schools, churches, and government of each county studied.

LEVEL OF LIVING RELATED TO LAND CLASSES, By Clinton L. Folse. Probable date of completion: January 1947. To be published as a Virginia Agricultural Experiment Station bulletin, Spring 1947. Financed by the Agricultural Experiment Station. It is possible that the study may be used in TVA experimental farms.

A STUDY OF 500 WHITE AND 500 NEGRO GIVEN NAMES: AN ATTEMPT TO TEST THE ASSIGNMENT OF NAMES AS AN INDEX OF FAMILIAL CONTROL PATTERNS IN GIVEN SOCIO-ECONOMIC CLASSES. By Paul N. Foreman. Date of probable completion: June 1946.

The hypothesis is that a person's belief as to who was primarily responsible for the assignment of given names might be used as a criterion of matriarchial, patriarchial or equalitarian familial control patterns and thus be used as a quantitative test of the frequently observed shift in type control patterns among Negro families with a sample of white schedules used as contrast control. A schedule is now being completed which will isolate size of sibling group, case ordinal position, socio-economic level (using Edwards), attribution of responsibility for assignment of own names, satisfaction with names, and common use of given names, common diminutives, or "sport" nicknames. The manipulation planned will allow among other things: (1) relation of attribution of assignment to socio-economic class, by sex and color; (2) relation of use of diminutives or sport nicknames to socio-economic class, by sex and color; (3) relation of satisfaction with given names to socio-economic class, by sex and color; (4) a check on frequency of use of given or familial names as given names, by sex and color and socio-economic class; (5) a typological study of name usages. The plan is to use two college white (Oklahoma, Mississippi) and two college Negro (Oklahoma and Mississippi) samples of 250 cases each to allow a double break in the samples. When this is done, the schedule is in form which could be used for a further sample of public school white and Negro cases for a further check on generalizations--if any.

INVESTIGATION OF NEGRO WORK IN THE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH U. S. By Price H. Gwynn, Jr. Under the direction of the Committee of the Presbyterian Church U. S. Probable date of completion: March 1946. To be published at Richmond, Virginia, about April 15, 1946. Financed by the Presbyterian Church U. S. and the Rosenwald Fund. To be used as basis of report to the General Assembly of the Church.

THE SOCIAL STRUCTURE OF THE BAGANDA TRIBE OF EAST AFRICA. By Ernest Balintuma Kalibala. Under the direction of Pitirim A. Sorokin (Doctoral dissertation). Probable date of completion: April 1946. To be submitted to Longmans, Green, and Co., for possible publication. Manuscript to be filed with the Department of Sociology at Harvard University. Part of a sociological analysis of a primitive society, the study is intended as reference material for students in anthropolocy and sociology.

This is an investigation of the social structure of the Baganda Tribe of East Africa. The larger project which the author contemplates is A Sociological Analysis of the Primitive Social Structure. This inquiry will undertake to make a thorough analysis of the studies already made which have used the anthropo-sociological methods and techniques, the primary and secondary methods, the empirical approach, and other special devices, and then compare the results with the findings of the author in which the participant observer method is used and in which case studies will be utilized. This will test the author's belief that our major contemporary theories and techniques of research of primitive societies are inadequate. Particularly it is believed that the theories that hold that primitive societies are showing signs of a vanishing culture and that they are peculiar anthropological phenomena are incorrect and that the fallacy grows out of the inadequacy of methods of research.

DEFINING PRESTIGE RANK IN A RURAL COMMUNITY. By Harold F. Kaufman. Under the direction of Leonard S. Cottrell, Jr. (Doctoral dissertation, in part). Completed. Two papers published in Sociometry, May 1945 and February 1946; papers to be combined into a Sociometry monograph. Publications present a small part of the data of a larger study on Social Stratification in a New York Rural Community. Financed by the Cornell Experiment Station and the Bureau of Agricultural Economics of the U. S. Dept. of Agriculture.

Prestige rank was determined by the composite ratings of 14 community members. The social psychological aspect of the rating procedure was analyzed and the 14 prestige judges were compared as to their rating ability.

SURVEY OF THE RACIAL CONDITIONS IN THE INLAND EMPIRE (Northwest United States). By Tolbert H. Kennedy. Completed. To be published as a study of State College of Washington, Spring 1946. SOCIAL FACTORS OF FARM OWNERSHIP IN OKLAHOMA. By Robert T. MacMillan and Otis D. Duncan. Completed 1945. Published: Social Factors of Farm Ownership in Oklahoma, Oklahoma Agricultural Experiment Station Bulletin B-289, Stillwater, Oklahoma, November 1945. Part of the Southwestern Regional Land Tenure Project and financed by the Agricultural Experiment Station and the General Education Board.

The study analyzes data available from the Census and from numerous surveys, in Oklahoma, which show the importance of various social factors on the achievement of farm ownership.

FACTORS ASSOCIATED WITH NEGRO UNEMPLOYMENT IN THE URBAN UNITED STATES. By Edward N. Palmer. Under the direction of Clark Tibbitts and Amos Hawley (Doctoral dissertation). Completed May 1945. Manuscript filed with University of Michigan Library, Ann Arbor, Michigan. Financed by the Julius Rosenwald Fund.

The research problem posed for investigation is the partial isolation of the statistical measurement of the relative influence of four factors on the relatively higher unemployment of urban Negro workers when compared to urban white workers. The factors to be investigated include: age, sex, occupation, health status, and race discrimination. This is done for the purpose of obtaining a more refined quantitative estimate of race discrimination than now exists. The estimate was subjected to investigation in terms of the possible influence of other factors upon it. These non-quantified factors include: education, efficiency and work habits, labor union membership, and wage differences. The analysis involved three major steps of exposition: (1) the demonstration that the several factors have a gross relationship with employment status and that these relationships hold for both the white and Negro labor forces, (2) the demonstration that the white and Negro labor forces possess the factors grossly associated with unemployment in significantly different proportions, (3) the effort to measure the influence of each factor on the relative excess of Negro unemployment. The method of standardization used in conjunction with multiple classification of the data was the major statistical technique employed. The basic conclusion of the study is that essentially the whole of the excess of the unemployment among urban Negro workers results from race discrimination.

Several suggestions for further research can be mentioned: (1) to refine further the measurement of discrimination by increasing the number of factors under investigation; (2) to check the findings by employing another method--perhaps "the analysis of variance" technique; (3) to inquire into how economic discrimination affects the characteristics of the urban Negro labor force.

RACIAL SEGREGATION IN TRANSPORTATION IN ATLANTA, GEORGIA. By Ira De A. Reid. Completed January 1946. To be published at Atlanta, Georgia, in excerpts to be used as source book for community action, 1946. Project intended to be broadened into a study of 13 cities. Manuscript filed with Southern Regional Council, Atlanta, Georgia, and Department of Sociology, Atlanta University. Financed by Southern Regional Council. It is planned to use the study in the formation of local action committees.

How can a southern community pose the problem of racial separation so as to stimulate local action on its problems? This was the basic research problem. The research was conducted by the participant observer method, using case incidents, photographs, and statistics to indicate how the "separate but equal" law actually operates. White and colored investigators were used. Tentative conclusions indicate that separation laws do not apply successfully to any carriers save railroads, and that in no case is the equal provision maintained.

TABIO: A STUDY IN RURAL SOCIAL ORGANIZATION. By T. Lynn Smith, Justo Rodrigues Diaz, and Luis Roberto Garcia. Published by the Office of Foreign Agricultural Relations, U. S. Dept. of Agriculture, Washington, D. C., November 1945. Study was undertaken for the Ministry of National Economy (Colombia) and the U. S. Depts. of Agriculture and State.

J. RECREATION

CHURCH RECREATION IN NORTH CAROLINA. By Galen Elliott and Harold D. Meyer. Under the direction of Harold D. Meyer. Completed October 1945. Published by the North Carolina Recreation Commission, November 1945. Plan to broaden scope so as to enlarge numbers. Financed by the North Carolina Recreation Commission for whom the study was made. The published study has been sent to over 3000 churches and 500 leaders in North Carolina and other parts of the nation.

Of the approximately 9000 churches in North Carolina, 400 that were doing some work in the field of recreation were selected. Among these were Catholic, Jewish, and Protestant churches of all denominations. A questionnaire was mailed to these churches. 324 replies were received. The data were analyzed and the results put into mimeographed form. The unquestionable conclusions of the study are: (1) that the churches are changing their attitudes toward recreation and are moving toward a positive approach; (2) that they are very much interested in program activities; (3) that they are searching for aid and assistance.

AN INVENTORY OF PHYSICAL RESOURCES FOR RECREATION IN THE SOUTHERN STATES. By Nancy Jefferis. Under the direction of Harold D. Mayer and Gordon W. Blackwell (Master's thesis). Completed: May 1946. Manuscript filed with the University of North Carolina Library and the Institute for Research in Social Science.

NATURAL RECREATION RESOURCES OF THE SOUTH. By Harold D. Meyer. Date of probable completion: April 1946. Part of an inventory of southern resources financed and sponsored by the Southern Association of Science and Industry and the Institute for Research in Social Science at the University of North Carolina. The study should serve as an inventory of the present status of recreational resources in the South and offer recommendations for future growth.

A monograph which will indicate the natural recreation resources of the Southern States including Federal, State, county, and municipal areas and facilities.

TWELVE RECREATION SURVEYS OF NORTH CAROLINA CITIES AND COUNTIES. By Harold D. Meyer and Staff. Eight surveys completed; four now in progress. Upon completion, mimeographed. Under the auspices of the State Planning Board, these are continuous studies of cities in North Carolina. The mimeographed results are sent to interested groups to be used in aiding communities to understand resources and needs.

Cities and counties of the State are anxious to have recreation surveys and studies. The North Carolina Recreation Commission has made a study of four counties--Onslow, Granville, Cleveland and Guilford, and surveys of the following cities: Elizabeth City, Burlington, Raleigh, Waynesville, Liberty, Tarboro, Oxford, and Tryon. Surveys of four cities are now in process. The objective is to find out the present status of recreation in the community and to offer recommendations as to needs. The studies are followed up by community meetings with authoritative groups leading toward action in development of the recreation program.

YOUTH CENTERS. By Harold D. Meyer. Date of completion: June 1945. Mimeographed by the University of North Carolina Extension Division for the North Carolina Recreation Commission which provided the funds for the study. Over 800 kits of materials on Youth Centers and results of special studies have been sent out to hundreds of local communities.

With the tremendous interest in youth activities there has spread throughout the nation a growing development of Youth Centers,--Teen Towns, Teen Bars, Teen Taverns. A study was made of 98 of these scattered throughout the nation, the objective being to find out how the centers are set up, the program, the administrative leadership between youth and adults, finances, program of activities, etc. From the studies came mimeographed material to aid North Carolina communities desiring to promote Youth Centers. They all seem to follow a similar pattern. There is a real question as to whether they are "fads and frills" and the extent to which without national organization to back them they will continue.

MUNICIPAL RECREATION IN NORTH CAROLINA. By Arlia Tomlinson. Under the direction of Harold D. Meyer (Master's thesis). Probable date of completion: August 1946. Published study to be used by the North Carolina Recreatiom Commission in cities of the State and elsewhere. Manuscript will be filed in the Library of the University of North Carolina. Study was financed by the North Carolina Recreation Commission. It is to serve as a basis or guide for legal recognition of recreation in North Carolina and also as an inventory of present status.

This study covers all the municipalities of the State with over 2,500 population, the objective being to find out what these cities are doing for recreation, the administrative set-up, finances, leadership, etc. It should give to the State an up-to-date picture of the status of municipal recreation.

K. REGION

AN INVENTORY OF SOUTHERN RESOURCES. By Gordon W. Blackwell and Howard W. Odum, assisted by staff members of the Institute for Research in Social Science and others. A series of 13 monographs, of which 7 have been completed and 6 are in preparation. Publication now being arranged. Manuscripts filed with the Institute for Research in Social Science at the University of North Carolina. Financed and sponsored by the Southern Association of Science and Industry and the Institute.

THE CUMBERLAND PLATEAU IN TENNESSEE. By William E. Cole and William B. Jones, Jr. Probable date of completion: September 1946. Publication plans incomplete. Manuscript to be filed with the Department of Sociology, University of Tennessee. Financed by a research grant from the General Education Board.

SOUTHERN-BORN LEADERS OUTSIDE THE SOUTHEAST. A STUDY OF DISTINGUISHED SOUTHERNERS AND THEIR VIEWS OF THE SOUTH. By Edna C. Cooper. Under the direction of Howard W. Odum (Doctoral dissertation). In progress. Probable date of completion: March 1947. Possible publication through journals. Manuscript to be filed with the Institute for Research in Social Science at the University of North Carolina and the Library of the University of North Carolina. This is one aspect of a comprehensive study of southern leadership now under way in the Institute for Research in Social Science. This particular study is being financed from grants by the Rosenwald Fund and the General Education Board.

This study attempts to inquire systematically into the nature and range of southern distinction outside the Southeast. What are the factors and conditions which influenced these leaders to emigrate from the region of their birth? Having gone to other regions of the United States, what are their attitudes toward the Southeast and its problems? What constructive suggestions do they offer for the future of the South? Through a study of selected men of leadership and eminence we hope to secure opinions on "what is wrong with the Southeast" and "what should be done to improve these conditions" to make the region more attractive to those leaders who wish to remain. The project divides itself into two main parts: the geographic distribution, personal and group characteristics of the southern-born distinguished persons residing outside the Southeast; and southern problems as seen through the eyes of these leaders.

ECONOMIC TRENDS IN THE TENNESSEE VALLEY. By Lewis C. Copeland. In progress. Financed by the TVA.

THE WAY OF THE SOUTH. A BIOGRAPHY OF THE SOUTHERN UNITED STATES. By Howard W. Odum. Now in press. To be published by the Macmillan Company, New York, Fall 1946.

IN SEARCH OF THE REGIONAL BALANCE OF AMERICA. Edited by Howard W. Odum and Katharine Jocher. Part I, "From Empirical Studies to Regionalism," contributed by Howard W. Odum and Katharine Jocher. Published as the March 1945 issue of Social Forces. As one in a series of volumes commemorating the Sesquicentennial of the University of North Carolina, published at Chapel Hill, by the University of North Carolina Press, 1946.

SOUTHERN LEADERSHIP. By Howard W. Odum and others. Under the general direction of Howard W. Odum. In progress--date of completion indefinite. However, several units have been completed including; The Development of Leadership by Southern Women through Clubs and Organizations by Margaret N. Price; An Inquiry into the Pattern of College and University Leadership in the South since 1900; "A Study of the Honor Graduates of 94 Southern Colleges and Universities in 1939 and 1940," by Ruth Lynch Kernodle, Social Forces, 24, May 1946. Manuscripts filed with the Institute for Research in Social Science. Other studies now in progress include: Southern Leaders Outside the South: A Study of the South's Contribution to the Nation's Leadership by Edna C. Cooper; Religious Leadership in the South since 1900 by Howard G. McClain; A Study of Graduates of Agnes Scott College, 1928-1945 by Louise Hughston Sievers.

COMPARATIVE STUDY OF LEADERSHIP IN NORTH CAROLINA, GEORGIA, AND TENNESSEE. By Anna Greene Smith. Under the direction of Howard W. Odum. Probable date of completion: 1947. Part of a comprehensive study of Southern Leadership now being made under the sponsorship of the Institute for Research in Social Science at the University of North Carolina where the manuscript will be filed.

THE DOCUMENTED SOUTH: A STUDY OF SOUTHERN BIBLIOGRAPHY. By Anna Greene Smith. Under the direction of Howard W. Odum and Fletcher M. Green (Doctoral dissertation). Probable date of completion: 1946. Manuscript to be filed in the University of North Carolina Library and the Institute for Research in Social Science.

This project is well under way with more than 11,000 items already catalogued. First drafts have been prepared of the introductory material for some of the chapters.

HUMAN RESOURCES IN THE SOUTH; AGRICULTURAL DEVELOPMENT IN THE SOUTH. By Rupert B. Vance. Completed 1945. Manuscripts filed with the Institute for Research in Social Science. Part of An Inventory of Southern Resources financed and sponsored by the Southern Association of Science and Industry and the Institute for Research in Social Science at the University of North Carolina.

SOUTHERN TRAVELS: SOURCES FOR THE STUDY OF HISTORY AND CULTURE, 1901-1945. By Rupert B. Vance. Under the direction of Tom D. Clark, chairman of cooperative study. Probable date of completion: June 1946. To be published by the University of Oklahoma Press, 1947. Part of a cooperative study of southern historians in bibliography. Financed by the Humanities Division of the Rockefeller Foundation.

RESEARCH IN SOUTHERN REGIONAL DEVELOPMENT. By Edith Webb Williams. Completed 1946. Manuscript filed with the Institute for Research in Social Science at the University of North Carolina. A part, "Research and Regional Development," published in Social Forces, 23, March 1945, pp. 349-56. Part of An Inventory of Southern Resources financed and sponsored by the Southern Association of Science and Industry and the Institute.

SOCIOLOGICAL FACTORS IN LAND USE IN THE BREATHITT AREA OF EASTERN KENTUCKY. By Howard W. Beers and Catherine P. Heflin. Probable date of completion: June 1946. To be published by the University of Kentucky, 1946. Manuscript filed with Rural Sociology Section, University of Kentucky. This is part of a larger study of land-resource management in the Eastern Kentucky Highlands. Financed by the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station and the General Education Board, the project was under the sponsorship of the Experiment Station. The research program is being followed by a three-year extension project with the objective of improving production and market practices.

Not just a factory in Jackson, not just a continual "relief" program, not just a mass migration from the area, not just government acquisition of land could be expected to bring the desired amelioration. The study indicates that there are many problems in this area, hence, many answers, among them: the right factory appropriately organized, restoration of timber on many tracts, abandonment of some land rather than the clearing of more hillsides, better farming on the fertile bottom lands, a well administered program of public works, State and Federal aid to the schools, increased migration from some areas, government acquisition of some land, rural electricity and telephones, a hospital in Jackson, better business management of county government, cooperative use of machinery and marketing of special crops, organization of business people to promote improvement in business practices, improvement of public welfare and public health services. In other words, the problem of improving land use in the Breathitt area is as broad as the experience of living there.

A SELECTED SAMPLE OF ATTITUDES OF LOUISIANA STATE UNIVERSITY STUDENTS TOWARD THE NEGRO: A STUDY IN PUBLIC OPINION. By Gus Turbeville and Roy E. Hyde. Completed Summer 1945. Published in Social Forces, 24, May 1946.

The objectives of this study were to determine the attitudes of a comparatively selected segment of Louisiana State University students toward the Negro, and to ascertain some of the bases for the attitudes. The method employed was to distribute schedules in sociology and psychology classes, and, after explaining to the students the purposes of the questionnaire, have them fill out the schedules in the classroom. As a whole the conclusions reached were surprisingly liberal: (a) the females were somewhat more liberal than the males; (b) seniors and graduate students more liberal than other students; (c) students born outside the South more so than the Southern students; (d) social science majors more than others; (e) students living in cities over 50,000 inhabitants more liberal than others; (f) Jewish students more so than those of other religious faiths; (g) students whose fathers were in the professional class were more liberal than students whose fathers were in other occupational classes. From an heuristic viewpoint this study indicates that it would be profitable to study the attitudes of a much broader sample of students in many other universities scattered over the United States.

M. SOCIAL THEORY

HISTORY OF SOCIAL THOUGHT. By L. L. Bernard. In progress with date of completion indeterminate. Publication not yet arranged. Part of a general history of sociology and will be published as a textbook when completed.

The first four chapters have been completed in tentative form. They cover primitive types of social thought in a manner not previously attempted. They are fully documented with citations to original sources and are illustrated by specimens of early social thought extending from the most primitive peoples of which we have information down to the beginning of the present era, but excluding Greek and Roman Social Philosophy. The titles of the chapters are approximately: (1) Social Thought in Early Folk Literature; (2) Social Thought in Magical Forms of Folk Literature; (3) From Supernaturalistic to Secular Social Thought in Folk Literature; (4) Beginnings of Formal Social Generalization (that is, before the Greeks): There will be a fifth chapter, dealing with early approaches to Natural Law concepts, before the formal social theories of the Greeks are presented. The five chapters listed above will be primarily original. The remaining chapters will be drawn from both primary and secondary sources.

ECONOMIC AND POLITICAL RADICALISM IN THE SOCIAL THEORIES OF LESTER F. WARD. By James E. Fleming. Under the direction of Rupert B. Vance and Howard W. Odum (Doctoral dissertation). Completed: January 1946. Manuscript filed in the University of North Carolina Library. One aspect, "The Role of Government in a Free Society: The Conception of Lester Frank Ward," published in Social Forces, 24, March 1946, pp. 257-66.

N. SOCIAL WORK

PUBLIC WELFARE PROBLEMS IN KENTUCKY. By Howard W. Beers. Under the direction of the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station and Committee for Kentucky. Probable date of completion: April 1946. To be published at Louisville, Kentucky, by the Committee for Kentucky, May 1946. This is one of a series of reports on Kentucky's resources and problems sponsored by the Committee for Kentucky and financed by the Kentucky Agricultural Experiment Station and the the Committee. The report will be studied as a basis for action by all organization members of the Committee for Kentucky.

The report will present a comprehensive statement of public welfare problems in Kentucky and will propose solutions to the problems.

A STUDY OF COLUMBIA, SOUTH CAROLINA, AND THE YOUNG WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION AS A SOCIAL AGENCY. By Lillian C. Hunt. Under the direction of Mary P. Wheeler and Pearl Salisbury (Master's thesis). Probable date of completion: June 1946. Manuscript to be filed with the University of South Carolina and the Y.W.C.A. The study was made to determine the need of a new building and an extended program for the Y.W.C.A.

COMMUNITY WELFARE RATING SCALE AND COMMUNITY WELFARE NEEDS. By Walter L. Stone. Published by Council of Community Agencies, Nashville, Tennessee, 1945. For use by men's and women's civic clubs, schools, churches, and community service organizations in meeting the unmet social welfare needs; in arousing interest in Nashville and Davidson County and creating a greater sense of individual and collective responsibility; in studying the community and developing programs for social betterment.

The Information and Interpretation Committee, at the suggestion of the Council of Community Agencies' Research and Planning Division, outlined a community welfare rating scale for use with various civic groups in the community for educational purposes, and to determine what our unmet social welfare needs were. The study is a summarized statement of the first 107 returns from 13 Sunday School Workers, 9 members of Board of Directors of the Council, 12 Women's Civic Forum members, 37 Social Workers, and 36 Business and Professional Women of West End M. E. Church.

PERSONNEL CLASSIFICATION STUDY OF COMMUNITY FUND AGENCIES, 1945. By Robert K. Taylor, Ruth Butler, and Jeanette R. Gruener. Under the direction of Robert K. Taylor. Completed. Mimeographed, Atlanta Community Planning Council, April 1946. The study, sponsored by the Community Fund of Atlanta, was financed from a special appropriation. It is planned primarily for use in budgeting the work of the Community Fund.

Because personnel practices of agencies affect desirability of employment, some information regarding these was included in the study, whose principal purpose was to work out job classifications for personnel employed in Community Fund agencies.

O. SOCIOLOGY OF RELIGION

EDUCATION OF THE RURAL MINISTER. By Richard Obee Comfort. Under the direction of H. C. Brearley (Doctoral dissertation). Probable date of completion: August 1946. Manuscript to be filed with George Peabody College for Teachers.

This is a study, partly from primary and partly from secondary sources, of the present methods of training rural ministers. An analysis is made by questionnaires of the actual work activities of several hundred rural ministers, their training for these activities, and their suggestions for the improvement of the education of the rural minister. The author presents recommendations for increasing the value of the training now given to rural ministers.

THE DEVELOPMENT OF A SOCIOLOGY OF RELIGION. By Vattel E. Daniel. Probable date of completion: March 1947. Manuscript to be submitted to publishers when completed.

The sociology of religious life is a study of religion primarily in its relation to social control. This study begins with a consideration of the human nature basis of religion which is followed by a study of historical religions in the light of social origins. This is followed by an interpretation of religion as creative and as a conservative factor. An attempt is then made to understand the function of the religious leader, prophet or priest; the function of religious ideas and beliefs in their relation to behavior. Institutional phases of religion, and the part which religion plays in the modern world as affected by the modern scientific world view and by widening horizons caused by industrial and commercial development complete the picture.

THE NEGRO CHURCH IN CHICAGO. By Vattel E. Daniel. Under the direction of Herbert Blumer and W. Lloyd Warner (revision of Doctoral dissertation). Probable date of completion: June 1946. To be submitted to publisher by June 1, 1946.

Former studies of the church have not been concerned specifically with a natural and functional classification that shows just how the several types of churches differ in their relationship to social structure, social status, and social situation. In this study, we have made such a classification and have found through an analysis of the type of life lived outside the church, that the type of ritual engaged in, reflects the life of the society of which the worshipper is a member. In determining the relation of ritual and general church behavior in urban Negro churches to various classes within the Negro group, we have been concerned primarily with the part which types of churches play in the social adjustment of types of persons. Hence we have used the sermons, prayers, songs, and behavior in studying the ceremonials and beliefs of types of communicants representing class and economic differences in urban Negro life. The functions which churches perform for Negroes can be interpreted properly only when one realizes fully the nature of the social situations in which Negroes of different social status find themselves in the social structure of our nation. These churches serve a triple function. Not only do they enable the communicants to celebrate the Christian triumph, but they also render a distinct service to them as members of a minority group, and through differentiation in ritual, they minister to various classes within this group.

RELIGIOUS ORIGINS AND SOCIOLOGICAL THEORY. By Thomas H. Grafton. Completed September 1945. Published in the American Sociological Review, December 1945. Part of a larger study of changes in religion.

The scientific study of religious origins belongs to the theoretical sociologist. Religion is defined as interaction with supernatural social objects, and the conditions of its existence are social experience, social suggestion, reflective thinking, and events and needs motivating the construction of religious objects. Certain postulates are set up to guide analysis. The theory is advanced that there is an impulse to vest objects and situations under certain conditions with supernatural power and sociality and to interact with them. This impulse is traced to human nature as defined by Cooley, and to self-conscious thought as analyzed by Mead. The tendency to localize the "other" of religious consciousness in the spatial environment is crucial, inasmuch as its interaction with objects in the environment is the key to diversity in religious objects and activities. Rationalization, necessitated by the exigencies of propagandizing and defense, produces the concept of soul and other ideas important for religion. The writer's theory is further explicated in criticisms of the work of Tylor, Spencer, Lang, Durkheim, and Jane Harrison.

RELIGIOUS LEADERSHIP IN THE SOUTH SINCE 1900. By Howard G. McClain. Under the direction of Howard W. Odum (Doctoral dissertation). Probable date of completion: Summer 1947. Manuscript to be filed in the Institute for Research in Social Science at the University of North Carolina and also in the University Library. Part of a comprehensive study of southern leadership. Financed partially by a research assistantship in the Institute for Research in Social Science.

An effort is made to ascertain the determining influence of historical conditions on contemporary religious thought and action, to analyze the background and experience of men prominent in religion, and to discover the reasons for the influence of selected leaders in the South, through (1) statistical analysis of southern religious leaders in Who Was Who, Who's Who, 1942-43, Who's Who in the Clergy, and Religious Leaders in the United States; (2) case study of the 20-30 religious leaders considered by present church-leadership to be and to have been most influential in the South.

NEGRO RURAL MINISTERS IN VIRGINIA. By Harry W. Roberts. Probable date of completion: Spring 1946. Anticipate publication as an article in a scientific journal. Part of a study of rural life in Virginia. Virginia State College assisted in financing the study. The findings will be offered to churches, schools, and other interested agencies.

To discover the type of rural minister who is a leader is the principal objective of the study which is being investigated through questionnaires, interviews, church visitations, research. For definite conclusions it appears that further research and a larger sample are needed.

P. UNCLASSIFIED

SOCIOLOGY IN LATIN AMERICA. By L. L. Bernard. Date of completion indeterminate but data largely collected. No definite plans for publication. This is part of a general study of Latin American Sociology several parts of which have already been published in the Encyclopaedia of the Social Sciences, American Journal of Sociology, Social Forces, American Sociological Review, The American Sociologist, etc. Financed partially by the Social Science Research Council.

The volume will cover the history, content, and trends of sociology in the several Latin American countries.

A SAMPLING OF KNOWLEDGE AND OPINION ABOUT THE COOPERATIVE MOVEMENT. By Lee M. Brooks. Probable date of completion: 1947. Plan to publish as an article. The study, as a feature of expanding international, national, and regional activity in cooperatives, should have general educational value.

On the assumption that students, citizens, business and professional leaders are uninformed or misinformed as to the origin, nature, and purposes of the Cooperative Movement, this study is projected with a view to checking this assumption.

SOME SOCIAL EFFECTS OF RURAL ELECTRIFICATION. By William E. Cole. Probable date of completion: September 1946. Manuscript to filed with the Department of Sociology, University of Tennessee. Financed by a research grant from the General Education Board.

DELTA BOTTOMLAND HARDWOODS. By Robert D. Highsaw. Under the direction of Forester-in-Charge. Completed, August 1945. Published at Stoneville, Mississippi, August 1945. This is considered a progress report to be repeated in 1950. Financed and sponsored by the Delta Council. The study is to be used in forest management schools, intensive extension program, Boys' Conservation School.

EXPANSION OF RESEARCH IN THE PHYSICAL AND THE SOCIAL SCIENCES. By John B. Knox. Date of completion indefinite. An attempt to encourage the expansion of research in the social sciences.

The study will present facts on the expansion of research (especially applied research) in the physical sciences between World War I and World War II. The results of this expansion and the indication of large unexplored areas in the social sciences will be used as arguments for increased attention to research in the social sciences.

UNDERSTANDING SOCIETY: AN INTRODUCTION TO THE STUDY AND DIRECTION OF AMERICAN SOCIETY. By Howard W. Odum. Now in press. To be published by The Macmillan Company, New York, 1947.

BRAZIL: PEOPLE AND INSTITUTIONS. By T. Lynn Smith. Completed. Published at Baton Rouge, Louisiana by the Louisiana State University Press, 1946. Study was undertaken for the U. S. Department of State and the Institute of Population Research at Louisiana State University.

THE CULTURAL SETTING OF AGRICULTURAL EXTENSION WORK IN COLOMBIA. By T. Lynn Smith. Completed. Published in Rural Sociology, September 1945.

NOTES ON POPULATION AND RURAL SOCIAL ORGANIZATION IN EL SALVADOR. By T. Lynn Smith. Completed. Published in Rural Sociology, December 1945.

GETTING ACQUAINTED WITH SHELBY COUNTY: AN INTRODUCTORY RESOURCE STUDY. By Lillian E. Worley and Workshop Group at Alabama College. Completed. Published at Montevallo, Alabama, by Alabama College, November 1945. Financed by Alabama College and Alabama industrialists and businessmen. The study was distributed to members of the Gatlinburg Conference II, to other prominent educators in the South, to all Alabama Senior and Junior High Schools, to all Alabama County and City Superintendents of Education, to all supervisors, to prominent lay citizens, to local and certain other governmental officials. The hope was that publication of this group effort might stimulate other groups to similar attempts, and that the study might also guide in some measure other groups undertaking community or county resource surveys. It was also hoped that the study would be widely used by Shelby County teachers.

Presented to the Southern Sociological Society

April 1948

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE SOUTHERN SOCIOLOGICAL SOCIETY:

This year, for the first time, your Committee on Research has organized its work around what research workers have already accomplished. In previous years, Research Committees have placed major emphasis on research in progress--publishing a census of research projects underway.

The reason for this change in emphasis goes back to our 1947 meeting. It was generally agreed at this meeting that there should be a change in emphasis in the work of the Research Committee. However, no blueprint was given for the work of the new Committee. Some felt that there should be a critical evaluation of research accomplished. Your Committee discussed this question by correspondence but decided that it was not altogether feasible, mainly because it would involve a tremendous amount of work by persons who could spend their time more profitably in carrying on their present research programs.

The attached list of articles and other publications of members of the Society is no doubt incomplete. Two hundred and seventy-two letters were sent to members of the Society but only seventy-six replies were received. A follow-up card was sent to a number of members who did not reply to the first letter. We feel that everyone was given an ample opportunity to list his articles and publications. There is some question as to whether this is the type of thing your Research Committee should do. If you have any reactions to this feature, please come to the Society meetings prepared to discuss it.

Perhaps the major concern of most members of the Society is that of expanding and improving sociological research in the South. There is some feeling that we should develop a program of coordinated research among Southern sociologists, particularly those in the smaller colleges and non-land grant institutions. This proposal is to be discussed at our annual meeting. As a background for this discussion, your Committee submits some data which has considerable bearing on the question as well as on other phases of research development.

As shown in the attached table, only thirty-seven members of the Society reported that they did some sociological research work. Three of these persons spent all, and only fifteen spent more than fifty per cent, of their time in research. Of the thirty-seven members doing some research, thirty-one also teach, fifteen have administrative duties, and fifteen engage in other activities.

These facts speak for themselves. There are all too few sociologists doing research in the South. They do not have sufficient funds and many of those doing research must combine it with other activities. When these facts are considered, it is surprising that Southern sociologists have been able to produce so much in the way of articles and publications. It is not surprising that the quality of some of these products is below that which we could produce if time, working conditions, and facilities were available.

This general situation in which we find ourselves may also be demonstrated by the typical replies to the inquiry: "What are the major weaknesses of current sociological research in the South?". A list of most of the replies received to this question is also attached. Perhaps they offer little that is new; on the other hand, it is hoped that the presentation of these statements will help stimulate thinking and action by the Society to the end that our research work will be expanded and improved, and, possibly, better coordinated.

Another important question in our survey was: "In what ways has your research been used in educational and action programs during 1947?". This question was included because it was felt that the public did not realize the enormous amount of practical application being made of sociological research and of the public services being performed by sociologists in the South. The answers to these questions were highly gratifying but no attempt was been made to summarize them as yet. It is believed that further study should be made of this aspect of sociological research and that a more complete report should be made next year. A preliminary summary of the data will be presented at our annual meeting.

There was also included a question on research in progress—included for the purpose of making up the annual program. Anyone interested in knowing what research is being carried on in any particular field or by any particular individual or institution may write the Chairman of the Research Committee or refer to the Annual Census of Sociological Research, published in the American Sociological Review.

Sincerely yours,

C Horace Hamilton

C. Horace Hamilton, Chairman
Committee on Research

P. S. The above statement was prepared by the Chairman too late to be submitted for approval to each individual member of the Research Committee. The report, of course, will not be published without the approval of the Committee.

NUMBER OF SOCIOLOGICAL RESEARCH WORKERS ENGAGED IN TEACHING, ADMINISTRATION AND OTHER ACTIVITIES BY AMOUNT OF TIME GIVEN TO RESEARCH.

COMMENT ON THE ABOVE TABLE:

The above table is based on replies of 37 sociologists who reported that they did spend some of their time in research. An additional 13 sociologists replied to the questionnaire saying that they gave no time to research. 26 additional sociologists replied to the questionnaire but gave no definite percentage estimate of their time devoted to research, teaching and other functions. 196 members of the Society did not reply to the inquiry.

TYPICAL REPLIES TO THE QUESTION: " WHAT DO YOU CONSIDER THE MAJOR WEAKNESSES OF SOCIOLOGICAL RESEARCH IN THE SOUTH TO BE?"

* * * * *

Research outside of a few large institutions is purely extracurricular activity. I'd bet my hat there aren't 15 institutions from Charlottesville to Austin which have research budgets or permit reduction of teaching loads or occasional summers off on pay for any kind of research.

The selection process which works in most Southern institutions operates against attraction of research minded personnel. Frequently, it operates against selection of any adequately trained personnel. Reasons: isolation, low salaries, heavy teaching loads, poor libraries, and bias against coming South - something I think isn't so much regional bias as unwillingness to move long distances into hot climates for what we can pay - and stand the risk of getting "lost" in familiar settings.

The regional societies, particularly the Southwestern, have not adequately explored the possibilities of using available personnel (1) in group projects and (2) to seek concerted action in the name of the society for research subsidy.

To my knowledge there has never been concerted effort to help the personnel in smaller schools - largely non-Ph. D level - to focus them on regional graduate centers to finish academic work or to improve their teaching background. Selection to the smaller schools may come from these graduate centers; it may not.

I think we actually need major-minor league relationships and that the possibilities of summer faculty exchanges and summer work in regional institutions for small school faculties needs much thought and planning. The isolation in the Southwest is enormous - more than in the Old South: out here a system of summer exchanges would do much to cut down on this. Here as elsewhere, departments are apt to be jealous, little dynasties, there are many good reasons why summer exchanges are not wholly practical - here nothing is wholly practical and the institution of such interests might examine how and to what extent such means of picking ourselves by the bootstraps would work!

...appear to be pretty much the same as in Sociology throughout the nation, namely: there is no comprehensive research of the social processes which underlie most of our social problems. I would recommend a coordinated research approach on (1) motivation, (2) conflict, (3) cooperation. It appears that the sort of coordinated approach being made upon tuberculosis, infantile paralysis and cancer by medical science could well be made by social sciences upon such social processes.

* * * * *

I would not wish to make specific statements without reviewing a sample of recent research by southern sociologists. In general, however, southern sociologists are overloaded with teaching and probably have not had sufficient training or experience in research.

* * * * *

In one word - its absence. There is very little current sociological research in the South. Except for some trivial boondoggling, all of the significant research in the south has come out of about two institutions - those which can afford to hire full-time research men.

* * * * *

I do not think it is possible to generalize. Perhaps too much preoccupation with Southern society, not enough comparative studies, and perhaps too much empiricism without theoretical orientation.

* * * * *

For four or five years I have presented to the Executive Committee of the S. S. S. a memorandum calling for the organization of a standing committee on recreation. It seems to me this is very important. Recreation is growing by leaps and bounds and in the South there is not exception. It is timed that the sociologists of the region recognize the importance of recreation in the social well-being of our people and put this recognition into practical action.

* * * * *

It is impossible to know which difficulties are of greatest importance, but I would list the following as being of a complex of difficulties that deter research workers in the South:

Limitation of funds; too few trained research workers, cultural resistances to conduct of sociological research, a tendency on the part of sociologists to prefer problem solving activities to research activities.

* * * * *

There is far too little money going into carefully planned, longtime research. Teachers carry such heavy teaching loads that research is practically impossible for many. The "let-facts-speak-for-themselves" school is far too strong; there is hardly a competent sociological theorist in the South today. There needs to be a more wholesome attitude toward sociological theory, and I feel we especially need new blood from the outside area in order to broaden our scope.

* * * * *

Major weaknesses...

1. Poorly trained sociologists.
2. Excessive teaching loads
3. Lethargy
4. Insufficient funds and facilities for collaborative work
5. Naivete in matters of scientific theory and the role of theory in research methods; excessive concern with "practical facts."
6. To much "folk loyalty", not enough blunt criticism and intellectual honesty.

* * * * *

Major weaknesses...

1. Too heavily burdened with teaching, administration, or promotion
2. Not related enough to world-wide context
3. Most emphasis upon fact-finding; less emphasis upon theoretical considerations.

* * * * *

Major weaknesses....

1.Research workers may not always be objective in giving interpretation to their findings. The researcher is often caught between either confining his efforts to harmless topics, pulling his punches, or risking reprisals.

2.Too much effort is expended in economic research merely having sociological implications rather than studying the relationships of people in groups (sociological research).

3.Lack of a uniform terminology to express concepts.

* * * * *

Major weaknesses...

1. Limited time and resources devoted to sociological research.
2. Too little coordination and too much individuality.
3. Lack of orientation to relevant theory.

* * * * *

Major weaknesses...

1. Much of it is of a pedestrian nature and is too narrowly conceived.
2. Except in the field of rural sociology, most sociological research lacks very much financial support.

* * * * *

Very few of our researches are planned to test important hypotheses or to advance the body of social theory point by point. Better formulation of our problem; coordination of different researches to bear to previous work and divide the field with greater allocation of resources; all are needed. Ad hoc research aimed at particular social problems has proved more successful and has paid dividends in legislation. It is not nearly so successful in building a body of theory that we can call general sociology.

* * * * *

My general impression of sociological research in all parts of the U. S. is that insignificant subjects are usually studied; that there is far too little cooperation in large, significant projects; that refined statistical procedures often give an impression of precision which is spurious.

* * * * *

I think much of the "research" in the South is not research at all, but merely surveys. Fundamental principles which should be good for all time are sadly neglected.

* * * * *

My chief criticism of research in the South is that there is little or no encouragement for research outside of rural sociology. The South lacks consciousness of itself culturally as a main participant in the history of civilization. But it is self-conscious politically.

* * * * *

* * * * *

Weakness is not in the research especially but the fact that findings can not for the most part be used by the individual farm family. They cannot be measured in terms of dollars and cents. This is a weakness in that the other type of research seems more important to the man on the street who votes funds.

* * * * *

It seems to me that the greatest weakness at the present time is lack of integration. There are far too many isolated studies which do not fit into any organized theoretical system.

A great many of the research findings have had only immediate value - the studies were designed for the solution of immediate problems. While this type of research is of great importance and should be continued and expanded, I feel that research of a long-range nature is much needed if we are to have a sound sociology of the southern regions.

* * * * *

We are not going back over some of the older theories and reworking them either from the point of view of checking the predictions that were made or of checking the validity of some of these same studies.

* * * * *

Major weaknesses...

1. Seeming inability to deal adequately with touchy questions.
2. Failure to serve useful ends.
3. Failure to get research findings over to the public.
4. Failure to collaborate sufficiently with other social sciences.

Sociology in and of itself can answer very few fundamental questions that most people are asking. It usually gives only a partial answer.

* * * * *

Most of that regarded by sociologists as creditable work is thought by laymen of all levels to have very little relationship to human welfare. They do not seem interested in purely intellectual exercises.

* * * * *

I believe the major weaknesses of current sociological research in the South lie chiefly in our lack of an adequate theoretical framework for the research. Too much of it has been merely fact gathering without relationships to hypotheses or larger bodies of theoretical content. Then, too, I believe we have not had sufficient teamwork in our research with too many of our efforts being small, piecemeal studies of little consequence in and of themselves. Without coordinated planning and greater teamwork among researchers, I believe we will do little to increase the body of knowledge and theory which is necessary to establish sociology as a science.

* * * * *

Like sociological research elsewhere, it needs more emphasis on the quantitative approach.

* * * * *

There is a marked lack of genuine scientific research in the field of Race Relations. Studies of Southern urban life is practically ignored. Nothing has been done for the study of rural family life that actually gives any propositions of the rural family and the South in the most fertile field for this type of research as well as for race relations. Nothing is being contributed from the South regarding cultural anthropology. There are possibilities for research in the field of industrial relations since the South is in the process of development in the area of industry. Cultural and social change isn't being investigated to any appreciable sense by Southern sociologists. Too much attention is being given to descriptive studies of population. Southern sociologists need to develop and exploit personnel and social resources for more research in the Southern regions. Southern sociology has been too much concerned with "teaching" and courses and too little concerned with research. Southern sociology needs to divorce itself from the tendency to rationalize the status quo or make excuses for the same and become interested in investigation for the purpose of understanding and presenting truth for the purpose of aiding in the development and sound scientific social policy and planning.

* * * * *

Major weaknesses in sociological research in the South: Unrelated and uncorrelated.

* * * * *

Too often not sufficiently related to current live problems and not followed through into programs making functional use of results. At the present stage of development more research is needed on ways and means of making research functional rather than focusing too exclusively on further compiling of data as to conditions.

* * * * *

I think the major weakness of current sociological research in the South is the absence of any genuine and substantial support for it on the part of college administration. One is expected to be "a good teacher" and work at research at odd times for the love of it or for the prestige it is presumed to bring. One finds promotion and prestige based on the number of items appearing in his personal bibliography, very much similar to the number of scalps draped at the belt of a savage. The content of the printed articles and the contents of the crania under the scalps is of little importance. But don't quote!

* * * * *

I have tried to answer this question in my "Sociology and Sociological Research in the South," Social Forces, Vol. XXIII, No. 3.

* * * * *

On the race question I think they can be defined in terms of failure of some sociological leaders and writers to make plain that giving the Negro his economic, legal and political rights, does not mean that intermarriage and amalgamation will eventually follow, and that in a real Democracy every group should have a square deal. Again I believe that more could be done to effectively combat anti-Semitism, etc.

* * * * *

Major weaknesses...

1. Too little time given to teachers in which to do research. Many teachers still carry loads of 15 hours with innumerable outside responsibilities.

2. Little money provided for research by colleges and small universities.

3. Much research still mostly compilation of data. Greater need for interpretation of data and a concept for the research.

4. Getting across to the public the importance and the results of research.

* * * * *

Too many trivial studies with insufficient theoretical framework.

* * * * *

Not enough time given us for true study and supervising the original work of students. Possibilities infinite-rich subject matter.

* * * * *

The major weakness of current sociological research in the South is the same as that for the country as a whole, or for the world as a whole. That weakness is our tendency to substitute armchair theorizing and traditional philosophizing instead of verifiable research directed intelligently to seeking the answer to the operational question: Who is to do what under what circumstances to what end?

* * * * *

Major weaknesses...

1. Lack of money.

2. Lack of time after regular teaching load has been discharged.

3. Lack of stimulation and facilities, which are characteristics of small departments.

4. Although there are outstanding exceptions both as to men and areas of research, there seems to be a general failure to apply careful quantitative methods which have become available and to participate in the development and improvement of such methods.

5. Actually, I am encouraged by both the present status and the prospects of sociological research in the Southeast. I believe that college administrations are giving increasing support and that we are retaining and attracting good men.

* * * * *

Major weaknesses of sociological research in the South seem to lie in intellectual cowardice, lack of a sufficient number of men and women with adequate research training, prejudice, fear, and laziness on the part of many.

HEADQUARTERS—ANDREW JOHNSON HOTEL

All meetings of the Society will be held in the Andrew Johnson Hotel. Please consult program for place of section meetings.

HOTEL RESERVATIONS

Hotel reservations should be made by mail as early as possible.

REGISTRATION

No registration fee is required of members or guests. Members and guests are requested to register at the Registration Desk as soon as possible after arrival. It is important that registration with hotel designations be completed in order to facilitate prompt delivery of telegrams. The registration and information desk will be maintained throughout the meeting, except at night, and will be located in the lobby of the Andrew Johnson Hotel.

VISITS TO PLACES OF INTEREST

There are many places of interest in Knoxville and vicinity. Any member or guest wishing to visit these places is requested to make inquiry at the registration desk. The Committee on Local Arrangements will be glad to make provision for such visits as far as possible.

THE PUBLIC

All of the sessions of the Society are open to the general public with the exception of the business meetings. The Society encourages the participation of the public in the various activities. We are looking forward to having many of the local citizens of Knoxville and surrounding areas attend our sessions.

Southern Regional Council

Dear Member:

This letter, with its enclosures, brings you several items of interest and importance regarding the affairs of the Society. May I request that you give all the contents of this packet your careful attention?

First, let me remind you of the Annual Meeting of the Society to be held April 1st and 2nd at Knoxville, Tennessee, with headquarters in the Andrew Johnson Hotel. From the enclosed program you will learn of the papers and discussions which President Hayes and his section chairmen have arranged. The annual meeting is for all members of the Society, and other interested persons. I hope, therefore, that it will be possible for you to attend. Since the time is short you should start making your plans at once. Election of officers and most of the Society's business take place at these meetings. Therefore, the success of its contribution to Sociology in the South depends upon the number and representativeness of members in attendance. Should you be unable to attend the meeting you are urged to send any suggestions which you may have regarding nominations directly to the Chairman or other members of the Nominating Committee. You will find their names and addresses in the program.

The reports of the Membership and Research Committees and the Financial Report of the Treasurer are enclosed herewith. They tell something of the present status and activities of the Society and should be of interest to you. Either the present officers or the new ones to be elected would be glad to hear from you regarding any matters related to these reports.

At the 1948 meeting the Society voted to begin its fiscal year on March 1st to run through the succeeding February. We are, therefore, beginning a new year as well as winding up the present one. The enclosed card is for the renewal of your membership. The problems of this office will be relieved greatly if you will return it to me right away with the proper amount of dues. In particular, if you are not going to the meeting, it would be desirable for you to renew between now and April 1st. Until the names of the new officers are distributed, the card and dues may be returned to me at Box 473, University, Mississippi. Please send a check or money order rather than cash.

Looking forward to seeing you in Knoxville, I am,

Sincerely yours,

M B King

Presented to the Southern Sociological Society

April 1949

TO THE MEMBERS OF THE SOUTHERN SOCIOLOGICAL SOCIETY:

There were many things which your Committee on Research would like to have done. As usual, however, it is composed of busy people who live in widely scattered places and who could not even get together for a meeting because this would mean travelling long distances at their own expense. As usual, we have conducted our Committee discussions by mail--a slow and cumbersome interaction process. Under such circumstances, the Committee can do little more than scratch the surface of the research situation and report a few findings and observations to the members of the Society.

Early in January the Committee on Research sent a questionnaire to the 296 persons who were members of the Society as of January 31, 1948. This questionnaire asked for three things: (1) opinions on a proposed research workshop, (2) information on the proportion of time devoted to research or other functions, and (3) a listing of works published during the year 1948. The results of this survey, together with a few general comments, constitute the report of your Committee.

Up to the time this report was written, we had received returns from 183, or 61.8%, of the members of the Society. This number is so much larger than usual that it calls for some explanation. No doubt the questions relating to the possibility of holding a research workshop in connection with the annual meeting attracted replies from some members who might not have taken the trouble to reply otherwise. But a more important factor, in all probability, was the enclosure of a stamped and addressed return envelope with the communication which went to the members. There was no post-card follow-up for members who had not replied after thirty days. Apparently the "conscience value" of the return stamped envelope was rather strong. A member of your Committee, who wished to try this experiment, is absorbing the additional cost. However, since the difference in the cost of return stamped envelopes and the post-card follow-up is only about $5.00, we suggest that the Society might wish to authorize the Committee on Research in the future to consider this a legitimate expense item.

I. The Proposed Research Workshop

The Research Committee for last year, under the chairmanship of C. Horace Hamilton, collected some interesting statements from members on the question, "What do you consider the major weaknesses of sociological research in the South to be?" Those who attended the 1948 annual meeting will recall that there was some discussion of ways and means of improving the sociological research stiuation in the South. Certain perennial problems were recognized, such as: too much teaching lead, lack of thorough grounding in social theory, lack of familiarity with new research techniques, need for more cooperation between research people, need for more financial support for research. Various suggestions were made, among them the suggestion that the Society might sponsor a Research Workshop which would bring together those who were interested in trying to do something about these problems.

When President Hayes appointed the present Research Committee, he reminded it of the Workshop suggestion. He also took up with an official of the Social Science Research Council the possibility of the Society's applying for a grant in behalf of the Workshop. Your Committee was in something of a quandary, since it was operating on a suggestion rather than on formal instructions Should we proceed to set up a Workshop and hope that there would be enough attendance to make it successful, or should we sound out the whole membership on the idea and ascertain the probable attendance? Naturally the Chairman had to assume the responsibility for certain decisions and procedures. He began by corresponding with other members of the Research Committee. While the reactions toward the Workshop idea were, on the whole, favorable, there was considerable variation of opinion on what sort of thing the Workshop might best do, and several members of the Committee had serious reservations concerning the worthwhileness of the project. It was decided to include in the annual research questionnaire some questions relating to the proposed Workshop. Members of the Committee agreed that the Chairman would have to make a decision on the basis of the returns and that a probable attendance of at least fifty persons would be the minimum on which to base a favorable decision.

By January 22 we had received 158 replies. Of these, 122 or about 80%, favored the idea of the Workshop. Exactly 50 members replied that they thought they could attend a Workshop for two days preceding the annual meeting. This looked rather good, but there was room for considerable doubt as to whether more than 25 or 30 of these could actually get time off from their work and attend at their own expense. The most discouraging aspect of the returns, however, was that among the 20 who said that they could help conduct a Workshop at their own expense, there were only four or five of our outstanding research people. It seemed to the Chairman that we would need a better representation of experienced research scholars if we were to conduct a successful workshop. While pondering over these matters, the Chairman received a letter from the Social Science Research Council saying that it would not be possible for the Council to consider a grant during its present fiscal year. The Chairman then wrote the members of the Research Committee and President Hayes that in his opinion it was not wise to proceed with the Workshop during the present year.

Since members of the Society may be interested in the final returns (183) on the questions relating to the Workshop, we present them here.

	YES	NO	DOUBTFUL, NO ANSWER, ETC.
IN FAVOR OF WORKSHOP IDEA	142	12	29
WOULD ATTEND WORKSHOP	57	72	54
WOULD HELP CONDUCT WORKSHOP AT OWN EXPENSE	22	114	47
WOULD HELP PROVIDED A GRANT IS OBTAINED	43	94	46

While it seemed wise not to try to undertake the Workshop this year, your Committee is aware that the above tabulation indicates a very strong interest in the idea of a Workshop. Therefore your Committee makes the following recommendations:

1. That the members present at the annual meeting vote on the question of whether they wish to have the Society undertake a Research Workshop during the coming year.

2. That, if this is the wish of the members, they vote on certain specific instructions as to time, place, length, and functions of the Workshop.

The next Research Committee, or a special committee on Workshop, operating under definite instructions, could proceed at once to try to obtain a grant, and it would have plenty of time to set up a really attractive program for a Research Workshop. Please think over these matters and come to the annual meeting prepared to discuss them.

II. Research And Other Activities Of Members

Members were asked to indicate on the research questionnaire the approximate proportions of their time devoted to research, teaching, administration, and other activities. The results of this survey supplement the information reported by the 1947 Committee on Research, and they should be of some interest to members of the Society.

Number of questionnaires sent out 296
Number of persons replying 183
Number not answering research questions 13
Number of replies used in tabulations 170

Number reporting some time spent in research 119
Number reporting no time spent in research 51

Note: In some of the tables which follow, the following abbreviations will be used:

R for Research	A for Administration
T for Teaching	O for Other Activities

III. Comments

The foregoing tabulations merely confirm what most of us already knew. For one thing, full-time research workers among our ranks are very rare creatures. Only 5 of the 119 persons who reported some research activity are devoting their full time to research, and all of these are working in federally supported programs in state colleges of agriculture. Also we see, by referring to Table 1, that 108, or 63.5%, of our 170 respondents are devoting either no time or less than 25% of their time to research. Furthermore, as might be expected, teaching is the main job of our members. Of the 170 reporting, 145 are doing teaching or teaching combined with other functions. Again, research comes off rather poorly when combined with other functions. Of 45 persons who combine research with one other function, 31 are devoting less than half time to research; and of 47 who combine research with two other functions, 31 are devoting less than one-third time to research. Finally, we might point out that our tabulations actually overstate the amount of regular working time given to research, because many of our members have to "make" their own time if they are to get any research done. Quite a few who indicated that they devote five or ten per cent of their time to research appended such notes as, "On my own time," or "This includes Saturdays and holidays."

The main problems in our research situation, as viewed by your Committee, are as follows:

1. The need for more money and time for research work. This is largely a problem of finance and administration in the individual institutions with which our members are associated. The average institution simply does not have the money to afford the "luxury" of reducing teaching leads so that staff members can devote more time to research.

2. The need for a better quality of research work. Due to lack of time, lack of money, poor training, failure to keep in touch with improvements in theory and methodology, and other factors, there is undoubtedly a good deal of sub-standard "research" being done. The problem is largely one of individual training and initiative. In so far as the Society might undertake to do something about this situation, the best approach would seem to be to institute a continuing series of research conferences or workshops which might retrain and stimulate a sizeable number of research people. This, of course, would involve the problem of obtaining a grant from some foundation which is interested in our problems.

3. The need for more cooperation and coordination in research work. We believe that even under present conditions there is much that could be done by individuals and institutions to achieve better cooperation and coordination in research projects. There could be, and should be, more cooperation between the larger and more favored institutions and the smaller colleges, between white and Negro institutions, and between educational institutions and government agencies.

The following comments made by members of the Research Committee in the course of their "meetings by mail" are quite relevant to this discussion of these problems:

> ... The plan, as I understood it, was for the Research Committee to develop further plans for a coordinated research program for the South. I, for one, am still not very hopeful that an all-around acceptable program can be worked out or that a very high level of region-wide research may be obtained in this manner. We do not have an Oak Ridge Center in sociology, with numerous related probelms that can be "farmed out" to institutions with lucrative grants to go along with them, and the results then reintegrated at the Center....Frankly, I do not believe the possibility of establishing a Center is very realistic at this time...

A committee is not a research center; it is so difficult for a committee of persons scattered over a large geographic region to do an effective job of directing research and of administering the funds so as to obtain the greatest possible results....

One alternative is .... to find out through questionnaires sent to the membership how many persons now working on research projects, or contemplating undertaking projects, think their research could profit through having sociologists in other parts of the region contribute to it by making similar, sample, or control studies in the localities in which these other sociologists reside. This would call not only for an opinion, but also for a presentation of enough material about the projects to spell out in rather concrete terms just what would be involved in the collaboration .... (Note: This excellent suggestion came too late to be included in the questionnaire this year. Perhaps the next Research Committee would like to follow up on it.)

..... I think our Research Committee might be rendering a real service if we found some way of stimulating and to some extent guiding research by those sociologists who are struggling all alone at some small college and who feel somewhat "out of the swim of things." For two years I was at _____ College and would have welcomed the chance to work with several other sociologists in other institutions on some common project on which we had agreed upon procedure and scope of study. The Research Committee might serve as a channel for crystallizing some such cooperative activities.

.....

It is my belief that one possible action the Committee might take is to select some willing and capable sociologist, either in or out of the region, to critically appraise the research turned out during the previous year in the region. This could be undertaken by the Chairman* of the Committee or by the Committee as a whole, but, as suggested above, it could be done by a competent person not of the Committee. (Note:* The Chairman did not take readily to this part of the suggestion!)

.....

I wonder if the Committee could take the function of improving and stimulating sociological research seriously enough to attempt to set up a set of standards which might be useful in facilitating research by college faculty members. I have in mind such things as a suggested maximum teaching load, suggested possible facilities for doing research, and the encouragement of faculty members to attend scientific meetings. Of course, the corollary to this would be the determination of the extent to which various colleges approximate these standards,.... If this were done it would then be possible to draw up a statement for submission to college administrators as to ideal standards and actual practice.... I believe that this could be done in such a way as not to compromise members of the Society, nor embarrass or antagonize college administrators.

The above comments represent the thinking of several of the members of the Research Committee. So far the Committee has not devised any ways of implementing good suggestions except by bringing them to the attention of members of the Society. Unfortunately, because of the impossibility of holding a meeting at the crucial time and because of a lack of continuity in the work of the Committee, the Committee does not begin to cut its wisdom teeth until about the end of its period of service. More than one member has commented on the lack of continuity, and one has suggested that the Committee could serve more efficiently if the personnel were kept intact over a period of several years.

We present in Section IV a listing of publications by members of the Southern Sociological Society during 1948. The list is not complete, of course, since it is based on the returns from the Research Committee Questionnaire. Of the 183 members who replied, 50 reported one or more publications. In many cases the bibliographical information given was not complete as to periodical volume numbers, dates, pages, etc. Book reviews, with the exception of two or three which seemed to make some contribution to method or theory, have been excluded.

Your Committee has considerable doubt as to whether this sort of list has enough value to members of the Society to justify its continuation. It takes time for members to report their publications accurately, and, at the best, from one-third to one-half of our members will fail to respond. It takes time and expense to compile the report and mimeograph it. Then, too, a good deal of the bibliographical information is readily available in the periodical indexes and book lists found in any good library. Therefore we raise the question, How useful have you found the sort of listing of publications which was first tried last year and which we have repeated this year? It may be that the Research Committee would do well to discontinue sending out questionnaires or publishing lists and devote all of its limited time and resources to the preparation of better Research Section programs at the annual meetings. Please think about these questions and be prepared to express your opinions at the annual meeting.

Due to the pressure of other duties and to a miscalculation of the date on which this report would have to be delivered to the Secretary of the Society for mailing, the Chairman of the Research Committee has had to proceed with mimeographing before receiving the formal approval of all members of the Committee. The report is therefore, at the moment, "unofficial".

Local Police L.O. 3/28/49
Anti-Klan Ordinance

BE IT ORDAINED BY THE MAYOR AND GENERAL COUNCIL OF THE CITY OF ATLANTA, AND IT IS HEREBY ORDAINED BY AUTHORITY OF THE SAME:

Section 1. Purpose and Policy of the Law:

Church, civic groups and other public bodies have expressed in an increasing volume of resolutions the public concern about the operation of masked and hooded organizations in the Atlanta Community. The Mayor and General Council have ordained to prohibit certain activities of masked and hooded men which it has found to constitute a grave threat to the peace, good order and safety of the community. The enforcement of this law will require the most diligent and conscientious service of the law enforcement authorities of the city.

Further, the Mayor and General Council cannot permit law enforcement officers to be members of any organization whose very purpose and activities constitute a threat to citizens whom these law enforcement authorities are engaged to protect and to secure against harm and danger.

The Fulton County Grand Jurors Association has recently resolved unanimously urging that law enforcement officers be prohibited from joining or being members of masked or hooded organizations. It is to accomplish this purpose that this ordinance is enacted.

Section 2. Definitions:

For the purpose of this ordinance:

(a) Law enforcement officer includes all policemen, detectives, traffic regulation control men, and all other persons employed or engaged by the City of Atlanta for the purpose of policing the city and maintaining and enforcing therein law and order.

(b) All masculine terms include the feminine term thereof.

(c) "Masked organizations" include all associations, groups and societies, whether incorporated or not, members of which in connection with ceremonials or activities of the organization wear in public masks or other devices or hoods whereby any portion of the face is so hidden or covered as to conceal the identity of the wearer.

(d) The term "Mask" includes any mask, device or hood whereby any portion of the face is so hidden or covered as to conceal the identity of the wearer.

(e) The term "member" includes any person who applies for or holds membership in, pays dues or contributes personally to, participates in demonstrations, meetings or other assemblages of, or in any wise affiliates himself in an active capacity or who hereafter accepts or holds affiliation in any honorary capacity with a masked organization.

Section 3.

As a condition of employment as a law enforcement officer of the City of Atlanta, all applicants shall be required to sign an oath, swearing that such applicant is not then a member of any masked organization and does not thereafter intend to become a member of such an organization.

Section 4.

Sixty days after the date this ordinance becomes effective, any law enforcement officer who is or thereafter becomes a member of a masked organization shall be ineligible for continued employment as such by the City of Atlanta and shall be immediately discharged from said employment by the City of Atlanta.

Section 5.

Sixty days after the date this ordinance becomes effective, each law enforcement officer employed by the City of Atlanta shall as a condition of continued employment as a law enforcement officer be required to sign under oath a statement that he is not then a member of a masked organization. Furthermore, every officer newly employed on or after said date shall at the time of entering said employment be required to sign under oath a statement that he is not then a member of a masked organization.

Section 6.

Each law enforcement officer under the employ of the City of Atlanta shall, as a condition of continued employment as a law enforcement officer, sign annually under oath a statement that he is not then and has not since his last oath been or become a member of any masked organization.

Section 7.

The following are exempted from the provisions of this ordinance:

(a) Organizations whose members wear masks in connection with a trade or occupation wherein a covering for the face is customarily worn for physical safety and protection against the occupational hazard, or because of the nature of the occupation or trade.

(b) Persons engaged in producing a play, dramatization, opera or other theatrical production.

Section 8.

If any section or provision of this ordinance, or the applicability thereof to any person or persons, or circumstance, is held invalid or unconstitutional, the remainder of this ordinance and the applicability thereof and of such provisions to other persons, or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

Section 9.

All prior ordinances of the Mayor and General Council of the City of Atlanta inconsistent in whole or in part with this ordinance are hereby repealed.

BE IT ORDAINED BY THE MAYOR AND GENERAL COUNCIL, AND IT IS HEREBY ORDAINED BY THE SAME:

Section 1.

Purpose and policy of the law.

Church, civic and other public bodies within the Atlanta Community have been increasingly alarmed and have expressed their alarm in a growing volume of protests against the activities within the area of masked and hooded men and organizations. Recently, the Fulton County Grand Jurors Association has added its protest to the others who have voiced the gravest concern at the challenge presented by masked and hooded organizations to the law and safety of the community.

The Mayor and General Council expressly declare that public appearances, especially in automobiles, of men who are masked and hooded and unidentifiable, threaten the supremacy of law and cannot be permitted in Atlanta. The city herein exercises its police power to protect its citizens from intimidation, the public from crime by masked and hooded persons, and to give to its police the fullest opportunity to detect, apprehend, and bring to justice violators of the law.

Section 2.

Definitions.

For the purposes of this Ordinance:

a. The term "mask" includes any mask, device or hood whereby any portion of the face is so hidden or covered as to conceal the identity of the wearer.

b. The term "public place" includes all walks, alleys, streets, boulevards, avenues, lanes, roads, highways or other ways or thoroughfares dedicated to public use or owned or maintained by public authority; all grounds and buildings owned, leased by, operated or maintained by public authority; all buildings owned, leased or operated for the use of organizations enjoying any tax exempt privilege as a charitable use.

Section 3.

No person or persons, while masked, shall be or appear on or in any public place in the City of Atlanta.

Section 4.

The following are exempted from the provisions of the act.

a. All children under the age of seventeen.

b. All workers while engaged in work wherein a covering is worn for physical safety and protection against occupational hazards, or because of the nature of the occupation or trade.

c. Persons while wearing traditional Holiday costumes.

d. Persons while engaged in theatrical productions or masquerade balls.

e. Persons wearing gas masks in civil defense drills and exercises or emergencies.

Section 5.

Any person or persons violating Section 3 of this ordinance shall be deemed guilty of an offense and upon conviction in the Recorder's Court shall be punished by a fine not exceeding $200.00, or sentenced to work on the public works of the City for not exceeding 30 days, either or both penalties to be inflicted in the discretion of the Recorder.

Section 6.

If any provisions of this ordinance, or the applicability thereof to any person or persons, or circumstances, is held invalid or unconstitutional, the remainder of this ordinance and the applicability thereof and of such provision to other person or circumstances, shall not be affected thereby.

Section 7.

All prior ordinances of the Mayor and General Council of the City of Atlanta inconsistent in whole or in part with this ordinance are hereby repealed.

Antimask Ordinance Is Approved In Whiteville

WHITEVILLE, April 7.—An antimask ordinance, making it illegal to wear masks in public places of the City of Whiteville, has been approved by the city council, it was announced by City Manager C. D. Pickerrell.

The ordinance excepts children under 17 years of age, those engaged in occupational duties, those in theatrical productions, and persons wearing gas masks prescribed in civil defense drills.

The ordinance follows:

Against Public Interest

Section 1. Finding of Facts—The town council of the Town of Whiteville hereby finds as facts that public appearances, whether in motor vehicles or otherwise, of persons who are masked or hooded are against the public interest and cannot be permitted in the Town of Whiteville, that such appearances interfere with the enforcement of law and order and interfere with the protection of the citizens of the Town of Whiteville from intimidation and interfere with the protection of the public from crime by masked or hooded persons and interfere with detecting, apprehending, and bringing to justice violators of the law.

Section 2. Definitions—For the purposes of this ordinance:

(a) The term "mask" includes any mask, device or hood whereby any portion of the face is so hidden or covered as to conceal the identity of the wearer.

(b) The term "public place" includes all walks, alleys, streets, avenues, lanes, roads, highways or other ways or thoroughfares dedicated to public use or owned or maintained by public authority, all grounds and buildings, owned, leased, or operated by public authority, and all buildings owned, leased, or operated for the use of organizations enjoying any tax exempt privilege as a charitable use.

Secton 3. The following are exempted from the provisions of this ordinance:

(a) All children under the age of 17.

(b) All workers while engaged in a work wherein a covering is worn for physical safety and protection against hazards or because of the nature of the occupation, trade, or profession.

(c) Persons while engaged in theatrical productions or masquerade balls.

(d) Persons wearing gas masks prescribed in civil defense drills and emergencies.

The ordinance was made effective as of Tuesday, April 1. Under its terms, parades in robes would be permissible, but all such persons would be required to remain unmasked.

A BILL

To be entitled an Act to prohibit the wearing of a mask or any device whereby any portion of the face is so hidden or covered as to conceal the identity of the wearer while upon the public ways in this state or while upon property of any municipality or county in this state or while upon the property of the state; prohibiting the demanding of entrance or the entrance upon the premises of another while wearing the same; prohibiting the holding of a meeting or demonstration or the placing of an exhibit on the property of another while wearing the same unless by written permit of the owner or occupier of the property providing for certain exemptions from the Act; providing for the punishment of violations of this Act as crimes; and for other purposes.

SECTION I: BE IT ENACTED by the General Assembly of Georgia, and it is hereby enacted by the authority of the same that no person or persons over sixteen years of age, shall while wearing any mask or device whereby any portion of the face is so hidden or covered as to conceal the identity of the wearer, enter upon, or be or appear upon any lane, walk, alley, street, road, highway or other public way in this state.

SECTION II: No person or persons shall in this state while wearing any mask or device whereby any portion of the face is so hidden or covered as to conceal the identity of the wearer enter upon, or be or appear upon the public property of a municipality, a county or of the state.

SECTION III: The following are exempted from the provisions of Sections one and two of this Act: No person or persons over sixteen years of age shall, while wearing a mask or device whereby any portion of the face is so hidden or covered as to conceal the identity of the wearer, demand entrance or admission or enter or come upon into the premises, enclosure or house of any other person in this state.

SECTION IV: No person or persons over sixteen years of age shall, while wearing a mask or device whereby any portion of the face is so hidden or covered as to conceal the identity of the wearer, hold any manner of meeting, make any demonstration or place any exhibit upon the private property of another unless such person or persons shall have first obtained from the occupier or owner of the property his or her written permission to so do.

SECTION V: The following are exempted from the provisions of this Act:
(a) Any person or persons wearing traditional Christmas costumes.

SECTION VI: Any person or persons violating Sections one, two, three, or four of this Act shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and, upon conviction, shall be punished as now provided in Code Section 27 - 2506 of the Civil Code of Georgia.

SECTION VII: Be it further enacted by the authority aforesaid, that should any provision of this Act, or the applicability thereof to any person or circumstance, be held illegal or unconstitutional, the remainder of this Act and the applicability thereof and of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

SECTION VIII: All laws and parts of laws in conflict with this Act shall be and are hereby repealed.

SECTION IX: This Act shall be known and may be cited at the "Public Order Act of 1949."

STATE vs FEDERAL AUTHORITY IN VIRGINIA

A Background Memo

August 22, 1958

Prepared by the Southern Regional Council
63 Auburn Avenue, N. E.
Atlanta, Georgia

INTRODUCTION

Four Virginia school districts are under court order to desegregate in September. In Arlington County, Charlottesville, Norfolk, and Newport News, there will occur the first decisive tests of the efficacy of Virginia's policy of "Massive Resistance".

Immediately following the Supreme Court decision of May 17, 1954, the then Governor, Thomas Stanley, said that Virginia would work toward a plan acceptable to Virginians and in keeping with the edict of the Court. Shortly thereafter he was reversed by Senator Harry F. Byrd who, in June 1958, declared for partial resistance which later became "massive resistance". The Governor quickly joined the Senator in this posture.

However, it should be noted that the question was not closed to debate among the people and the leaders of Virginia. A fair sized, respectable minority called for compliance. Virginia has been described as an upper-South state with a deep South posture; a position difficult to maintain.

A MODERATE PROPOSAL: THE GRAY COMMISSION

Virginia directed its efforts first along lines proposed by the so-called Gray Commission, created in August 1954. This body, which reported back to the legislature in November 1955, outlined a program which at least on its face might have satisfied the criterion of "deliberate speed". By early 1956, however, it became apparent that the Commission's report was to be in fact rejected in favor of less moderate measures. The Commission was recalled by the Governor in May 1956, and told, "Most any act that's passed is subject to a test to see whether it's valid--you can imply from that that I would not be averse to trying some." The Gray plan had been predicated on local option; its acceptance would have allowed the differences within the state to be reflected. In its place, Virginia turned toward a monolithic posture of state resistance.

Here, in summary, is the legislative record of resistance to desegregation:

1. The first step was to amend the state constitution to permit tuition payments by the state to private schools. A resolution to this effect was passed by a special session of the General Assembly in late 1955, approved by a popular referendum in January 1956, and formally adopted by a Constitutional Convention in March of that year.

2. A second step, of more emotional than practical force, was the passage in February 1956, of an interposition resolution, "against encroachment upon the reserved powers of this state".

3. Of more real importance was the state action taken in the same month against the only local school board which had announced in favor of desegregation. The Arlington County school board was henceforth not to be elected, but appointed by the County Board of Supervisors.

4. The real spate of legislation came, however, in November 1956. Measures were directed toward two ends: the protection of segregated schools; the crippling of the NAACP.

5. The primary means to the first objective was the Placement Act. This transferred the function of pupil assignment from the localities to a state board. One of the criteria to be observed was that of maintaining "efficient schools," defined in a separate act as being segregated schools. This feature principally led Judge Hoffman, U. S. District Court, to hold the law "unconstitutional on its face;" his decision was upheld in the Court of Appeals, and the Supreme Court in October 1957, refused to review. Accordingly, in March 1958, the legislature amended the Act, eliminating the "efficient school" requirement, and generally modelling the Act on the North Carolina statute which has so far withstood court attack. Whether the new Placement Act will furnish a legal basis for further postponement is an as yet unanswered question. It should be noted too that the act defining "efficient schools" still stands, and authorizes the Governor to declare a state of emergency wherever "inefficient" schools exist.

6. Other laws require the closing of a school to which a child of the race other than that served by the school has been assigned; place closed schools under the immediate, personal control of the Governor; and authorize the Governor to make tuition grants to children attending segregated, nonsectarian schools. The Governor has the power to return control of the schools to the local community. If the community re-opens them on a desegregated basis state funds are cut off. In Arlington, at least, there is the possibility of this happening for out of a ten million dollar school budget only one and one-half million come from the state.

7. No child can be forced to attend an integrated school; school boards are not required to furnish bus transportation, but may provide it for children on tuition grants as well as for those attending public schools; and teachers may continue in the state pension system even if instructing in the "private" schools.

8. In March 1958, two other acts, known as the "Little Rock Act" and the "Little Rock, Jr. Act" were passed. The first directs the closing of a school if desegregation is being enforced by federal troops or other personnel (persumably, federal marshalls.) The second permits the Governor to extend the closing to all schools in the same district; the purpose being, of course, to close Negro as well as desegregated "white" schools.

9. The anti-NAACP legislation is almost too complicated to summarize. Its candid purpose has been harassment and enfeeblement of the NAACP. Its result has been to force the NAACP to defend itself in order to be allowed to combat segregation. Federal courts have to date invalidated two of the measures; perhaps the most burdensome of them all. Two special committees of the legislature have also been actively "investigating" the NAACP. These were the Committee on Law Reform and Racial Activities, popularly known as the "Boatwright Committee;" and the Committee on Offenses Against the Administration of Justice, better known as the "Thompson Committee". These committees are being replaced by a single joint-committee.

AFFECTED COMMUNITIES

In the four communities facing court ordered desegregation this Fall, School-opening dates are:

September 2, Charlottesville
September 4, Arlington County and Newport News
September 8, Norfolk (originally scheduled for Sept. 4)

ARLINGTON COUNTY

Arlington has been described as one of "Washington's bedrooms;" certainly it is true that many of its residents work in the Nation's Capital and have racial attitudes different from those of most other Virginians.

Its Negro population constitutes a smaller proportion of the total than in the three other communities under court order. In Arlington, there are only 7,200 Negroes out of an estimated population of 158,410.

Thirty-one Negro pupils, including five of the original seven litigants, have applied for admission to the previously white schools.

Although there is divided opinion in Arlington, there are strong forces working for the maintenance of the public schools--even if desegregated. The Committee to Preserve the Public Schools, headed by Warren Cox, enjoys the support of the County Board of Supervisors, the Council of PTAs, the Arlington Council of Churches, the League of Women Voters, the Council of Church Women, and the Northern Virginia Sun.

Opposition to desegregation is led by the local chapter of the Defenders of State Sovereignty and Individual Liberty, headed by Jack Rathbone. Mr. Rathbone also heads the 10th District Fundamental Education Organization, whose purpose is the creation of a "private" school system. Local respect for this organization was not enhanced when they opened a model "Grammer" school. The police force is reported to be prepared to handle any situation which might arise.

CHARLOTTESVILLE

The memory of Thomas Jefferson stalks the hills of this old Virginia town which is the site of his home, Monticello and "his" University. The University has had a limited number of Negroes in the graduate and professional schools since 1950.

Negroes make up only 18% of the population; though Negro pupils comprise 22.5% of the children in the public schools. As of August first, thirty-four Negro pupils had applied for admission to four "white" schools. The school board, under the leadership of its attorney John Battle, Jr., has waged a lively battle to preserve segregation. However, three of the five city commissioners are reported to have said that the people prefer some desegregation to closed schools.

There are a group of influential "moderates", in Charlottesville, who have yet to be heard from publicly. Their influence is considerable, however. They will be a restraining influence on those who might be given to excessive acts of defiance. The retiring President of the University of Virginia, Colgate Darden has broken with the Byrd machine on the question of massive resistance. There are, however, vocal groups in the community.

In the community, both sides are well organized. The pro-integration forces are led by the Charlottesville-Albemarle Chapter of the Virginia Council on Human Relations, headed by Mrs. B. A. Makielski; and the NAACP. The anti-integration forces are led by a local chapter of the Defenders, headed by Professor E. J. Oglesby; there is, or was a chapter of the Seaboard White Citizens' Council founded by John Kasper. State Senator Edward McCue is another ardent segregationist.

City officials do not expect violence unless it comes from "outside." The 48 man police force has had a majority of its men trained at the State Police Training School in Richmond.

NORFOLK

This port city is dominated by Federal installations, mostly Navy and ship-building. It is the most cosmopolitan city of comparable size in Virginia. One-fourth of the citizens of Norfolk are Negroes but it is estimated that there are 15,000 Negro pupils out of a total school population of slightly more than 42,000.

Norfolk is unique among southern cities facing desegregation; usually the number of Negroes applying for admission to "white" schools is relatively small; in Nrofolk 151 Negro pupils have applied.

The school board has announced that it does not intend to place itself in contempt of Federal court; it has also said that the question is out of its hands, that the Federal and State Governments must resolve the conflict of authority. Its placement committee has turned down the applications of the 151 Negro pupils, admittedly on the basis of race in some cases.

Norfolk has a Committee to Preserve the Public Schools, which is headed by Professor Robert Stern of William and Mary's Norfolk Division faculty. Opposition to desegregation is led by a local chapter of the Defenders and the Tidewater Educational Foundation, headed by W. I. McKendree who is also president of the Council of PTA's.

The Norfolk police department is well-led, well-trained, and experienced. The ever-present Navy shore-patrol is an added reminder to would-be trouble makers of law enforcement power.

NEWPORT NEWS

Newport News merged with Warwick in July of the present year, thereby reducing the percentage of Negroes in its total population. Negroes made up roughly one-half of the population of the old city of Newport News; population figures, on a racial basis, are not yet available on the merged cities.

Court action in Newport News has parallelled that in Norfolk. It is generally agreed that city officials intend to use the merger with Warwick as a new delaying weapon in the legal fight.

Eight Negro children seek admission to the "white" schools. The NAACP, the Peninsula Council on Human Relations and the Peninsula White Citizens' Council are the private organizations on either side of the question.

CONCLUSION

At his press conference on Wednesday, August 20, the President of the United States said:

> Each state owes to its inhabitants, to its sister states, and to the union the obligation to surpress unlawful forces. ...Defiance of this duty would present the most serious problem, but there can be no equivocation as to the responsibility of the Federal Government in such an event...the certainty that the President and the Executive Branch of the government will support and insure the carrying out of the decisions of the federal courts...

At his press conference on Thursday, August 21, the Governor of the State of Virginia called upon the people of his state to stand with him and the legislature in their efforts to maintain school segregation. He said, in part, "This is a state matter...The State of Virginia and the localities of Virginia cannot...and will not operate mixed schools."

Thus, the constitutional issue is clearly joined: do states' rights extend to the interposition of the power of the state between the citizens of the United States and their national government?

Is your name written there?—on the voting list?

If you want to have a say about how you are treated as a citizen, you must register and vote.

You can complain all day and weep all night, but public officials will not pay much attention to you. Local, state and federal governments listen to voters.

In the South as a whole, only 25 out of every 100 Negro citizens of voting age are actually registered.

On the other hand, 60 out of every 100 white citizens of voting age are registered.

In some localities and counties the picture is worse and in a few it is better, but the average of the whole South shows Negro registration far behind.

OPINION

This case was tried before a duly constituted three-judge District Court.

Under the amended complaint, this suit is brought by ten Negro citizens of Mobile County, Alabama, against the Board of Registrars of said County and the individual members thereof, to declare and secure their rights to register as electors. The plaintiffs bring the action on their own behalf, and on behalf of all Alabama citizens similarly situated.

The plaintiffs allege that registration is a prerequisite of the right of a citizen of Alabama to vote in any election, Federal, State or local. (1)

(1) Title 17, Section 12, Code of Alabama 1940, so provides.

The plaintiffs allege that at a general election held on November 7, 1946, there was submitted to and adopted by the people of Alabama an amendment to Section 181, of the Constitution of Alabama (popularly called and referred to herein as the Boswell Amendment), changing the requirements for registration of electors so that only those persons who can "understand and explain" any article of the Federal Constitution can be registered as electors. (2) They allege that this amendment was purposely sponsored, its adoption obtained, and its provisions are being administered so as to prevent the plaintiffs and others, because of their race, from exercising their right to vote.

The plaintiffs aver that they appeared before the defendants, members of the Board of Registrars for Mobile County, Alabama, and, acting under color of law, the defendants required the plaintiffs, all members of the Negro race, to explain an article of the Federal Constitution, which they did, and the defendants informed them that the defendants were not satisfied with the explanations given, and refused to register them.

It is further averred that said Section 181, as amended, requiring applicants for registration to "understand and explain" any article of the United States Constitution, together with the provisions of Title 17, Section 33, Code of Alabama 1940, (3) vests in the Board of Registrars unlimited discretion to grant or deny the plaintiffs and others similarly situated the right to register as electors; that said Amendment provides no definite, reasonable

(2) Section 181 of the Constitution of Alabama, as amended:

"After the first day of January, nineteen hundred and three, the following persons, and no others, who, if their place of residence shall remain unchanged, will have, at the date of the next general election, the qualifications as to residence, prescribed in section 178 of this article, shall be qualified to register as electors provided they shall not be disqualified under section 182 of this constitution: those who can read and write, understand and explain any article of the constitution of the United States in the English language and who are physically unable to work and those who can read and write, understand and explain any article of the constitution of the United States in the English language and who have worked or been regualrly engaged in some lawful employment, business, or occupation, trade or calling for the greater part of the twelve months next preceding the time they offer to register, including those who are unable to read and write if such inability is due solely to physical disability; provided, however, no persons shall be entitled to register as electors except those who are of good character and who understand the duties and obligations of good citizenship under a republican form of government."

(3) Title 17, Section 33, Code of Alabama 1940:

"Any person making application to the board of registrars for registration who fails to establish by evidence to the reasonable satisfaction of the board of registrars that he or she is qualified to register may be refused registration."

or recognizable standard or test to be applied in determining the qualifi - cations of electors; that defendants refused to register plaintiffs and other qualified Negro applicants, while at the same time defendants were registering white applicants with less qualifications; that plaintiffs, solely because of their race and color, were required to make lengthy explanations of articles of the Constitution of the United States, while white applicants were being registered without being required to make any such explanations.

Plaintiffs further allege that they possess all of the qualifications and have none of the disqualifications to register as electors, except that they are unable to comply with or reasonably satisfy the defendants that they can comply with the requirements of the Boswell Amendment, which requirements they aver are void in that they are vague, uncertain, undefined, and provide no dis - cernible standard; that said Amendment, without mentioning either race or color, was adopted for the purpose and with the intent of the proponents thereof to create a scheme to prevent qualified Negroes from voting; that the qualifications to "understand and explain" any article of the Constitution is a mere subter - fuge designed for the purpose of depriving plaintiffs and others of the right of franchise on account of race or color; that it has become the general and habitual practice of the defendants, acting under color of law, to refuse to register Negro residents of said county, including the plaintiffs, on the pretext that they are unable to "understand and explain" any article of the Federal Constitution. The plaintiffs further allege that they have been denied the right to register as electors solely on account of their race or color.

The plaintiffs aver that an actual controversy exists between the plaintiffs and the defendants within the meaning of Title 28, Section 400, United States Code (now Section 2201 of Revised Title 28, United States Code), in that the plaintiffs contend that Section 181 of the Constitution of Alabama, as a - mended, is unconstitutional on its face and because of the manner in which it is administered, as being violative of the provisions of the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments and other provisions of the Constitution of the United States while the defendants contend that said Boswell Amendment is constitutional both on its face and in the manner in which it is administered.

Plaintiffs seek a declaratory judgment declaring the Boswell Amendment unconstitutional and ask for injunctive relief against the further enforcement of the provisions of the same. Plaintiffs waived their prayer for damages.

The defendant board and two of the individual members thereof answered the complaint. They deny that the Boswell Amendment is unconstitutional and deny that they administer the registration laws differently as to white and Negro applicants, and aver that they administer the laws fairly to all applicants for registration, without regard to race or color. They admit that the individual defendants compose the Board of Registrars of Mobile County; they admit that at least three of the plaintiffs, Hunter Davis, Julius B. Cook, and Russell Gaskins, applied to the board for registration and were rejected; they aver that the records of the board do not disclose that any of the other plaintiffs ever applied to them for registration, and deny that any application for registration has ever been refused on account of race or color. They admit, and the Court finds, that an actual controversy exists between the plaintiffs and the defendants and that the contentions of the parties with reference thereto are substantially stated in the amended complaint.

E. J. Gonsales, the third member of the defendant board, declined to join in the answer filed by the other defendants, stating that he could not join in all of the denials contained in their answer. He filed no formal answer, but testified and represented himself on the trial of the case.

Only two of the plaintiffs, Hunter Davis and Julius B. Cook, testified on the trial. From the evidence we find that these two plaintiffs presented themselves to the defendant board seeking to register as electors and that they presented satisfactory evidence of their qualifications to register as electors, but their applications were denied. The evidence shows they had the residential qualifications prescribed by Section 178 of the Constitution of Alabama, having continuously resided in the State of Alabama, in the County of Mobile, and in the precinct or ward where they lived for more than two years immediately preceding the time when they applied for registration; that they were over the ageof twenty-one years, and had been regularly engaged in lawful employment, business or occupation for the greater part of the twelve months next preceding the time at which they offered to register; that they are citizens of Alabama, and of the United States, of good character, and possess all other qualifications of electors, unless it be said that they can be required to "understand and explain" any article of the United States Constitution to the reasonable satisfaction of the members of the defendant board. These two plaintiffs have none of the disqualifications set out in Section 182 of the Alabama Constitution.

We further find from the evidence that prior to the filing of this suit said Board of Registrars required Negro applicants for registration as electors in Mobile County to attempt to explain at least some article of the United States Constitution, while no such requirement was exacted of white applicants. We also find that the plaintiffs Davis and Cook were refused registration as electors because of their race or color.

Prior to this suit defendant board did not keep records of rejected applicants, whether white or Negro. The members of said board went into office in October, 1947. Registration records of said board, which were not disputed, were interduced showing that during their tenure, prior to March 1, 1948 (the filing date of this suit), 39 colored applicants were registered; that subsequent to March 1, 1948, 65 colored applicants were registered and 57 were rejected, the records of these 57rejected applicants showing, in substance, that they were rejected because they could not "understand and explain" an article of the Federal Constitution. These records show that three white persons who were registered after this action was filed were asked to explain a provision of the Federal Constitution. The records of 11 rejected white applicants show that they were denied registration on grounds other than the requirements of the Boswell Amendment. The defendants offered nine colored witnesses, all of whom with one exception were public school teachers of good education, who testified that they were registered by the defendant board, some of them being asked if they could explain provisions of the Federal Constitution. The members of the defendant board generally required Negro applicants to explain or interpret provisions of the Federal Constitution, and did not generally require white applicants to do so.

The evidence shows that during the incumbency of the defendant board that more than 2800 white persons have been registered and approximately 104 Negroes. The estimated population of Mobile County is 230,000 of which approximately 64 percent is white and 36 percent is colored.

The States, not the Federal Government, prescribe the qualifications for the exercise of the franchise, and Federal Courts are not interested in these qualifications unless they contravene the Fifteenth Amendment or other provisions of the United States Constitution. The States have a right to prescribe a literacy test for electors. Guinn v. United States, 238 U.S. 347. However, state action which denies due process or equal protection of the laws in the exercise of the right of suffrage is prohibited by the Fourteenth Amendment. Nixon v. Herndon 273 U.S. 536; Nixon v. Condon, 286 U.S. 73 . The Fifteenth Amendment guarantees the free exercise of the right of franchise as against state discrimination based upon race or color. Guinn v. United States, supra; Lane v. Wilson 307 U.S. 268.

The subject matter of the Boswell Amendment is within state power, and its validity depends upon whether it squares with the Fourteenth and Fifteenth Amendments. We think it does not.

The original Section 181 of the Constitution of Alabama has stood for nearly 50 years and has provided definite standards for passing upon the qualifications of prospective electors. The original section provided for two qualifications, the possession of either of which was sufficient to permit registration. An applicant was required to be able to "read and write any article of the Constitution of the United States in the English language," or in the alternative he could qualify if he owned, assessed and paid taxes on real or personal property of an assessed value of $300.00. The Boswell Amendment dropped the property qualifications, and adopted a qualification requiring not only that an applicant be able to "read and write" but also that he be able to "understand and explain any article of the constitution of the United States in the English language".

Do the words "understand and explain, as used in the Boswell Amendment furnish a reasonable standard whereby boards of registrars may pass on qualifications of prospective electors, or are these words so ambiguous, uncertain, and indefinite in meaning that they confer upon said boards arbitrary power to register or to refuse to register whomever they please.

"Understand" is a word of many meanings and "a verb of very extensive signification."(4) Understanding may be based upon learning or knowledge or upon rumor or hearsay. It may mean to apprehend, or to comprehend, partially or fully. It may deal with meaning, import, intention or motive. It may mean to appreciate the force or value of a thing or proposition. It may mean that to person is informed or that he has merely received notice or heard of something. To understand may mean to imply, infer or assume, or it may contemplate knowing the meaning or the supposed meaning. It may mean to interpret.

"Explain" is also a word of indefinite meaning; it may mean to make plain manifest or intelligible; to clear of obscurity; to expound, to illustrate by discourse or by notes.

The Boswell Amendment requires a prospective elector to "understand and explain any article of the Constitution of the United States in the English language." There is no requirement that the understanding or explanation be in writing. The language does not call for a simple, fair or reasonable understanding or explanation. It does not say that the understanding and explanation must be partial, full, complete, definite, proper, fair, reasonable, plain, precise, correct, accurate, or give any rule, guide or test as to the nature of the understanding or explanation that is required. The Amendment does not say to whose satisfaction to applicant must "understand and explain", but under the statutes, it must be to the reasonable satisfaction of a majority of the members of one of the 67 boards of registrars that are provided for the 67 counties of Alabama.(5)

The members of these boards are not required to be lawyers or learned in the law(6), and it is fair to assume that many members of these boards do not have a good or correct understanding of the various articles of the Constitution, and that they might not be able to give any explanation of many of them. Many members of the boards of registrars might justly and properly say to an applicant for registration, "My legs do better understand me, sir, than I understand what you mean."

(4) Dearing, Sink & Co. v. Smith and Wright, 4 Ala. 432, 438.

(6) Title 17, Section 21, Code of Alabama 1940.

No uniform, objective or standardized test or examination is provided whereby an impartial board could determine whether the applicant has a reasonable understanding and can give a reasonable explanation of the articles of the Constitution (if, indeed, the test were to be a reasonable understanding and a reasonable explanation). If such a test or examination were provided to be administered to all prospective electors alike, then the boards of registrars would have definite guides to control their judgment in determining whether or not an applicant could "understand and explain" the provisions of the Constitution. Under such a test with proper questions or guides a record could be made which would give a rejected applicant a definite basis upon which he could seek and obtain a proper judicial review of the board's action, and the reviewing court would have something definite to act upon in ascertaining whether an applicant had been rightfully or arbitrarily and unjustly denied the right of suffrage.

As pointed out, "understand" may mean to interpret. This meaning requires an exceedingly high, if not impossible, standard. The distinguished Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States have frequently disagreed in their interpretations of various articles of the Constitution. We learn from history that many of the makers of the Constitution did not understand its provisions; many of them understood and believed that its provisions gave the Supreme Court no power to declare an act of Congress unconstitutional. An understanding of explanation given by the Supreme Court a few years ago as to the meaning of the commerce clause does not apply today. Among our most learned judges there are at least four different understandings and explanations of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution as to whether it made the first eight Amendments applicable to state action (7). Such a rigorous standard--to interpret--is clearly within the legitimate range of the meanings of the phrase "understand and explain", and illustrates the completeness with which any individual or group of prospective electors, whether white or Negro, may be deprived of the right of franchise by boards of registrars inclined to apply this one of the innumerable meanings of such an indefinite phrase.

(7) Cf. Adamson v. California, 332 U. S. 46 (1947).

The word "understand and explain" do not provide a reasonable standard. A simple test may be given one applicant; a long, tedious, complex one to another; one applicant may be examined on one article of the Constitution another may be called upon to "understand and explain" every article and provision of the entire instrument.

To state it plainly, the sole test is: Has the applicant by oral examination or otherwise understood and explained the Constitution to the satisfaction of the particular board? To state it more plainly, the board has a right to reject one applicant and accept another, depending solely upon whether it likes or dislikes the understanding and explanation offered. To state it even more plainly, the board,, by the use of the words "understand and explain," is given the arbitrary power to accept or reject any prospective elector that may apply, or, to use the language of Yick Wo v. Hopkins, 118 U. S. 356, 366, these words "actually do confer, not a discretion to be exercised upon a consideration of the circumstances of each case, but a naked and arbitrary power to give or withold consent." The board has the power to establish two classes, those to whom they consent and those to whom they do not--those who may vote and those who may not. Such arbitrary power amounts to a denial of equal protection of the law within the meaning of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution, and is condemned by the Yick Wo and many other decisions of the Supreme Court.

When a word or phrase in a statute or constitution is ambiguous, it is the duty of the court, in construing the meaning of that word or phrase, to attempt to determine whether an exact meaning was intended and if so, to ascertain that meaning. If an exact meaning of the phrase "understand and explain" were to be discovered by a process of construction in this case, it might be that a suitable and definite standard could be found, which would not give to the board of registrars arbitrary power. However, a careful consideration of the legislative and other history of the adoption of this Amendment to the Constitution of Alabama discloses that the ambiguity inherent in the phrase "understand and explain" cannot be resolved, but, on the contrary, was purposeful and used with a view of meeting the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in Smith v. Allwright, 321 U. S. 649. The history of the period immediately preceding the adoption of the Boswell Amendment, of which we take judicial notice, and the evidence in this case prove this.

The State Democratic Executive Committee is an official arm of the State, its action constitutes state action. Smith v. Allwright, supra. (8) The activities of this committee in sponsoring and leading the fight for the adoption of the Boswell Amendment are admissible and material in determining whether the Boswell Amendment is a contrivance by the State to thwart equality in the enjoyment of the right to vote by citizens of the United States on account of race or color.

The State Democratic Executive Committee spent its funds and led the fight to secure the adoption of the Boswell Amendment in its endeavor "to make the Democratic Party in Alabama the 'White Man's Party.'". (9)

---

(8) The State Democratic Executive Committee is the official governing body of the Democratic party in Alabama; its members are elected by the voters in Democratic primaries. Cf. Title 17 Section 341, Alabama Code of 1940. Said committee is authorized to prescribe rules and regulations governing matters of party procedure. Title 17, Section 389. It has the authority to determine who shall be qualified as members and candidates for nomination, who shall be entitled to vote in primary elections, and to fix assessments to be paid by candidates for nomination at a primary election. Title 17, Section 347. Compensation of officers and expenses of all primary elections are paid out of the county or municipal treasury in the same manner and to the same extent as provided for the payment of expenses and officers of general elections held under the general election laws of Alabama. Title 17, Section 343. Section 196 of the Alabama Constitution provides that the legislature shall make provision by law for the regulation of primary elections, but provides that primary elections shall not be made compulsory.

(9) In a letter dated August 27, 1946, addressed to the members of the State Democratic Executive Committee, the chairman of that committee, among other things, said:

> "45 ballots were cast in favor of the State Committee expending up to $3,500.00 in a campaign to have the 'Boswell Amendment' adopted, 7 ballots were cast against such expenditures, and 1 ballot was not voted. * * *
> " I might add that while a few members of our State Committee have expressed the thought that the funds of the State Committee should not be expended in a campaign either for or against the adoption of the proposed "Boswell Amendment,' yet the great majority of the members of our Committee have taken the position that since the emblem of our Party is a crowing rooster, with the words 'WHITE SUPREMACY' above the rooster, and the words 'FOR THE RIGHT' below the rooster, that it is entirely proper that the State Democratic Executive Committee should lead the fight to maintain the traditions of our Party in this State by adopting the proposed amendment to our Constitution and endeavoring, as far as it can legally be done, to make the Democratic Party in Alabama the 'WHITE MAN'S PARTY.'"
> (From Plaintiffs' Exhibit 5)

The chairman of this committee was instrumental in originating the Amendment and in making recommendations to the legislative committee as to changes he deemed advisable in Alabama's election laws to meet the "Texas case," under which Democratic primaries could no longer be limited to white voters. An overwhelming majority of the membership of this committee "took the position that we should be Militant Democrats and continue to fight for white supremacy in our State."(10)

The 72 members of this State Committee were urged to contact the members of the county Democratic executive committees, some 2500 in number, and all of the general election officials, some 14,000 in number, to secure their support in the campaign for the adoption of the Boswell Amendment, on the basis that the purpose of the Boswell Amendment was to restrict Negro registration.(11)

In the ALABAMA LAWYER, the official organ of the State Bar of Alabama, in the July 1946 issue, a distinguished Alabama lawyer, writing in opposition to the adoption of the Boswell Amendment, which was at that time awaiting action at the hands of the people of Alabama, said:

> "Let us be frank and honest with ourselves. You and I know that the people of our State are expected to adopt this Amendment in order to give the Registrars arbitrary power to exclude Negroes from voting."

In the October 1946 issue of the same official publication, an equally distinguished Alabama lawyer, who favored the adoption of the Boswell Amendment, declared with reference to that Amendment:

> "see I earnestly favor a law that will make it impossible for a Negro to qualify, if that is possible. If it is impossible, then I favor a law, more especially a constitutional provision, that will come as near as possible, making possible, the impossible."

All of the foregoing but illustrates the intention and general understanding of the Legislature and electorate of Alabama at the time this Amendment was proposed and adopted by a small majority of a light vote. Such a history further demonstrates that this restrictive Amendment, coming on the heels of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in the Smith v. Allwright case,

(10) Plaintiffs' Exhibit 7.

(11) Plaintiffs' Exhibit 6.

was intended as a grant of arbitrary power in an attempt to obviate the consequences of that decision.

Thus, the process of attempted construction of an ambiguous phrase by reference to legislative history and to the intent of the makers of the phrase in this instance only reinforces the conclusion that the provision in question was incorporated for the purpose of allowing arbitrary action, and not for the purpose of providing a definite and reasonable standard.

The defendants argue that the Boswell Amendment is not "racist in its origin, purpose or effect," but, as has already been illustrated, a careful consideration of the conditions existing at the time, and of the circumstances and history surrounding the origin and adoption of the Boswell Amendment, and its subsequent application, demonstrate that its main object was to restrict voting on a basis of race or color. That its purpose was such is further illustrated by the campaign material that was used to secure its adoption.

The ALABAMA DEMOCRAT,(12) a campaign document in the form of a newspaper published in support of the adoption of the Boswell Amendment consisted in its entirety of arguments urging the voters to adopt the Amendment for the purpose of restricting voting by Negroes. This document carried the headline: "WARNING IS SOUNDED: BLACKS WILL TAKE OVER IF AMENDMENT LOSES" and the foot line: "VOTE WHITE__VOTE RIGHT__VOTE FOR AMENDMENT NO. 4."

Similarly, an editorial of the TALLADEGA HOME, reproduced in said document, asked the question: "What is the Boswell Amendment?" and answered the question by saying, "It is a measure designed simply and solely to enable registrars legally to hold down the number of Negro registrants."

Furthermore, the administration of the Boswell Amendment by the defendant board demonstrates that the ambiguous standard prescribed has, in fact, been arbitrarily used for the purpose of excluding Negro applicants for the franchise, while white applicants with comparable qualifications were being accepted. The evidence is without dispute that this Amendment has been used to disqualify many Negro applicants for registration while it does not definitely disclose that it has been used to disqualify a single white applicant. It is further shown that as a rule the Boswell test of "understand and explain" is required of Negroes while no such exaction is made of white applicants.

(12) Plaintiffs' Exhibit 8.

If, this, clearly appears that this Amendment was intended to be, and is being used for the purpose of discriminating against applicants for the franchise on the basis of race or color. Therefore, we are necessarily brought to the conclusion that this Amendment to the Constitution of Alabama, both in its object and the manner of its administration, is unconstitutional, because it violates the Fifteenth Amendment. While it is true that there is no mention of race or color in the Boswell Amendment, this does not save it. The Fifteenth Amendment "nullifies sophisticated as well as simple-minded modes of discrimination," and "It hits onerous procedural requirements which effectively handicap exercise of the franchise by the colored race although the abstract right to vote may remain unrestricted as to race." Lane v. Wilson, 307 U.S. 268,275. Cf. Smith v. Allwright, supra; Guinn v. United States, supra.

We cannot ignore the impact of the Boswell Amendment upon Negro citizens because it avoids mention of race or color; "To do this would be to shut our eyes to what all others that we can see and understand." (13)

The Amendment being unconstitutional, the plaintiffs are entitled to injunctive relief.

McCORD, Circuit Judge, and McDUFFIE, District Judge, concurring.

SUMMARY OF RECENT SEGREGATION LAWS

ENACTED IN SOUTHERN STATES

October 1, 1957

ADDENDUM TO SUMMARY OF SEGREGATION LAWS

ALABAMA

1957 Session of Legislature

A stronger interposition resolution than that enacted in 1955 was passed. Unlike the earlier resolution, it was signed by Governor Folsom.

The legislature passed laws to implement amendments which had been approved in the August, 1956, general election. One strengthened the 1955 placement law by designating school board as "judicial tribunals," with the power to subpoena witnesses and records, administer oaths, issue orders, etc., in addition to their previously given assignment authority. Further enactments, designed to bolster the "Freedom of Choice Amendment," included a bill authorizing the abolition of public schools if such a step is necessary to prevent integration (state funds are to be used to support "private schools"). It was provided that teachers employed in schools abolished would retain retirement and other benefits.

Also passed was a bill reducing the city limits of Tuskegee so that only about 10 out of more than 400 Negro voters remain eligible for voting in city elections. A two-year study of a proposal to abolish and divide Macon County, Alabama, was approved.

ARKANSAS

1957 Session of Legislature

A twelve member State Sovereignty Commission with wide investigative powers was created, and $30,000 was appropriated for its operation. Along with other duties, the Commission is required to protect the sovereignty of Arkansas and her sister states from encroachment by the Federal government. The commission is to collect information on developments which invade the rights of the state and investigate written allegations that certain persons or groups are advocating or aiding in the invasion of the sovereign powers of the state or its citizens. The commission may subpoena witnesses and records, and penalties for failure to obey subpoenas and for perjury were established.

Certain persons and organizations are required to register with and make periodical reports to the Sovereignty Commission. Included are persons or groups who solicit or receive contributions to aid passage of laws by the United States Congress which limit Arkansas' control of its school districts; to defeat legislation through which the Arkansas Legislature proposes to maintain the "rights of the State;" to recruit plaintiffs for litigation regarding public schools of the state; to promote integration of the races in the public schools; etc. Fines and/or imprisonment may be imposed for violation of the act.

The decisions of the United States Supreme Court in the school segregation cases were said to have raised many legal problems for school boards and the boards were authorized to employ and pay legal counsel when necessary.

The legislature said that the general welfare of children required that white and Negro children should not be compelled to attend public school together. Therefore the compulsory school attendance law was amended so that no child is required to attend a school in which both races are enrolled.

FLORIDA

1957 Session of Legislature

Although there was much debate on segregation measures, the 1957 session of the Florida legislature did not enact any major new laws. An interposition resolution was adopted; however, Gov. Collins (who has no power to veto such an action) has stated that it is of no legal effect. A bill allowing local districts to abandon public schools ordered to desegregate was passed, vetoed by the governor, and the veto sustained by the legislature. A group of bills, admittedly aimed at the NAACP, resulted in the enactment of only one - the two-year continuation of a joint legislative committee authorized to investigate "racial agitators."

A local bill, affecting only one county, was approved. Teachers in Jefferson County are forbidden to teach members of another race; white and Negro children are forbidden to sit together in school cafeterias or at athletic events, or to participate with one another in athletic events.

GEORGIA

1957 Session of Legislature

The Governor was given broad police powers, permitting him to use the state militia or any law enforcement officers to maintain peace and order if there were violence or (in his opinion) threats of violence or disorder. To maintain law and order, the governor may direct any person or group to engage in any act or refrain from any designated act. He is specifically empowered to regulate the manner and time of use and the persons using public parks, public buildings, public utilities, and any public facilities in Georgia if he believes a threat to peace and order exists.

The Georgia Education Commission was given subpoena powers to facilitate its carrying out investigations and preparing legislation on education. The Commission was also authorized to tell the South's story to the Nation, and funds for this were allotted.

All public school employees who accept employment in nonsectarian private schools are to continue under the coverage of the state retirement and pension fund.

The governor was authorized to suspend the compulsory school attendance law for all or any part of the state if he felt this was necessary to prevent public disorder or preserve the welfare of the citizens and the State.

A number of activities were defined as barratry (stirring up law suits); this was declared a misdemeanor, punishable as prescribed by law. The legislature included in its definition of barratry proposals by one person to another that a suit be brought against the State of Georgia or any other legal entity. Any persons aiding others in acts intended to result in litigation are also committing barratry.

The 14th and 15th amendments to the United States Constitution were declared null and void, and the Congress of the United States was requested to declare them null and void.

Six United States Supreme Court justices were said to have usurped the powers of the people and the Congress and to have given aid and comfort to enemies of the United States. The General Assembly of Georgia therefore requested the Georgia delegation in the United States House of Representatives to institute impeachment proceedings against Chief Justice Warren and Justices Black, Douglas, Reed, Frankfurter, and Clark.

An act provided that Georgia should reacquire civil and criminal jurisdiction over persons and citizens on roads maintained and used by Georgia, but which are within territory ceded to the United States. (One legislator said this was designed to restrict the authority of Negro military police officers.)

SOUTH CAROLINA

1957 Session of Legislature

An anti-barratry bill directed at the NAACP has been enacted. Included in the definition of barratry are the actions of any persons or groups who incite litigation by others or actions of those initiating suits in which they have no "direct or substantial interest in the relief sought." Penalties for violation of the act may be fines and/or revocation of licenses and charters.

The legislature repealed a bill, passed in 1956, making it illegal for any agency of the state to hire NAACP members. Another law was enacted which requires applicants for teaching and other state positions to list the names of organizations to which they belong.

TENNESSEE

1957 Session of Legislature

A pupil assignment law gave local school boards the full power to assign pupils within their jurisdiction on the basis of sociological, physical, psychological and other factors. A previous statute relating to the transfer of students from one school district to another was amended so that local boards have more power.

Local school systems are to provide separate school systems for white and Negro children if parents or guardians voluntarily decide that their children are to attend schools with members of their own race only.

Separate public schools for boys and girls may be operated.

Two or more school boards may operate a school or schools jointly. Reportedly, this will permit two or more counties, each having small Negro populations, to operate a single school for Negroes from the several counties.

A statute dealing with the transportation of school children was amended to remove the reference to race in the law.

At the end of its session, the legislature adopted a measure eliminating compulsory school attendance in that parents might withdraw their children from schools if the conditions were detrimental to thewelfare of the children. Children must be reentered at another public or a private school within 30 days after withdrawal. Governor Clement has implied that he will veto this bill.

A resolution of protest deploring and denouncing the decisions of the United States Supreme Court in the school segregation cases was passed. This is not an interposition or nullification resolution such as has been passed by several states.

Three laws specifically designed to curb the NAACP were passed, though the language also permits application to others. One law defines barratry as stirring up litigation, and it is prohibited. There are penalties for violation of the law. Persons or groups soliciting funds for or spending money to finance litigation must file annually with the Secretary of State a list of their officers, sources of revenue, expenditures and other information. Failure to do so may result in fines and/or revocation of licenses. Persons and organizations engaged primarily in promoting or opposing legislation and action relating to race and color or whose activities tend to cause racial violence must register with the Secretary of State and they may be fined for violation of this act.

TEXAS

1957 Session of Legislature

A law was enacted which calls for majority approval (through elections) in each school district before there is future school integration. Districts already desegregated are not affected though 20% of the electors in any district may petition for an election to consider restoration of segregation.

A pupil assignment law authorizing local school boards to assign students on the basis of aptitude, psychological factors, threats of friction etc., was passed.

December, 1956

STATE SUMMARY OF RECENT SEGREGATION LAWS

ALABAMA

The regular session of the 1955 Legislature passed the School Placement Law. The law lists numerous factors to be considered in assigning pupils and confers authority for placement on city and county Boards of Education. No child is to be compelled to attend any school in which the races are commingled if a parent or guardian files a written objection.

Two local bills were passed for Wilcox County. (1) Organizations soliciting memberships or funds are required to pay a $200 license fee, a $50 fee for each solicitor and a $5 fee for each member signed up. (2) If compulsory school segregation is invalidated for Wilcox County, no white or Negro children are to be compelled to attend mixed schools.

There were two special sessions of the Legislature in 1956, in which the following measures were enacted:

A strong interposition resolution declaring the school decision of the Supreme Court null and void was passed.

Local bills authorizing the Macon and Marengo County school boards to fire teachers belonging to organizations advocating racial integration were passed.

Two amendments relating to segregation were proposed and approved by the voters on August 28, 1956. One permits cities and counties to give away or sell public parks, playgrounds, swimming pools, golf courses, public housing projects, etc., to keep whites and Negroes from using them together.

The other amendment and implementing legislation affect schools. Public schools are abolished, though it continues to be the policy of the state to provide education. School property may be leased, sold, or donated to non-profit groups for educational purposes. Grants for private education are authorized and the compulsory attendance law is changed so that children may attend either a public or private school. Parents may elect that their children attend schools exclusively for their own race. School boards and education employees are vested with judicial authority (which is interpreted as conferring immunity from law suits) and the attorney general may be required to defend school boards and school officials in any suits brought against them.

ARKANSAS

In 1955 the Arkansas Senate killed a school assignment bill designed to preserve segregation in public schools. It had previously been passed by the House. A committee authorized by the governor to study school segregation, recommended that the voters decide in the November, 1956, election whether they desired some alternatives to integrated schools. The three measures placed on the ballot were approved by the voters. One, sponsored by Jim Johnson, an ardent segregationist, authorized the Legislature to nullify the Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation. The other two measures were sponsored by Gov. Faubus. One was a resolution saying the state should operate the schools as it chose. The other was an initiated act giving local boards authority to assign pupils.

FLORIDA

1955 Regular session of the legislature passed a bill allowing local school boards to assign pupils to a specific school on the basis of a number of factors.

The Legislature also asked Congress to pass legislation or propose amendments to the Constitution which would enable the sovereign states to continue education of their people under segregated systems if they saw fit to do so.

1956 special session of the Legislature broadened the powers of local school authorities in assigning pupils and called for consideration of a number of additional factors including "compatibility with other students,..... socio-economic factors."

School authorities are empowered to ignore continuing contracts and tenure in assigning teachers when schools are consolidated or pupils reassigned.

The governor was empowered to make and enforce rules (without further legislative action) relating to "the use of any state, county or municipal park, building or facility that may be necessary or expedient to preserve the peace and tranquility of the state and prevent violence."

The power of the governor to proclaim a state of emergency and to use the state's police force or militia to preserve order was detailed.

A resolution proposing an amendment to the U. S. Constitution was passed. It asked that the matter of education and regulation of the schools be left to the states.

A committee with a $50,000 appropriation was set us to investigate the NAACP. Language of the law is broad enough to include investigation of other groups, but its sponsors said the primary purpose is to investigate the NAACP though it is not mentioned by name.

GEORGIA

November - December 1953 Session of Legislature.

The "Private School Amendment" was proposed prior to the school decision of the United States Supreme Court and was ratified in the November 1954 general election. The legislature provided for grants of state, county or municipal funds to citizens of the state for educational purposes, thereby discharging all obligations of the state to provide education.

The Georgia Commission on Education was established to maintain separate schools for whites and Negroes.

1955 Session of Legislature

Legislature provided that no state funds were to be paid in support of any school district which did not maintain separation of the races in the schools.

1956 Session of Legislature

In the appropriations act schools are deemed ineligible for state funds if schools are not separate for white and Negro.

The governor is authorized to close schools not eligible for state funds and provisions were made for the preservation of such property. The governor was authorized to make education grants to children whose schools had been closed. The use of such funds for religious or sectarian schools was prohibited.

Authority was given local school boards to lease property for private school purposes.

The teacher retirement law was amended to include teachers in privately operated sectarian schools.

Provision was made for the sale, lease or disposal of any public park or recreational facility by the state, county, city, or political subdivision owning or operating it.

It was deemed a misdemeanor, punishable by law, if any person entered (without authority) property that the State had closed to the public.

In the area of transportation, common carriers were required to furnish separate traveling and waiting room accommodations for white and colored persons in intrastate travel.

The legislature provided that the state patrol and the GBI could enter any county or municipality upon request of any citizen or official thereof to enforce segregation laws.

Any peace officer who failed or refused to enforce segregation laws might forfeit all retirement benefits and disability payments.

The attorney general was advised to order any solicitor general to represent any public official or employee who may have been charged with failure to carry out federal regulations if his performance was in accordance with the laws and judicial rulings of the state of Georgia or its subdivisions.

AN INTERPOSITION RESOLUTION declaring the May 17, 1954 and the May 31, 1955 decisions of the United State Supreme Court null, void, and of no effect was passed.

KENTUCKY

Legislation

The General Assembly has passed no pro-segregation legislation. With a few recently publicized exceptions school desegregation has proceeded smoothly and widely.

LOUISIANA

Legislation

The Louisiana Legislature was in session at the time of the May 1954 decision of the United States Supreme Court. It subsequently passed three school segregation measures. All were declared invalid in February 1956 by the U. S. District Judge J. Skelly Wright. Judge Wright also enjoined the Orleans School Board from enforcing school segregation. The decisions were appealed. The measures passed in 1954 and declared invalid were as follows:

1. The Constitution was amended to provide that all public elementary and secondary schools in the state of Louisiana would be operated separately for white and colored children. The state was to use its police powers to maintain segregation.

2. A law was passed which stated that the State would not approve any public school violating the above segregation provision. No free school books, supplies, or lunches would be provided for schools violating the provision nor would the State colleges recognize their certificates of graduation.

3. Local school superintendents were given the power to designate which school each pupil should attend and no pupil could enroll until assigned.

1956 session of Legislature passed a number of segregation bills including a proposed constitutional amendment and an interposition resolution. Provisions of bills follow.

LOUISIANA

The amendment approved by the electorate in November, 1956, named a number of recreational and school boards which were declared "special agencies." With a few specified exceptions the State of Louisiana withdrew permission for these to be sued.

Other bills set up new grounds for dismissal of public school bus drivers, teachers, and any regular employees of tax supported schools. Grounds include belonging to any organization prohibited by state law or enjoined from operating in the state and personally advocating racial integration in any public school or college.

A bill was passed requiring the separate use of public schools for white and Negro children and racial assignment of teachers in cities of 300,000 or more. Schools are to remain as they were when bill became effective. The state is the only legal defendant in event of suits against school authorities in these cities and the consent of the legislature is necessary to bring suit.

Compulsory school attendance is no longer required where integration has been required by court or other order. Any person entering a tax supported college must file a certificate attesting to eligibility and good moral character that is signed by his high school principal and district school superintendent. Signing of such certificates has been interpreted as advocating racial integration if the student is a Negro applying to one of the formerly all-white colleges, and the school employee signing is subject to dismissal.

All public parks and recreational facilities must be operated separately for white and colored persons. There may be mixed audiences at some affairs provided separate seating and rest room facilities are provided. All persons, firms and corporations are prohibited from sponsoring or participating in interracial functions and athletic activities.

In transportation three types of facilities are to be set up. These are to be for interstate passengers, white intrastate passengers, and colored intrastate passengers. Separate toilet and drinking facilities are to be provided for colored passengers whether in intra or interstate travel.

Employers are required to provide separate rest room, drinking and eating facilities for Negro and white employees.

The Joint Legislative Committee created in 1954 for the purpose of "carrying on and conducting the fight to maintain segregation of the races" was continued.

The Legislature passed a resolution of interposition in which it condemned the United States Supreme Court and declared the May, 1954, decision in violation of the Constitution of the United States and the Constitution of Louisiana.

MISSISSIPPI

The 1954 Legislature passed a law providing for the assignment of pupils on the basis of health, morals, community welfare factors. The Legal Educational Advisory Committee was created to plan ways to retain segregation.

A special legislative session in 1954 proposed a constitutional amendment which was adopted by the people in December, 1954. Its measures are mainly permissive, providing that public schools may be abolished for the entire state by a two-thirds vote of the Legislature and for a county or separate school district by a majority vote of the Legislature. Funds may be appropriated to assist in the education of children if public schools are abolished and school properties may be disposed of. However, the Legislature is permitted to continue support of the public schools without reference to the provision in the state constitution for separate but equal schools for the races.

A special legislative session in 1955 adopted a measure prohibiting Caucasians from attending public schools attended by non-whites. Fines up to $25 and/or jail sentences up to six months may be imposed for violation and each day of such violation can be considered a separate offense.

In 1956 the Legislature adopted an interposition resolution and resolutions commending members of the state's congressional delegation for opposing desegregation. Other measures created a State Sovereignty Commission to resist federal encroachment and integration (this replaced the Legal Educational Advisory Committee) and directed all public officials to prohibit the implementation or compliance with the integration decision by all legal means. Compulsory school attendance laws were repealed and all teachers and other professional school employees in state supported schools were required to file affidavits listing all organizations to which they presently belonged or contributed or which they had belonged to in the last five years. The formenting or solicitation of litigation and receiving and donating funds for the filing or prosecution of lawsuits were prohibited. Common law marriages, formerly recognized, were abolished and all children born of such marriages were declared illegitimate (this is expected to implement the pupil assignment law of 1954).

All common carriers operating in Mississippi were required to provide separate waiting and rest room facilities for white and Negro passengers and penalties were provided for those using facilities for another race. Law enforcement officers and court officers were exempted from damage suits in the courts of the states as a result of enforcing these acts.

Absentee voting because of illness and occupation were eliminated and more specific instructions on the method of marking ballots and the time (5 to 10 minutes) one could take for voting were established.

Any business, profession, or trade, excepting utilities, was given the right to refuse to serve any person, and a person who had been refused could be convicted of trespass. Penalties were established for persons "creating a disturbance" in a place of business.

Criminal and civil penalties were set up for any person who sought to deprive a citizen of Mississippi of the rights and privileges guaranteed him by the Constitution and laws of Mississippi. Criminal penalties were established for any person convicted of inciting a public disturbance by advocating disobedience to any state law and non-conformance with the customs, traditions and usages of the state.

NORTH CAROLINA

The 1955 session of the General Assembly approved a resolution saying "mixing of the races in the public schools throughout the state cannot be accomplished." A pupil assignment law conferring the complete authority in the enrollment and assignment of pupils on local city and county school boards was passed. The school laws were reworded so that all reference to race was removed. School bus titles were transferred to the counties though buses still operated with state funds. Teachers contracts, formerly on a continuing basis unless the teachers was notified otherwise, were placed on a one year basis.

A special session of the Legislature was held in July, 1956. The main action was the proposal of a constitutional amendment and passage of implementing legislation. The amendment was approved in a special election in September, 1956. Provisions were made for a "local option unit" (a community or subdivision) to vote to close the public schools if there were integration of these schools. Tuition grants are to be provided for children to attend private schools if the public schools are closed. Any parent in a community where schools are integrated may also secure a tuition grant for his child to attend private school if the child cannot be reassigned to a segregated public school and the parent objects to attendance at the integrated school. Compulsory school attendance is no longer required for a child whose parent objects to his attending an integrated school and for whom no segregated public school or private school is abailable.

A resolution of "protest" against the Supreme Court's decision on education was passed. This is milder than the interposition resolutions passed in other states.

SOUTH CAROLINA

The Legislature proposed a constitutional amendment in 1952 to abolish the General Assembly to provide free public schools. This was approved by the voters in November 1952, but did not become official until early 1954 when it was ratified by the General Assembly in accordance with South Carolina law.

The 1955 session of the Legislature passed several laws specifically designed to prevent school integration. These grant local school authorities more latitude in transferring and assigning pupils. Pupils may be transferred from one county to another though parents do not own property in the county to which the pupil is transferred. The compulsory school attendance requirement was appealed, and visiting teachers authorized to use persuasion in influencing school attendance. School trustees are permitted to lease or sell school property. All state appropriations are to be cut off for any school from which and to which students are transferred as a result of any court order. Continuing contracts of teachers were eliminated so that year by year hiring is now the practice.

1956 Regular Session passed a strongly worded resolution in which it avoided using the word "interposition", but which is generally considered to be a resolution of interposition. It condemned the action of the Supreme Court and reserved to the state of South Carolina certain "sovereign" powers.

A concurrent resolution was passed by the House and Senate endorsing the formation of Citizens Councils in the State. Another resolution requested the State Library Board to remove certain books from circulation. (Circulation of a book for children, "The Swimming Hole", in which a Negro child assumes leadership, prompted the resolution).

An act was passed making it unlawful to hire in any state, school, county or municipal job any person who was a member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. This law faces a test in the U. S. District Court. Eighteen teachers who were dismissed from the Elloree Training School in Orangeburg County for refusing to sign statements relative to their NAACP membership filed suit in September.

In other action the Legislature set up a committee to investigate NAACP activities "among the faculty and students of the South Carolina State College for Negroes".

The appropriations bill specified that all appropriations were made for racially separate school and parks. Any institution of higher learning ordered by the court to admit a pupil would be closed. If any school other than the State College for Negroes closed as a result of this, the Negro school would also be closed until the other institution was opened.

Provisions were made for transferring certain pupils from one school to another with the aid of law enforcement officials. More power was given local school trustees in conducting hearing on segregation problems. The life of a 15 member committee (The Gressette Committee) set up in 1951 to study school segregation was extended indefinitely and its activities broadened to include all phases of segregation affecting the state. It is to coordinate its activities with similar groups in other states having "similar problems".

TENNESSEE

The Tennessee legislature had not passed any prosegregation legislation up through 1956. Local laws were vetoed by Governor Clement and a general segregation law died in committee.

TEXAS

No new segregation laws had been passed prior to 1957. However, voters in the Democratic primary in July, 1956 were asked if they wanted specific legislation (1) exempting a child from compulsory attendance at a mixed school, (2) stronger laws against racial intermarriage, and (3) a resolution of interposition. The voters approved these measures.

VIRGINIA

A constitutional convention amended the state's constitution in March, 1956, so that tuition grants might be paid out of public funds for children to attend private schools.

The 1956 regular session of the Legislature passed an interposition resolution. It also approved resolutions stating that only minor federal employees and clerks can serve on school boards and that there are to be no interracial athletic contests at high school level. Bills were passed which provided for the full disclosure of persons or groups supporting suits against school boards and for appointment of Arlington County School Board members (previously elected).

A special session of the Legislature enacted a number of anti-integration laws in September, 1956. These provided that public school integration could no longer receive state funds. The funds cut off would be available for tuition grants for children to attend private non-sectarian schools. Local school areas could also raise money to be used for tuition grants. Month-to-month financing of schools is permitted. Schools are no longer required to operate nine months a year nor does the compulsory attendance law require any child to attend a mixed school. The governor is permitted to take over any school that has been closed because of integration and attempt to reorganize and open it on a segregated basis.

Teachers in non-sectarian private schools formed after the passage of this law are brought under state retirement system. Local school boards, rather than the district superintendent, are made responsible for teacher assignment. However, pupil assignment is placed under control of a three man state Assignment Board.

School boards are directed to secure legal aid to defend themselves against suits and the attorney-general is authorized to assist them.

County school boards may furnish pupils transportation, but are no longer required to do so.

Organizations engaged in activities for the benefit of one race which create or might create racial conflict are required to register.

Several laws were passed prohibiting the instigation of litigation if one is not a party to it, regulating the solicitation of litigation, and requiring information on those bringing and financing law suits.

TRAGEDY IN GRENADA - spec file

A Study in the Breakdown of Law Enforcement

Many scenes of tragedy in Southern communities faced with Negro protest have raised up single villains - "Bull" Connor, Jim Clark, Laurie Pritchett. Most have eventually faced up to the necessity for accommodation of Negro rights. Not so, Grenada, Mississippi.

Grenada, in the Summer of 1966, was not prepared to face the hard reality of unhappy local Negroes. Official Grenada responded to Negro demands with the familiar, "no, never." Law enforcement officers, faced with what they considered the "odious" job of protecting peaceful Negro demonstrators, simply abdicated their legal responsibilities; in confrontations between Negro protestors and white mobs, these officials resembled nothing so much as "bought" referees.

Each time such a confrontation occurred, there was a breakdown in law enforcement - a vacuum of power. Sometimes, other law enforcement agencies filled the vacuum. More often, it was filled by white mobs.

In the Spring of 1966, Grenada, a sleepy, North Central Mississippi town of some 8,000 inhabitants -- whites outnumbering Negroes by about 250 -- had no civil rights organization and had experienced not even the faintest manifestations of organized Negro unrest. Civil Rights Acts, Freedom Rides, sit-ins, protest, had not come to Grenada. The town remained segregated.

"Two sets of restrooms (numbered One and Two) had been built into the County Courthouse. Negroes had never been permitted library privileges. The police force, the city's swimming pool and the town's twelve white churches were all segregated. Even the U. S. Post Office in Grenada was entirely white-staffed." (1) Only 135 of the County's 4,300 eligible Negroes were registered to vote in June, 1962. Four years later, on June 14, 1966, only 700 Negroes were registered. (2)

June 14, 1966 is the day that divides Grenada's history into "before" and "after." For on that hot, sunny Tuesday, the Meredith March came to town. About 175 marchers arrived at the city line; but as the group passed through the town it picked up considerable local support, until one Highway Patrolman, ordered to be on good behavior by an image-conscious

state, estimated that he saw "about a mile of niggers."(1)

The town had made some preparations for the arrival of the marchers. One Grenada official recalled: "We had several meetings among ourselves before the marchers came. We wanted to avoid trouble."(2)

City Manager John McEachin told a reporter who preceded the march: "All we want is to get these people through town and out of here. Good niggers don't want anything to do with this march. And there are more good niggers (here) than sorry niggers."(3)

The streets along which the march proceeded were relatively empty. There were no shouted obscenities, no cat-calls, no missile throwing. The population had been prepared for the march and warned to remain calm.

Policeman Jack Shipp told a couple of would-be troublemakers: "If you want to boo, boo out in the woods."(4)

City Attorney Bradford Dye later described how word was spread to avoid incidents, with statements to this effect: "Roll with the punch." "The County itself is granting concessions to Negroes all over the place." "Let them demonstrate for a day and then the parade will be over - and things will return to normal."(5)

And so, the marchers swarmed into courthouse square, which was ringed by state and county lawmen. The surrounding crowds of whites remained silent, though sullen. Even when SCLC official, Robert Green, climbed up on the town statue of Jeff Davis, slapped the face of the Confederate hero, and referred to him as "this joker . . ." The whites made no public outcry, although that "desecration of our monument" became the Summer rallying cry of bitter, resentful whites.(6)

This demonstration of civic self-discipline didn't mean that the townspeople were reconciled.

From a chair in the barber shop that day, one customer intoned: "They can pass all the laws they want, but niggers'll still have black faces. Where's this gonna end? I'll tell you. It's gonna end when we mow'em down, mow'em down."(7)

A merchant said: "I saw two of my niggers in there, an' they won't have no jobs tomorrow . . . they get in that march an' that's it. They'll be on relief tomorrow." (8)

A Sheriff's Deputy remarked the next day: "After they leave, everything will be the same again. The nigger in this town depends on the white man for his living." (1)

However, in the face of Negro demands and in the presence of national television and newspaper correspondents, city officials yielded gracefully. Prosecutor Dye met with Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. and other Negro leaders. He agreed to desegregate the Courthouse washrooms. Six Negro teachers were added to the complement of voting registrars. Registration hours were extended from 5:00 pm to 9:00 pm.(2)

As the conference continued, a night march was organized from a nearby church to the town square. "When Dr. King emerged smiling to report that the town had 'completely capitulated' to Negro demands, the crowd went home."(3) Again, the white community remained silent.

"As the group of 300 marchers filed past the darkened homes of the white section, the only sound that rose through the dark-boughed shade trees was the steady scuffle of marching feet. The restraint on the part of the whites was overwhelming. Not one heckler emerged. Not one epithet was hurled. Not one "Nigger" shouted. But the silence was a dark, brooding, seething silence . . ."(4)

But for all of the underlying resentment, the public behavior of local law enforcement officers could scarcely be criticized. They were displaying, for all to see, the image of a "New Mississippi."

"At 8:00 am Wednesday, the Courthouse opened as promised and by the time the march left Grenada Thursday afternoon, some one thousand Negroes had been added to the voting rolls. At a press conference in front of March headquarters, Dr. King declared: 'We will not allow window dressing compliance that will get us out of town. We can't guarantee there won't be some suffering and sacrifice. I've never worked anywhere where Negores haven't lost jobs. But I'm convinced Mississippi will never be the same."(5) June 16

Prophetic words indeed when applied to Grenada.

Before the March was a day down the road, Grenada's true colors - the stars and bars - again fluttered from the War Memorial. Two days later, the Negro registrars disappeared - and the color line reappeared wherever Grenadans gathered.(6) And so, amid mounting tensions, the Movement returned to Grenada full force, "demanding impossibly much of a town willing to yield impossibly little."(1) Hosea Williams of SCLC unfurled a 51 point bill of demands and pledged to make Grenada nothing less than an "open city," integrated everywhere from the Little League to the Old Folks' Home.(2)

Since the efforts of law enforcement officers were based on the assumption that their difficulties would disappear with the passing of the march, the news that SCLC was planning to conduct an ongoing campaign came as a severe blow. It was at this point that the quality of law enforcement began to deteriorate rapidly - not just from ill-will, but from a real inability to grasp the fundamental issues involved.

Said Sheriff Suggs Ingram: "They had it so easy during the March they thought they could come back and take over. We are not going to put up with what we have in the past, even if it takes force."(3)

In response to the initial demands of SCLC organizers, the city and county officials issued a joint manifesto, stating baldly: "There will be no concessions of any type or degree made to anyone whatsoever."(4)

Grenada wasn't budging. And the second act of the tragedy began.

- - - - - - - - - - -

A detailing of the Summer's events might well begin with the Independence Day celebration held on the night of July 3 in an abandoned barn outside of town. In attendance, among a crowd of 150, were 8 SCLC staffers, 5 Negro and 3 white, who had been left behind by Dr. King after the March departed. About 10:00 pm, Sheriff Ingram and a deputy appeared. The 3 SCLC whites were arrested and the next day, most of the Negro staffers were rounded up on various charges of being tramps and disturbing the peace.(5)

On July 7, 41 Negroes and 2 whites planned a march on the jail to protest the earlier arrests. (According to some reports, they had just been denied entry to a theater.)(6) They were refused a march permit and then staged a sitdown strike. All 43 were arrested.(7)

Open police brutality on a large scale first occurred on July 10. A group of about 50 Negroes arrived at the Jail for the stated purpose of visiting those already arrested.(8) They were informed that the couldn't visit and were ordered to disperse. When they failed to do so immediately, they were told that they were under arrest. The group crossed the street and mingled with a crowd of about 150 Negroes who had been watching the demonstration. At this point, approximately 25 State Highway Patrolmen, who had been kept out of sight around the corner, charged the crowd swinging billies and gun butts. The bystanders were still being beaten by the Highway Patrolmen when County policemen were ordered to disperse a nearby crowd of noisy whites. No whites were struck.(1)

From this point on, official hatred and violence were out in the open. There was no longer even a pretense of equal protection under the laws.

The situation grew increasingly tense. White fears and hatreds were further aroused by SCLC's call for a boycott or "black-out" of white-owned downtown stores and by continued concerted attempts to test desegregation in public facilities.(2)

On Wednesday, July 13, the second day of boycott picketing, 35 picketers were arrested after City Attorney Dye ordered police to "disperse these people any way you can."(3)

The next day, about 200 marchers approached the town square, planning to hold a demonstration in front of the War Memorial. But the Confederate statue was guarded by 8 Negroes - identifed by Constable Grady Carroll as prisoners serving life sentences.(4) They were ordered to shove back anyone who came near the statue. The marchers retreated rather than place the Negro prisoners in the position of having to attack other Negroes. Sheriff Suggs Ingram seemed amused by the confrontation of black vs. black.(5)

The struggle grew in intensity. As the boycott became increasingly effective, more picketers were arrested.(6) The Federal Court ordered County officials to provide adequate protection for the demonstrators.(7) The Justice Department sent in Federal Voting Registrars.(8) There were continuous marches and counter-marches, and only the presence of over 100 state Highway Patrolmen prevented massive violence.(9) Three Negroes leaving a theater were brutally beaten because one of them was so light-skinned he appeared to be white.(10) Mass arrests took place at a Negro dance in Tie Plant, a nearby community.(11)

The situation had become so serious, and complete loss of control by responsible community leaders so imminent, that "County officials requested a conference with Movement leaders. They asked for a temporary halt to demonstrations. Leon Hall, a 19 year old SCLC Project Leader, answered with a list of 17 urgent demands, including the release of the 57 Tie Plant party-goers. Declared one outraged white official: "That settles it. We just wanted you to know that we can't protect you. You are on your own."(1)

Here was an official abdication of responsibility for law enforcement by the power structure. The lid was off. The pot was ready to boil over. And it did.

On August 8, the Police and Highway Patrolmen were issued tear gas and were quick to use it. That evening,"some 75 - 85 City, County and State officers"(2) broke up a Negro voter registration rally by firing about 20 cannisters of tear gas(3) into a crowd of 200 people. City Attorney Bradford Dye explained that the crowd had been ordered to clear the street, "which they did, partially. Then they were asked to open it more. They didn't. Tear gas was used to disperse them."(4) Officers then chased bystanders ten blocks into the heart of the Negro district, clubbing some down on their own front lawns.(5)

The next night, violence became general. As demonstrators neared the town square for a planned rally, Sheriff Suggs Ingram told a reporter: "Now you're going to see a show."(6)

A mob of 250 whites waited by the Confederate monument in the square. As the demonstrators approached, the mob "threw bottles, bricks, steel pipes and firecrackers at the 300 Negroes. The attack sent demonstrators fleeing from the town square with whites in pursuit. A one point, over 100 state and local officers stepped in between the whites and the demonstrators, turned their backs to the white crowd, and rested their guns on their hips with the gun barrels pointed over the heads of the Negroes. Whites continued hurling missiles over the heads of the officers." (7)

"Many of the officers, including Sheriff Ingram, laughed as the missiles struck the Negroes, then issued angry warnings after 2 Negroes hurled missiles back at the whites."(8)

One of the demonstrators was taken to the hospital and at least a dozen others were injured.(9)

When asked the next day why he hadn't stopped the mob, Ingram responded: "Police couldn't have stopped it without using violence." He told how, a few minutes before the attack, he had asked several members of the mob to back away from the demonstrators. "I asked'em to do me a favor. Told'em I'd 'preciate it."(10)

The events of that night made it clear that there was no effective law enforcement in Grenada. In response to the obvious power vacuum, Governor Johnson sent in his riot control expert, Giles Crisler.(1)

On Wednesday evening, August 10, another demonstration was held, this time with rather different results. The evening began with a mob of some 300 whites firing chiselled bolts from sling shots and throwing cherry bombs and other firecrackers at 40 demonstrators, mostly teenagers, who had gathered in the square. Then came the difference. Crisler, backed by 250 officers, mostly State Troopers and Game and Fish Commission Officers, cleared the mob from the square at gunpoint, after they refused to heed warnings about throwing rocks.(2)

Shouts of "nigger lovers" and "traitors" came from the mob as troopers pressed them down streets leading from the square. "I never thought I'd live to see the day,"(3) shouted one man.

Sheriff Ingram remained in the background as State officials took over.

Once it had been demonstrated that there was a force in Grenada bigger than the mob, a certain degree of peace, or at least truce, settled over the town. And that should have been the end of Grenada's chapter in the annals of violent resistance to civil rights activities, but it was not. There was yet a third act.

- - - - - - - - - - - - -

On August 26, Federal Judge Claude Clayton, on petition of the Justice Department, ordered Grenada's schools desegregated.(4) School registration had been set for September 2, but because of the complexities involved in the processing of "freedom of choice" forms, it was postponed until September 12.(5)

During the more than three weeks which elapsed between the issuance of the court order and the opening of school, local law enforcement officials, despite their Summer experiences, made no plans for special precautions or protection for the Negro students.(6) According to testimony later given before Judge Clayton, they assumed that the State Highway Patrol would be available for special help, although State law forbids the Highway Patrol to operate in municipalities without the express request of local officials or a formal order from the Governor.(7)

As a result, when School Desegregation Day came, the only law enforcement agencies available to maintain order were the Sheriff and his deputies and the City Police Department, both of which agencies had long since demonstrated their unwillingness and inability to keep order in the community.(1)

Thus, the tragic events of September 12-13 were, in a way, inevitable.

300 of the 1,387 eligible Negro children registered for admission to the formerly all-white Lizzie Horne Elementary School and John Rundle High School.(2)

On the evening of September 11, separate columns of Negro and white demonstrators marched around the Courthouse Square, side by side.

About 275 Negroes shouted, "John Rundle, John Rundle High School," in answer to a shout of "Where are we going to school tomorrow?"(3)

While there was no large scale violence that evening, it was obvious that feelings among both communities were running very high. Still, city officials made no special arrangements.

On the first morning of school, small roving bands of whites, armed with axe handles, lead pipes and chains, attacked many of the 150 Negro children who appeared, lashing out at boys and girls alike. The gangs were directed to their victims by walkie-talkies or gun shot signals, from pick-up trucks which cruised the streets near the school complex.(4)

A few items will, perhaps, catch the flavor of the day.

A gang of whites trampled Richard Sigh, 12, in the dust, breaking a leg.(5)

One group of girls, including 14 year old Emerald Cunningham, were on their way to school when they saw a crowd of whites approaching. Most of the girls fled, but Emerald was caught by the mob. One man pointed a gun at her head and pushed her into a front yard. Then the mob began to beat her with fists, pipes and chains. When Emerald tried to leave, the man with the gun said, "Nigger, you move I shoot your brain out." Finally a white man pulled her up and said: "Get away and don't come back."

Why didn't she flee with the rest of the girls? Emerald explained: "I had polio and couldn't run."(6)

One twelve year old boy, attempting to escape, was forced to run a block-long gauntlet of whites who flailed him with chains. He emerged with a bleeding face and torn clothes.(1)

These, of course, are only a few of the incidents. In all, 33 Negroes and three white newsmen were assaulted that day.(2)

Perhaps the most significant fact is that almost all of these attacks and beatings took place within view of local law enforcement officials.(3)

"While Negro youngsters were thrown to the ground, kicked and beaten, Grenada Policemen stood by and grinned.

"These niggers', explained Constable Grady Carroll,'is keeping the law enforcement officers from doing their duty."(4)

NAACP Attorney Henry Aaron~~son~~ said that he heard white men make threatening remarks when he arrived at the school grounds. Constable Carroll and Police Captain Turner were nearby, so he asked them for protection.

Aaron~~son~~ testified: "Carroll looked at the toughs and nodded at me. It was a very distinct nod. Immediately on nodding, the group charged me. I ran to Carroll and said, "Grady, Grady, help me.' He said, 'You don't belong here.' Then the group got me. They hit me on the head and I don't know where else. They beat me to the ground. And I was screaming to Grady for help. I saw Grady's shoes the whole time, while Grady and Turner stood there."

When the ordeal was over, Aaronson reported that Carroll asked him: "What the hell are you doing here causing all this trouble." (5)

A Negro woman stated that she opened her car door to let broken glass fall out of her auto after a white crowd attacked, and Carroll, who had been standing by all the time, said: "Don't you get your . . . out of there. If you do, we'll kill you."(6)

Robert Gordon, a reporter for UPI, tried to escape from the mob by running across the school grounds, but was ordered off the premises by a County Policeman. Then the mob caught Gordon again and knocked him to the street. Finally, two policemen came up and rescued him. One of the policemen told the mob: "OK,boys, he's had enough."(7)

Charles Alexander, 17, was struck with a pistol outside the high school. The assailant then pointed the gun at him. When Alexander pointed the man out to a policeman who was patrolling the sidewalk, he was rebuffed. "I'm busy now," said the policeman.(1)

Instances of police indifference to, and apparent approval of, the brutalities of the day would fill many pages. The police attitude is best summed up by Constable Carroll's explanation concerning the attacks on reporters. "Some of the newsmen needed a cleaning. If they tell a lie, they need a whupping . . ." From whom? "From any body who wants to give it to them," Carroll said.(2)

This day's events did not mark the end of the violence. Although Governor Johnson ordered the State Highway Patrol into the area on Monday night, they did not move into the school area on Tuesday morning until asked to do so by local police.(3) By the time they went into action, many car windows had been smashed and at least four more children beaten.(4)

While the presence of the State law enforcement officers put an end to attacks on women and children, it did not have a beneficial effect on the mood of the white community.

Several hundred whites, shouting defiance of state and federal authority, held a furious session Monday night in the City Hall Auditorium to demand that the patrol be withdrawn. "If you get that State Highway Patrol out of here, there won't be a nigger left in Grenada," cried one man.(5)

On Tuesday night, a group of Negro demonstrators were attacked by a white mob in the town square. The large contingent of State officers stepped between the groups only after the white attack had taken place.(6)

This was the last serious incident of violence. Order was finally brought to Grenada by the presence of the State Highway Patrol, 13 FBI arrests,(7) and a Federal Court order to local officials, so sternly worded by Judge Clayton that one official reported: "When the judge got through, you thought you could crawl through the eye of a needle."(8)

None of these events seems to have brought any basic change to Grenada. Sheriff Suggs Ingram still occupies the throne. Constable Grady Carroll, who received a four month sentence for Contempt of Court, will probably soon be back at the old stand, if he is not already there. The City Council has issued yet another statement in favor of "law and order."(1) A white minister reports that racial lines are so tightly drawn that: "If you so much as suggest talking to the colored leadership, you're labelled a 'nigger lover' and a 'race mixer."(2)

These last items serve to illustrate that the law enforcement process can fail again in Grenada. No changes have been made. No lessons have been learned. As late as the last week in October, over 275 young Negro demonstrators and picketers were arrested, some of them sent to the state prison at Parchman, because all of the jails in the area were full to overflowing.(3)

The only small ray of hope for the future came from the children themselves. One the afternoon of that terrible first day of school, many of the Negro children had gathered in the Auditorium waiting for the mob to disperse somewhat. Sheriff Ingram came and told the children that they could leave and would be given a police escort home. He advised them to leave by a rear door but the youngsters replied:

"No Sir, we're going out the front door like white folks."(4)

They did.

"A Charge To Keep We Have"

WORKBOOK ON WHAT TRANSPIRED
MARCH 22-23, 1967

The Workshop of The Fellowship of The Concerned

The Charge To Us From The President of Our Country:

It is the citizen who will finally determine whether the agencies of law enforcement and criminal justice are staffed and nourished by first-rate skills and modern equipment.

It is the citizen who maintains and enlarges respect for law and order.
It is the interaction of the citizen and the community — their common dedication to public order — which is the most powerful deterrent of crime.

It is the citizen who will determine whether streets will be safe to walk, whether homes will be secure, whether property rights will be respected, whether integrity and honest dealing will govern relationships between men.
We can control crime if we will.

We must act boldly, now, to treat ancient evils and to insure the public safety.

"A CHARGE TO KEEP WE HAVE"

By Thelma Stevens

(A Message to Participants in the Workshop of the Fellowship of the Concerned.)

"To be a troubler in Israel" is the calling of every person concerned with the wellbeing of God's children. A "troubler" in Isarel is not afraid to undertake the difficult, the unpopular and whay may seem too frequently to be impossible. Throughout history there have been concerned women whose courage, sensitivity, knowledge of the facts and understanding of the needs moved the world forward.

Mrs. Tilly, herself, with her own indomitable courage, her great knowledge and understanding of the injustices that beset our land, and her fearless creative effective involvement where suffering is greatest, illustrates in action today God's calling to be a "troubler in Israel!" She must have had something extra special in mind for all of us, when she said: "I want you to help us all see our responsibility and define our duty, as church women, to know what is happening in the courts." I doubt if I would have been presumptuous enough to say yes to such a mandate if any one except Mrs. Tilly had asked me!

Let me try to be as specific as I know how to be in trying to put in words a mandate to action that every person present understands or we would not have come to the meeting. We are all concerned with justice in the courts because the meaning of democracy is at stake. But even much more important, we are concerned with justice in the courts because we believe that God's children of every color and creed, of every station in life, have the right to equal protection under the law without fear of injustice and violence.

Citizens have a responsibility! Some one has said that "Responsibility that's real is duty." The Fellowship of the Concerned has functioned over the years because concerned committed women translated their duty as citizens into compassionate fearless bold action to effect change wherever injustices and violations of human dignity existed.

The primary focus of our concern in this conference is not necessarily with crime in general as important as that is. This concern must be focused by sheer necessity specifically on justice in the courts as the issues concern race and human freedom with dignity in the south today. The flagrant violations of the rights of persons of color and their supporters in courts is a travesty of justice, a blot on our much boasted democracy, and in total conflict with every worthy and relevant religious principle in which our faith is rooted. We have no recourse but to act if there is integrity in our witness.

The idea of justice in the courts started the ball rolling some fifteen years ago when "The Fellowship of the Concerned" was born. But 1967 is different! The whole world is watching us! The revolution among us in the U.S.A. has gathered momentum that will grow in its demand for freedom, justice and equality for all the people. Every part of our behaviour is on trial. Nothing less than full opportunity to walk and work and live in dignity and freedom will ever be accepted by the participants in the revolution.

March 21st, 1967 was designated by the U.N. General Assembly as world-wide "Eliminate Discrimination Day." This means in the U.S.A. too! More than fifty new nations have gained independent statehood in the last 20 years. These nations and some fifty or sixty other nations in the U.N. (total membership in 1967 is 121) will observe in 1968 the 20th Anniversary of the Adoption by the U. N. of the Universal Declaration of Human Rights. As our own nation participates there hopefully will grow new understanding of our responsibility in the world community where the achievement of human dignity is the chief cornerstone of peace.

"Injustice" in the Courts, in some parts of the south, has become a devastating symbol of U.S.A. across the world. Punishment of murderers has in some instances become a farce. Not enough citizens have become "troublers in Israel!"

In the U.S.A. and across the world the demand for freedom and power has become a slogan of destiny for many, with a time schedule that turns upside down "long range plans" that have characterized the postponement tactics of the traditional past. "Freedom - Now" means justice before the law or else there is no freedom. In the face of such fear ravaged change we have increasingly moved into a climate where violence beyond anything this nation has known has become a ground swell across the nation. Some parts of the south are more devastated because there the "law of the land" is being flouted by law enforcement power in the states.

In the face of this kind of challenge let me list a few premises:

1 - Law is neither enacted nor enforced unless the voting citizens demand it.

2 - Community organization to achieve power for the dispossessed needs the full support of concerned courageous citizens in thousands of local communities.

3 - The middle class power structure is scared to death, and this fear finds one of its most overt expressions in law enforcement and court decisions.

4 - Law enforcement and court integrity are the most crucial, the most difficult, and the most urgent issues or questions before us as concerned church women seek ways of witnessing as responsible citizens.

5 - The united voices calling to action and the visible presence of women of all faiths and races in the courts and wherever the law is flouted will go far toward determining just and fair procedures by the powers that seem to prevail.

In summary we may well ask how can we act effectively in 1967 and in the crisis years immediately ahead?

Even as we move now we must prepare ourselves and enlist other concerned women:

---To know the facts and understand them.

---To develop the skills of effective participation. Experience is often a great teacher.

---To enlist the community power structures for justice.

---To influence state political power. Women are voters with power!

---To make our voices heard in Washington on issues such as civil rights, law enforcement, and anti-poverty programs.

To be a "troubler in Israel" means working to break the old patterns that all too often have become the walled-in symbols of "our (so called) American Way of Life". It means acting with integrity to make real the religious faith we profess! This "Charge To Keep We Have" ever before us!

RECOMMENDATIONS

Voted by The Fellowship of the Concerned, March 23, 1967

Thus we "charged" ourselves to a big task.

1. It is recommended that the Fellowship of the Concerned encourage women in every state to safeguard the legal services available and that guidelines for action be gotten from the Civil Liberties Union, and N. A. A. C. P.

2. To have the women's groups in every community, to become alert about the qualifications of their judges and to, observe the process of justice in their courts.

3. Find out what kind of facilities exist in our respective states for taking care of problem children--children who go through the courts. Find out what steps can be taken to alleviate these situations.

RECOMMENDATIONS TO SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL

1. To provide a simple handbook of orientation and procedures for effective court action, with a training film strip, if possible.

2. That refresher periods be planned when we can come together to check up on what we have done and get further direction for future action.

TO REDEEM THE WORST, TO BETTER THE BEST

IN two messages to Congress last week, President Johnson put before the country major measures involving the youth of America. His proposals to combat crime ranged far beyond the problems of youth to consider curbs on all manner of violence in American society, but they vitally concerned the young because so large a proportion of crime is committed by them. His message on youth itself discussed how to nourish achievement, open opportunities and channel youthful energies into law-abiding pursuits. The gist of the President's messages:

CRIME

The "Safe Streets and Crime Control Act of 1967" would give the Federal Government little new authority and not even the germ of a national police force. But it would provide the funds ($350 million in the next two years) to induce city and state police forces, courts and correctional agencies to come to grips with the problem. Washington would give 90% of the money needed to finance modernization plans, foot 60% of the bill for crime-deterrent innovations, some of the more interesting of which have been suggested by Los Angeles' new police chief, Thomas J. Reddin (see THE LAW). It would also provide 50% of the construction cost of crime laboratories, community correction centers and police academies.

One innovation, said L.B.J., might be the appointment of community "service officers," who would know and maintain close relations with people in neighborhoods. With their contacts in the slums, they could alert authorities to trouble, help stave off riots. Juvenile delinquents might also be rehabilitated more successfully in their home communities than in reform schools; a five-year California experiment along this line, said the President, has shown "dramatically impressive" success in turning errant youths from all-too-promising careers in crime.

Startling Facts. The President relied heavily on data accumulated during an 18-month study that is to be published later this week by the National Crime Commission headed by Under Secretary of State (and former Attorney General) Nicholas deB. Katzenbach. As summarized in his message, the report presented some startling new facts about crime. Some of them:

▶ Fifteen-year-olds commit more serious crimes than those in any other age group, with 16-year-olds close behind. Youths under 18 account for more than half of all burglary arrests.

▶ Relatively few major crimes are interracial. For the most part, criminals prey upon their own race and economic group.

▶ The cost of white-collar crime, such as embezzlement, consumer frauds and petty theft from businesses, "dwarfs" that of all crimes of violence. Property losses from both kinds of crime total more than $3 billion a year.

▶ More than 7,000,000 people come into contact with some agency of criminal justice each year. More than 400,000 are behind bars in any one day.

▶ At least half of the aggravated assaults, burglaries and larcenies are probably never reported. In some communities, only one-tenth may show up on police records.

▶ One-third of all arrests—2,000,000 a year—are for drunkenness. If it were treated as a social problem, suggested Johnson, rather than a crime, the criminal enforcement apparatus would be relieved of a huge burden, leaving more time for more serious concerns.

The drive on crime would be left largely to the states and cities, but the President did ask Congress once again for passage of a firearms-control act, which would be one of the cheapest, yet probably one of the most effective crime-fighting tools. "Further delay," he said, "is unconscionable." And along with new guarantees of personal safety, he asked for a guarantee of personal privacy in a bill aimed at outlawing all wiretapping and electronic bugging, both private and public, except when national security is involved. In this request, the President is at odds with some important members of Congress, who favor limited wiretapping and bugging privileges for police forces.

YOUTH

Yet hitting at crime from above, said Johnson, is not enough. "To speak of crime," he said, quoting the Crime Commission, "only in terms of the work of the police, the courts and the correctional apparatus alone is to refuse to face the fact that widespread crime implies a widespread failure by society as a whole." A much broader assault must be directed at the underground causes, and L.B.J. outlined such an assault in his youth message. For crime is often one visible effect of poverty, and economic deprivation in youth sows a huge harvest of blighted promise and lost opportunity.

Johnson's list of the country's neglect of its youth was exhaustive. Some 14.5 million young under 17 live in families too poor to feed and house them adequately. One million will drop out of school this year, most to join the ranks of the unemployed. More than 3.5 million poor children who need medical help do not receive it and nearly two-thirds of all poor children have never visited a dentist. At least ten nations have lower infant mortality rates than the U.S.; if the U.S.'s rate were as low as Sweden's, 40,000 babies that now die each year would be saved.

The President noted nonetheless that the U.S. has sharply stepped up its aid to the young in recent years, from $3.5 billion for all federal programs benefiting young people in 1960 to more than $11.5 billion in the budget now before Congress. Much more, he said, needs to be done. Head Start, the intensive educational program for poor pre-schoolers, should be widened so that it can help more very young children (three-year-olds) and older children, who often lose momentum when they enter regular classrooms. A not unimportant side benefit of Head Start gives medical and dental care to many children who otherwise would never see the inside of a doctor's or dentist's office. "In short," said L.B.J., "for poor children and their parents, Head Start has replaced the conviction of failure with the hope of success." Under Johnson's proposal, $135 million would be added to the $337 million already budgeted in the next fiscal year for the program, probably the most popular that the "War on Poverty" has introduced, and a particular Johnson favorite.

Pilot Program. The President urged that payments to the three million children who now receive social security —because the family breadwinner has died, retired or is disabled—be increased by an average 15%, at a cost of $350 million. Average benefits now, he noted, are only $52 a month. He also proposed a pilot program to ensure that 100,000 children in poverty areas can visit a dentist and 500,000 be examined by a doctor in the next year. To take care of the babies that are yet to be born, Johnson asked for legislation authorizing ten pilot centers to train health workers, look into the problems of child health, and provide care for 180,000 needy children and 10,000 mothers. There are in the U.S. today, he pointed out, only 12,000 trained pediatricians and 13,000 obstetricians, "far too few to provide adequate medical care."

The total cost of all his proposals would be $650 million. But in a number of them, some small and experimental, Johnson was clearly pointing the way to bigger programs he hopes to initiate in post-Viet Nam years, when there will be more room in the budget for the new social-welfare measures that he longs to add to those already under the umbrella of the Great Society. Meanwhile, in both its youth and its crime programs, the Johnson Administration aims to redeem the worst and to better the best.

REPORT of Discussion Groups

"BEHOLD THE TURTLE, HE MAKES PROGRESS ONLY WHEN HE STICKS HIS NECK OUT."

It was interesting to find this on Dorothy Tilly's program. I have known two other women who dared to use the Turtle: Mrs. C. N. Richardson from Florida usually wears a Turtle pin on her dress and can tell some tall tales about turtles. Margaret Applegarth, used to spend some time in Georgia, which she did right after finishing her book "Moment by Moment" and you may remember in this book she has a chapter headed "A TENDER TURTLE IS A TENDER TURTLE". She quotes St. Augustine when he said: "They that sit at rest while others take pains are tender turtles, and buy their quiet with disgrace." After reading the five reports and talking with the reporters I am sure that we are not "Tender Turtles." The question of the day was: How many have visited the jails? Not as many as might have been expected but more jails will be visited. Mrs. Donohoo told of a plan that the women of the Christian Church had to visit the jails the first of October. This is a set time with something definite for the women to look forward too. She hoped that all women would join in this effort so that it might become a Church Women project -- think what it could mean for an army of women to visit the jails at the same time!

WHAT POSITIVE THINGS CAN WE DO?:

Work together with groups of similar interest in writing letters to the editor and public officials. Arousing interest by visiting "Child Centered Agencies." (Florida Church Women United worked with all groups to ban the sale of alcohol on beaches during the influx of Easter students.) Visit children's Court with personal followup of the offender. Serve on the Jury. Look into the Jury. Get a list of the Jury. Make a court survey. See the records--although it will not be easy in many cases. Work hard for Legal Service Clinics. Each person must go home with a real concern to take definite action. Begin with May Fellowship Day--when we are thinking of "Community Concerns and How all can Share."

(Do not obey because it is the Law--But obey because it is Right. Remember, Mr. Durr Said: "This is the Law--can we say--This is right.")

The Church is very respectable--some want to keep it so. Will we be the "Tender Turtle" and let it remain just a respectable church? Nightclubs, ball games, etc. are integrated -- Look at your own church--see the respectability.

Proper desegregation comes from working together--not just talking together.

Flash radio and tv comments are needed--these will do a great deal for the prisons and courts--and to change ATTITUDES--ATTITUDES are important and often need CHANGING.

INFORMATION--coming from the leaders here--needs to come back to Mrs. Tilly.

INFORMATION--about the conditions in your local communities. NOTHING IS WORTH MUCH UNTIL IT IS LOCAL.

"BEHOLD THE TURTLE, HE MAKES PROGRESS ONLY WHEN HE STICKS HIS NECK OUT"

We need to go back into our communities--committed to the task of doing something about the evils all around us. Let us remember St. Augustine:

"THEY THAT SIT AT REST WHILE OTHERS TAKE PAINS ARE TENDER TURTLES, AND BUY THEIR QUIET WITH DISGRACE."

The recommendations from one of the groups seem to give us the tool with which we need to work. (See Recommendations)

OPPORTUNITIES FOR SERVICE
IN THE PROCESS OF CRIMINAL JUSTICE

Several weeks ago, the Project on Crime & Corrections of the Southern Regional Council proposed to enlist the cooperation of the Fellowship of the Concerned - United Churchwomen - to prepare a booklet based on a survey of arrest and detention procedures in the Southern Region as they bear on misdemeanant offenders.

After a preview of the national survey of the President's Commission on Law Enforcement and the Administration of Justice was reviewed, more attention was focused on the very poor provisions for the administration of criminal justice (law enforcement, probation and parole, and corrections) in the South. (Some of the data abstracted from the survey, and some of the more than 200 recommendations, are attached).

We realized that we were asking the Fellowship to venture out into unknown territory because few persons, lay or professional, are able to acquaint themselves fully with the arrest, judicial and correctional processes. Therefore, we secured the services of a member of the California Bar, Mr. Ronald Sievers, who is a VISTA Volunteer, to organize a pilot experience so that you would have some understanding of the problems that you will encounter in the study process.

After two meetings with some of the members of local religious organizations, the following women either visited local institutions or gathered as much data as possible from jail and court records. Some of these participants will apprise you of their experiences.

Mrs. John Golden
Mrs. Byron Kirkland
Mrs. Jack Patterson
Mrs. James Leak
Mrs. Marshall Solomon
Mrs. Herbert Slotin
Mrs. Jane Scherago
Mrs. Philip Shulhafer

Perhaps the worst problem encountered was the nature and variety of the records and the limited data that are available. Also, most apparent were the attitudes of suspicion that had to be overcome.

We were interested in the types of misdemeanors committed; the age, sex and race of the defendant; geographic distribution; the use of bail, detention or release on own recognizance; sentences, and time between arrest and disposition, (A copy of the schedule that we used in collecting the data is attached).

We ran into a number of problems, and we made mistakes. However, we learned that such a study is possible, with group understanding and conviction to see it through.

PROBLEMS:

1. Often, the Police Department would not cooperate and open records to use despite the fact that in Georgia, by law, these records are open to inspection by the public. Thus, it appears that a group undertaking the survey would have to invest a lot of know-how, pressure and influence in gaining access to "public records."

2. Lack of time of volunteers. The work probably would be done by volunteers. The work can be tedious as it is mainly a job of copying from records. Moreover, because of the poor methods of record-keeping sometimes used, the work can be very time-consuming.

3. Orientation was also a problem. Before the project is initiated in any particular area, the volunteers should be fully orientated to the job. The volunteers should be given a clear definition of the types of crimes they are interested in (this will vary by state) plus a questionnaire should be provided which will correspond to the records available to the volunteers. The volunteers would need professional guidance from a judge, attorney, police official or other person who is familiar with a particular agency of department.

4. It was found that the records kept are often incomplete. However, the effort would be worthwhile if it were only able to expose such situations.

A study similar to this (The Westchester Misdemeanant Survey), was published by the National Council on Crime and Delinquency in 1966. The data were collected by women volunteers.

The Westchester Survey was a first step toward bringing light into the darkness that now obscures most of American crime. Misdemeanor, as a legal term, covers the vast catalogue of criminal violations punishable by a fine or imprisonment in a local jail or other institution as against the more serious violations, felonies, punishable by death or confinement in a state prison. The latter are studied and debated, but very little data are available to show how misdemeanants are dealt with, although they account for at least 9 out of every 10 arrests.

To find out what happened to misdemeanant offenders in Westchester from arrest to final disposition and from this information to make recommendations for improvements in the system was the starting point of the survey. The project relied primarily upon public police and court records. Information gathered was supplemented by interviews with police chiefs, judges and other government officials. It is this pattern that we hope to follow in our own effort.

A survey of misdemeanant procedures in the Southern Region would constitute the foundation upon which many service-relevant programs could be developed. Additionally, it would help to validate the assumptions that are proposed relative to youth detention and treatment and to identify gaps in service and record-keeping procedures.

WORKSHOP ON COURTS

Prepared by Mrs. Wm. Wood, Vice President,
League of Women Voters of the United States

Observers Program

Some selective process should be used in recruiting observers. Personal appearance and demeanor are important. Those willing to participate should --

1) Conduct themselves in a polite, well-mannered way.

2) Be willing to sit through proceedings and refrain from making remarks or engaging in conversation with those nearby while the Court is in session.

3) Act like a fair-minded person.

It is wise for observers to work in teams of two. This makes it possible to check with one another when any report is written.

When observing in the Courts the following should be kept in mind:

1) Trials are open. However, any judge has power to exclude the public and to have part of the hearing in private.

2) Know the procedures in the Court to be visited. Attorneys can be helpful in briefings on this.

3) Know the Court schedule -- what cases are coming up, the time the Court opens, etc.

4) Many courtrooms have limited space. Get there in time to get a seat near the front so you can hear. Do not expect special favors in having a seat saved. If offered, do not accept a Judge's invitation to sit on the bench.

5) Areas of interest:
   a. Judge's demeanor toward the person before the Court
   b. Bail
   c. Legal Counsel
   d. Jury Selection
   e. Sentencing, fines, etc.

6) Observe several times with the same judge presiding.

7) Observe procedures under more than one judge.

Mr. Bruce Herrin, Assistant Director
Emory University-Vocational Rehabilitation Alcohol Project

Skid Row has long been recognized as the bilge of our communities. The derelict inebriates who reside there represent perhaps the lowest form of humanity--they have been virtually ignored, not only by the average citizen, but by the very public officials who are charged by statute with caring for them.

Early last year two test cases were tried in two U. S. Court of Appeals. The first was the DeWitt Easter case in the District of Columbia, and the second was the Joe Drive case in North Carolina. Favorable decisions were handed down. It was found that alcoholism is an illness and that it would constitute cruel and unusual punishment for a sick person to be convicted and punished for exhibiting a symptom of his illness in public, and it was further established that the essential common law element of criminal intent is lacking when an alcoholic becomes intoxicated.

Emory University-Vocational Alcohol Project

January, 1967

"The Alcohol Project and the Community Council of Atlanta Area Inc. completed their joint preparation of a comprehensive community treatment and rehabilitation program.

"A special unit for twenty-four patients of the Project was established in the Salvation Army Men's Lodge at 339 Luckie St., N.W. The Project staff give special treatment services for these patients and the unit will be expanded to care for up to 200 patients.

"Dr. Charles Conner, the leading authority on group therapy in the Emory University, Department of Psychiatry, is having regular weekly group therapy training sessions with seven clinical chaplains in St. Jude's Halfway House."

At the City Prison Farm a mobile rehabilitation team from the Project conducts a daily screening of each inmate entering the Prison Farm. Each one who volunteers and is selected is being treated and rehabilitated while still in prison. He may be given the drug, Antabuse, a stong deterrent to drinking, as well as other medications. He is assured of arrangements for meeting his physical needs following his release from prison.

It is easy to understand why these agencies are interested.

It will take a community of effort among all public officials and interested private groups to make a revolutionary program of this kind become meaningful.

The Project has received $304,968 from the U. S. Rehabilitation Administration for the first year and $33,885 from Fulton County.

THE PROJECT ON CRIME AND CORRECTIONS OF THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL, MR. JOHN BOONE, DIRECTOR, COOPERATED WITH THE FELLOWSHIP OF THE CONCERNED IN THE PROGRAM PRESENTATION

Mr. Ron Sievers, a VISTA Volunteer, presented and interpreted the results of a local survey on law enforcement and judicial procedures in misdemeanor cases. He pointed to the disproportionate number of Negroes that, the survey indicated, become involved in the processes of criminal justice at this level and suggested that a regional-wide survey might well reveal an even greater racial disparity, both in arrest and sentencing. However, there were some indications that these differences in handling were more a matter of class prejudice than social discrimination. In other words, the poor cannot afford to pay fines, and a higher percentage of Negroes than whites are poor. The project suggested to the Fellowship that a survey of this type all over the South would be a valuable contribution both to public education and to the encouragement of official interest in reform.

The two films, "The Scar Beneath" and"The Odds Against," shown together, would seem to be an excellent instrument for public education on the problems and prospects in the areas of prison reform and criminal rehabilitation.

The women were advised to familiarize their members with the results of the National Survey on Law Enforcement and the Administration of Justice. This may be secured from the Government Printing Office, Washington, D. C. 20402. Price $2.25.

Some local groups also seem determined to do something about procedures in relation to children in trouble.

Project staff members participated as resource persons in the discussion groups.

FROM MRS. CLIFFORD DURR, THE REPORTER

The two movies, "The Odds Against" and "The Scar Beneath" were extremely moving, one about a young boy who had no help and became a hardened criminal and whose life was ruined and another who through help, parole officers who were sympathetic and kind saved his life and he became a good member of society. The picture of prison life, the feeling of confinement, the horror of boredom, the long stretch of time that prisoners feel were both grippingly and beautifully presented. Mr. Boone spoke after the pictures and told something of his experiences working with prisoners. These two pictures were the most compelling and gripping and saddening aspects of the meeting.

Mrs. Betty Cantor, Community Consulatant, Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith served as moderator of the Panel Discussion -

"PROCEDURES OF CRIMINAL JUSTICE IN THE SOUTHERN REGION: CORRECTION OR DEFECTION"

In introducing the panelists, Mrs. Cantor said she was dispensing with the usual amenities. A sense of urgency pervaded the meeting and the subject at hand required days not hours for exhaustive study that could lead to action.

In summary: Mr. Clifford Durr described the environing atmosphere of lackluster content, the moral vacuum that undergirds Southern justice...

Mrs. Ruby Hurley gave us an overview of Southern justice - or rather lack of justice wh which characterizes our Southern institutions...

Mr. Michael Horowitz asked - "Are our ideals about law really workable?" Our churches perpetuate the status quo and made the comfortable more comfortable...

Mrs. Henry J. Toombs has been the prophet of what can be done... "Never," she says, "underestimate what woman - what you can do."

Mr. Hershal Sausier and Mr. Stewart Werner described what the ideal penal institution can be and have outlined plans for better cooperation between the judiciary and the executive arm of government...

Each of us is aware that she is the uncomfortable one in a comfortable church, the uncomfortable one in a society that fails to love justice. In our workshops we will explore how to undermine comfort based on the status quo. We must search for the remedy to injustice in our local communities, we must reach outside of our own community until justice is a reality throughout the land. We must of a necessity right our wrongs by committing ourselves to specific programs of action.

FROM PANEL MEMBER, MR. CLIFFORD J. DURR, ATTORNEY, Montgomery, Alabama

In general I think our criminal procedures are basically good, but the remark made by St. Paul 19 centuries ago is most applicable today:

"The Law is good if a man use it lawfully."

All too often today we see the techniques and the apparatus of the Law used as instruments of lawlessness.

I do not go along with the idea that morality cannot be legislated. On the contrary, it seems to me that the Law is an embodiment of the morality growing out of the experience of people through the generations and even centuries. Murder is immoral, it is also illegal. The Law has not stopped murder but it has certainly deterred it. However, Law cannot hold up indefinitely if its only basis is rigid enforcement. It will ultimately collapse unless it has an undergirding of accepted morality.

The 13th, 14th, and 15th Amendments to the United States Constitution have been a basic part of the "Supreme Law of the Land" for a century. If we should lay the Civil Rights acts of 1964 and 1965 beside the Civil Rights Act of 1875, we will see that legislatively, at least, we have made little headway in protecting the rights of all citizens against injustice and inequality of treatment. Had the 13th, 14th and 15th Amendments been enforced and lived up to, there would have been no Civil Rights Acts of 1964 and 1965 for there would have been no need for them. Given the full protection of the guarantees of due process of law and the equal protection of the laws, set out in the 14th Amendment, and the equality in voting rights set out in the 15th Amendment, Negroes could by now have gined for themselves most, if not all, of the rights now so carefully spelled out in the current Civil Rights legislation.

There is a human tendency, when faced with a problem, to say "Let's pass a law" and once the law is passed to say "Now that is taken care of," and relax. This is exactly what happened following the Civil War. In the spirit of moral fervor immediately following that war good legislation was put on the books. Then the moral fervor died down and people went about their normal business of making a living, raising families, and looking after themselves. As a result of the Tilden-Hayes compromise Reconstruction was brought to an end and the newly freed men, from economic necessity, soon found themselves back in a state of economic bondage not too different from the chattel slavery from which they had been emancipated. Then came the "Black Codes' and then the disenfranchising provisions written into the State Constitutions with little or no protest, notwithstanding the oaths of office taken by all governmental officials, state and federal to support and defend the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. Justice Holmes, in his dissenting opinion, in the shocking Frank case which originated right here in Georgia, in the early part of this century, made the observation that "The verdicts of juries are very likely to be impregnated by the environing atmosphere." His observation is equally applicable to the judgements of courts and certainly to the behavior of our law enforcement officials. As important as the law is, it cannot escape the "environing atmosphere" in which it operates.

It is rather interesting to note that the moral leadership of this country for the past quarter of a century has come largely from the United States Supreme Court in its day to day struggles with the issues of individual rights, while little but silence has come from our white Southern colleges and universities and our churches have all too often served only as the glue that holds the status quo together. Through lack of moral leadership a moral vacuum was created and this, I believe, is the source of the violence, bitterness and turmoil which has been tearing the South to pieces during the past decade and a half. After a long period of strife we now have a surprising amount of compliance with the Civil Rights Acts of 1964 and 1965. It is now reasonably safe for a Southern white person to say, "We must observe the Law because all of this turmoil and violence hurts business," or to say, "It impairs the 'image' of the South as a desirable location for industry," but we have not yet reached the point where we can safely say "We must observe the Law not only because it is the law but because it is morally right."

We are still all too timid about facing up to the old fashioned issues of right and wrong. We still have quite a way to go in creating the "environing atmosphere" in which justice can flourish. It is in this field that you members of the Fellowship of the Concerned have in the past and still continue to make your valuable contribution.

FROM THE NOTES OF MRS. CLIFFORD DURR, OUR REPORTER

Mrs. Ruby Hurley, Director of the Southeastern Regional Office of N.A.A.C.P., a member of the panel, spoke out of years of experience, and with some bitterness, about the lack of justice for Negroes, how murder has been condoned time and time again when it only affected Negroes. She also spoke of the great gap in white people's knowledge about Negroes and the stereotypes they used instead.

Mr. Michael Horowitz, Associate Professor, University of Mississippi School of Law, panelist, asked the question, "Can America live up to its own Laws,?" he asked if our own smug notions of our own righteousness can be made to come true. He gave illustration after illustration of how we had not lived up to our professions of equal justice and he especially pointed out the fact that most Negroes, and most poor people, come to know the law at its lowest level--Justice of the Peace. He spoke of the fact that JPs often make their living out of fees instead of making a salary and they they need a large volume of arrests and victims to make a living. (President Johnson's Committee on Law Enforcement and Administration of Justice, suggests that the Justice of Peace--rural counterpart of the lower court--be abolished. Today the JPs operate in 35 states.) He said this was often true of Sheriffs and other officers of the Law and each woman should go home and see if this bad situation was true in her own city or county.

Mrs. Henry J. Toombs told in the most glowing way, full of indignation and outrage, what was done to juvenile delinquents. How the young people who run into trouble with the law are scarred and wounded for life and how each community must make it a part of their concern to see that these young people are not turned into permanent criminals.

Mr. Werner, Staff Consultant, Georgia Committee on Crime and Delinquency, then spoke and plead withe the group there, and with all interested citizens, to look behind the crime to the perpetrator and in judging him to consider the background and the disadvantages. He really plead for mercy for people convicted of crime and especially young people.

By Herschel Saucier, Assistant Dir.
Division for Children and Youth
State Department of Family and Children Services

Largely through the efforts of the women of Georgia the state became disturbed about the some 6,000 children each year being detained in common jails and rallied support for the financing of a statewide juvenile detention system which is well on its way toward completion. The first regional detention center built and operated by the Division for Children and Youth will open in Albany and begin receiving children in May, 1967. The Waycross center will open sometime in June, followed by the Rome and Sandersville Centers in September. The Augusta center, where construction began later, should open sometime in November. The sixth and last regional center should be completed in Gainesville early in the Spring of 1968.

These regional centers will receive delinquent juveniles who need secure custody pending court disposition from counties and towns within a fifty mile radius of the center. In addition to providing a more appropriate facility to hold juvenile offenders that might otherwise be held in jail, the regional centers will provide short-time diagnostic and treatment services for these children in trouble, which in some instances will enable the child to return to his own home with probation or social services being provided. Without such detention facilities some of these same juveniles would be committed to the state institutions.

The last phase toward developing a statewide juvenile detention system was financed by the 1967 General Assembly, with a $500,000 appropriation to help finance the juvenile detention services by seven urban counties who have already built county detention facilities. To receive state financing the county detention facilities must agree to make a limited amount of their space available to provide detention care to juveniles from surrounding counties at no cost to the county. With the inclusion of the county detention facilities as a part of the statewide system through making some their space available to surrounding counties, any child needing detention care within the State of Georgia will be within approximately fifty miles of a facility and program especially designed for the care of juvenile offenders.

WORSHIP SERVICES

Without any announcement the workshop began when the wonderful, beautiful voice of Mrs. Martin Luther King, Jr. sang her solo, "How Great Thou Art."

She also gave the challenge in song --

The voice of God is calling
It summons unto men; as once He spoke in Zion,
So now He speaks again.
Whom shall I send to succor my people in their need?
Whom shall I send to loosen the bonds of lust and greed?

Mrs. W. H. Clark with her strong sweet voice led the group in its answer.

We heed, O Lord, Thy summons, and answer here are we!
Send us upon Thine errand, let us Thy servants be.
Our strength is dust and ashes, our years a passing hour;
But Thou canst use our weakness to magnify Thy power.

Thus, we committed ourselves -- "A Charge To Keep We Have" -- in song.

On Thursday morning, Dr. Evelyn Green, Executive Secretary, Board of Woman's Work, Presbyterian Church in the U. S., led the worship, bringing the oracles of Amost to apply to our present day problems.

From the notes of Mrs. Durr, our reporter:

"She (Miss Green) talked on the need of churchmen to speak up and stand up. She begged us not to trample on the 'weak' and that we should not 'ignore the poor man's claim.'" We should 'set justice on her feet again' and temper justice with mercy."

Those of us who heard the worship service of Mrs. H. M. Russell, President of the Woman's Society of Christian Service, Southeastern Jurisdiction, The Methodist Church, will never forget her quotation from Bishop Welch, the 102 year old Bishop of The Methodist Church, when he was asked "what is the greatest Christian virtue?" His answer "Compassion! I don't mean pity! Pity looks down; compassion looks across - person to person. Pity is as cold as sea water. Compassion is as warm as fresh milk."

Again, from the notes of Mrs. Durr

"The workshop ended with a short talk by Coretta King who had used her lovely voice time and time again to sing for us. This time she recited Langston Hugh's lovely poem, My Life Ain't Been No Crystal Stair.

"She told of the terrors whe had gone through, her home bombed, her husband stabbed. She told of the sleepless nights, the fears for her children and how finally she had come to realize that in her husband's fight for justice she had finally come to accept the fact that if this fight brought death to her or to her family, she would have to accept it, that there was no turning back. She spoke simply and with dignity and compassion but she spoke with firmness and total commitment, when once she had set her hand to the orr there was no turning back, and this was true for all of us.

"She also spoke of the moral support such groups as the Fellowship of the Concerned had been to her and of the personal support Mrs. Tilly had given to her.

"And it was on this note of personal commitment, personal determination to see that justice was done, that the meeting adjourned.

JUSTICE IN GRENADA MISSISSIPPI

EQUAL PROTECTION UNDER THE LAW

TRAGEDY IN GRENADA

A Study in the Breakdown of Law Enforcement

Many scenes of tragedy in Southern communities faced with Negro protest have raised up single villains - "Bull" Connor, Jim Clark, Laurie Pritchett. Most have eventually faced up to the necessity for accommodation of Negro rights. Not so, Grenada, Mississippi.

Grenada, in the Summer of 1966, was not prepared to face the hard reality of unhappy local Negroes. Official Grenada responded to Negro demands with the familiar, "no, never." Law enforcement officers, faced with what they considered the "odious" job of protecting peaceful Negro demonstrators, simply abdicated their legal responsibilities; in confrontations between Negro protestors and white mobs, these officials resembled nothing so much as "bought" referees.

Each time such a confrontation occurred, there was a breakdown in law enforcement - a vacuum of power. Sometimes, other law enforcement agencies filled the vacuum. More often, it was filled by white mobs.

In the Spring of 1966, Grenada, a sleepy, North Central Mississippi town of some 8,000 inhabitants -- whites outnumbering Negroes by about 250 -- had no civil rights organization and had experienced not even the faintest manifestations of organized Negro unrest. Civil Rights Acts, Freedom Rides, sit-ins, protest, had not come to Grenada. The town remained segregated.

"Two sets of restrooms (numbered One and Two) had been built into the County Courthouse. Negroes had never been permitted library privileges. The police force, the city's swimming pool and the town's twelve white churches were all segregated. Even the U. S. Post Office in Grenada was entirely white-staffed." (1) Only 135 of the County's 4,300 eligible Negroes were registered to vote in June, 1962. Four years later, on June 14, 1966, only 700 Negroes were registered. (2)

June 14, 1966 is the day that divides Grenada's history into "before" and "after." For on that hot, sunny Tuesday, the Meredith March came to town. About 175 marchers arrived at the city line; but as the group passed through the town it picked up considerable local support, until one Highway Patrolman, ordered to be on good behavior by an image-conscious

The town had made some preparations for the arrival of the marchers. One Grenada official recalled: "We had several meetings among ourselves before the marchers came. We wanted to avoid trouble."(2)

City Manager John McEachin told a reporter who preceded the march: "All we want is to get these people through town and out of here. Good niggers don't want anything to do with this march. And there are more good niggers (here) than sorry niggers."(3)

The streets along which the march proceeded were relatively empty. There were no shouted obscenities, no cat-calls, no missile throwing. The population had been prepared for the march and warned to remain calm.

Policeman Jack Shipp told a couple of would-be troublemakers: "If you want to boo, boo out in the woods."(4)

City Attorney Bradford Dye later described how word was spread to avoid incidents, with statements to this effect: "Roll with the punch." "The County itself is granting concessions to Negroes all over the place." "Let them demonstrate for a day and then the parade will be over - and things will return to normal."(5)

And so, the marchers swarmed into courthouse square, which was ringed by state and county lawmen. The surrounding crowds of whites remained silent, though sullen. Even when SCLC official, Robert Green, climbed up on the town statue of Jeff Davis, slapped the face of the Confederate hero, and referred to him as "this joker . . ." The whites made no public outcry, although that "desecration of our monument" became the Summer rallying cry of bitter, resentful whites.(6)

This demonstration of civic self-discipline didn't mean that the townspeople were reconciled.

From a chair in the barber shop that day, one customer intoned: "They can pass all the laws they want, but niggers'll still have black faces. Where's this gonna end? I'll tell you. It's gonna end when we mow'em down, mow'em down."(7)

A merchant said: "I saw two of my niggers in there, an' they won't have no jobs tomorrow . . . they get in that march an' that's it. They'll be on relief tomorrow." (8)

A Sheriff's Deputy remarked the next day: "After they leave, everything will be the same again. The nigger in this town depends on the white man for his living." (1)

However, in the face of Negro demands and in the presence of national television and newspaper correspondents, city officials yielded gracefully. Prosecutor Dye met with Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. and other Negro leaders. He agreed to desegregate the Courthouse washrooms. Six Negro teachers were added to the complement of voting registrars. Registration hours were extended from 5:00 pm to 9:00 pm.(2)

As the conference continued, a night march was organized from a nearby church to the town square. "When Dr. King emerged smiling to report that the town had 'completely capitulated' to Negro demands, the crowd went home."(3) Again, the white community remained silent.

"As the group of 300 marchers filed past the darkened homes of the white section, the only sound that rose through the dark-boughed shade trees was the steady scuffle of marching feet. The restraint on the part of the whites was overwhelming. Not one heckler emerged. Not one epithet was hurled. Not one "Nigger" shouted. But the silence was a dark, brooding, seething silence . . ."(4)

But for all of the underlying resentment, the public behavior of local law enforcement officers could scarcely be criticized. They were displaying, for all to see, the image of a "New Mississippi."

"At 8:00 am Wednesday, the Courthouse opened as promised and by the time the march left Grenada Thursday afternoon, some one thousand Negroes had been added to the voting rolls. At a press conference in front of March headquarters, Dr. King declared: 'We will not allow window dressing compliance that will get us out of town. We can't guarantee there won't be some suffering and sacrifice. I've never worked anywhere where Negores haven't lost jobs. But I'm convinced Mississippi will never be the same."(5)

Prophetic words indeed when applied to Grenada.

Before the March was a day down the road, Grenada's true colors - the stars and bars - again fluttered from the War Memorial. Two days later, the Negro registrars disappeared - and the color line reappeared wherever Grenadans gathered.(6) And so, amid mounting tensions, the Movement returned to Grenada full force, "demanding impossibly much of a town willing to yield impossibly little."(1) Hosea Williams of SCLC unfurled a 51 point bill of demands and pledged to make Grenada nothing less than an "open city," integrated everywhere from the Little League to the Old Folks' Home.(2)

Since the efforts of law enforcement officers were based on the assumption that their difficulties would disappear with the passing of the march, the news that SCLC was planning to conduct an ongoing campaign came as a severe blow. It was at this point that the quality of law enforcement began to deteriorate rapidly - not just from ill-will, but from a real inability to grasp the fundamental issues involved.

Said Sheriff Suggs Ingram: "They had it so easy during the March they thought they could come back and take over. We are not going to put up with what we have in the past, even if it takes force."(3)

In response to the initial demands of SCLC organizers, the city and county officials issued a joint manifesto, stating baldly: "There will be no concessions of any type or degree made to anyone whatsoever."(4)

Grenada wasn't budging. And the second act of the tragedy began.

- - - - - - - - - - -

A detailing of the Summer's events might well begin with the Independence Day celebration held on the night of July 3 in an abandoned barn outside of town. In attendance, among a crowd of 150, were 8 SCLC staffers, 5 Negro and 3 white, who had been left behind by Dr. King after the March departed. About 10:00 pm, Sheriff Ingram and a deputy appeared. The 3 SCLC whites were arrested and the next day, most of the Negro staffers were rounded up on various charges of being tramps and disturbing the peace.(5)

On July 7, 41 Negroes and 2 whites planned a march on the jail to protest the earlier arrests. (According to some reports, they had just been denied entry to a theater.)(6) They were refused a march permit and then staged a sitdown strike. All 43 were arrested.(7)

Open police brutality on a large scale first occurred on July 10. A group of about 50 Negroes arrived at the Jail for the stated purpose of visiting those already arrested.(8) They were informed that the couldn't visit and were ordered to disperse. When they failed to do so immediately, they were told that they were under arrest. The group crossed the street and mingled with a crowd of about 150 Negroes who had been watching the demonstration. At this point, approximately 25 State Highway Patrolmen, who had been kept out of sight around the corner, charged the crowd swinging billies and gun butts. The bystanders were still being beaten by the Highway Patrolmen when County policemen were ordered to disperse a nearby crowd of noisy whites. No whites were struck.(1)

From this point on, official hatred and violence were out in the open. There was no longer even a pretense of equal protection under the laws.

The situation grew increasingly tense. White fears and hatreds were further aroused by SCLC's call for a boycott or "black-out" of white-owned downtown stores and by continued concerted attempts to test desegregation in public facilities.(2)

On Wednesday, July 13, the second day of boycott picketing, 35 picketers were arrested after City Attorney Dye ordered police to "disperse these people any way you can."(3)

The next day, about 200 marchers approached the town square, planning to hold a demonstration in front of the War Memorial. But the Confederate statue was guarded by 8 Negroes - identifed by Constable Grady Carroll as prisoners serving life sentences.(4) They were ordered to shove back anyone who came near the statue. The marchers retreated rather than place the Negro prisoners in the position of having to attack other Negroes. Sheriff Suggs Ingram seemed amused by the confrontation of black vs. black.(5)

The struggle grew in intensity. As the boycott became increasingly effective, more picketers were arrested.(6) The Federal Court ordered County officials to provide adequate protection for the demonstrators.(7) The Justice Department sent in Federal Voting Registrars.(8) There were continuous marches and counter-marches, and only the presence of over 100 state Highway Patrolmen prevented massive violence.(9) Three Negroes leaving a theater were brutally beaten because one of them was so light-skinned he appeared to be white.(10) Mass arrests took place at a Negro dance in Tie Plant, a nearby community.(11)

The situation had become so serious, and complete loss of control by responsible community leaders so imminent, that "County officials requested a conference with Movement leaders. They asked for a temporary halt to demonstrations. Leon Hall, a 19 year old SCLC Project Leader, answered with a list of 17 urgent demands, including the release of the 57 Tie Plant party-goers. Declared one outraged white official: "That settles it. We just wanted you to know that we can't protect you. You are on your own."(1)

Here was an official abdication of responsibility for law enforcement by the power structure. The lid was off. The pot was ready to boil over. And it did.

On August 8, the Police and Highway Patrolmen were issued tear gas and were quick to use it. That evening,"some 75 - 85 City, County and State officers"(2) broke up a Negro voter registration rally by firing about 20 cannisters of tear gas(3) into a crowd of 200 people. City Attorney Bradford Dye explained that the crowd had been ordered to clear the street, "which they did, partially. Then they were asked to open it more. They didn't. Tear gas was used to disperse them."(4) Officers then chased bystanders ten blocks into the heart of the Negro district, clubbing some down on their own front lawns.(5)

The next night, violence became general. As demonstrators neared the town square for a planned rally, Sheriff Suggs Ingram told a reporter: "Now you're going to see a show."(6)

A mob of 250 whites waited by the Confederate monument in the square. As the demonstrators approached, the mob "threw bottles, bricks, steel pipes and firecrackers at the 300 Negroes. The attack sent demonstrators fleeing from the town square with whites in pursuit. A one point, over 100 state and local officers stepped in between the whites and the demonstrators, turned their backs to the white crowd, and rested their guns on their hips with the gun barrels pointed over the heads of the Negroes. Whites continued hurling missiles over the heads of the officers." (7)

"Many of the officers, including Sheriff Ingram, laughed as the missiles struck the Negroes, then issued angry warnings after 2 Negroes hurled missiles back at the whites."(8)

One of the demonstrators was taken to the hospital and at least a dozen others were injured.(9)

When asked the next day why he hadn't stopped the mob, Ingram responded: "Police couldn't have stopped it without using violence." He told how, a few minutes before the attack, he had asked several members of the mob to back away from the demonstrators. "I asked'em to do me a favor. Told'em I'd 'preciate it."(10)

The events of that night made it clear that there was no effective law enforcement in Grenada. In response to the obvious power vacuum, Governor Johnson sent in his riot control expert, Giles Crisler.(1)

On Wednesday evening, August 10, another demonstration was held, this time with rather different results. The evening began with a mob of some 300 whites firing chiselled bolts from sling shots and throwing cherry bombs and other firecrackers at 40 demonstrators, mostly teenagers, who had gathered in the square. Then came the difference. Crisler, backed by 250 officers, mostly State Troopers and Game and Fish Commission Officers, cleared the mob from the square at gunpoint, after they refused to heed warnings about throwing rocks.(2)

Shouts of "nigger lovers" and "traitors" came from the mob as troopers pressed them down streets leading from the square. "I never thought I'd live to see the day,"(3) shouted one man.

Sheriff Ingram remained in the background as State officials took over.

Once it had been demonstrated that there was a force in Grenada bigger than the mob, a certain degree of peace, or at least truce, settled over the town. And that should have been the end of Grenada's chapter in the annals of violent resistance to civil rights activities, but it was not. There was yet a third act.

- - - - - - - - - - - - -

On August 26, Federal Judge Claude Clayton, on petition of the Justice Department, ordered Grenada's schools desegregated.(4) School registration had been set for September 2, but because of the complexities involved in the processing of "freedom of choice" forms, it was postponed until September 12.(5)

During the more than three weeks which elapsed between the issuance of the court order and the opening of school, local law enforcement officials, despite their Summer experiences, made no plans for special precautions or protection for the Negro students.(6) According to testimony later given before Judge Clayton, they assumed that the State Highway Patrol would be available for special help, although State law forbids the Highway Patrol to operate in municipalities without the express request of local officials or a formal order from the Governor.(7)

As a result, when School Desegregation Day came, the only law enforcement agencies available to maintain order were the Sheriff and his deputies and the City Police Department, both of which agencies had long since demonstrated their unwillingness and inability to keep order in the community.(1)

Thus, the tragic events of September 12-13 were, in a way, inevitable.

300 of the 1,387 eligible Negro children registered for admission to the formerly all-white Lizzie Horne Elementary School and John Rundle High School.(2)

On the evening of September 11, separate columns of Negro and white demonstrators marched around the Courthouse Square, side by side.

About 275 Negroes shouted, "John Rundle, John Rundle High School," in answer to a shout of "Where are we going to school tomorrow?"(3)

While there was no large scale violence that evening, it was obvious that feelings among both communities were running very high. Still, city officials made no special arrangements.

On the first morning of school, small roving bands of whites, armed with axe handles, lead pipes and chains, attacked many of the 150 Negro children who appeared, lashing out at boys and girls alike. The gangs were directed to their victims by walkie-talkies or gun shot signals, from pick-up trucks which cruised the streets near the school complex.(4)

A few items will, perhaps, catch the flavor of the day.

A gang of whites trampled Richard Sigh, 12, in the dust, breaking a leg.(5)

One group of girls, including 14 year old Emerald Cunningham, were on their way to school when they saw a crowd of whites approaching. Most of the girls fled, but Emerald was caught by the mob. One man pointed a gun at her head and pushed her into a front yard. Then the mob began to beat her with fists, pipes and chains. When Emerald tried to leave, the man with the gun said, "Nigger, you move I shoot your brain out." Finally a white man pulled her up and said: "Get away and don't come back."

Why didn't she flee with the rest of the girls? Emerald explained: "I had polio and couldn't run."(6)

One twelve year old boy, attempting to escape, was forced to run a block-long gauntlet of whites who flailed him with chains. He emerged with a bleeding face and torn clothes.(1)

These, of course, are only a few of the incidents. In all, 33 Negroes and three white newsmen were assaulted that day.(2)

Perhaps the most significant fact is that almost all of these attacks and beatings took place within view of local law enforcement officials.(3)

"While Negro youngsters were thrown to the ground, kicked and beaten, Grenada Policemen stood by and grinned.

"These niggers', explained Constable Grady Carroll,'is keeping the law enforcement officers from doing their duty."(4)

NAACP Attorney Henry Aaronson said that he heard white men make threatening remarks when he arrived at the school grounds. Constable Carroll and Police Captain Turner were nearby, so he asked them for protection.

Aaronson testified: "Carroll looked at the toughs and nodded at me. It was a very distinct nod. Immediately on nodding, the group charged me. I ran to Carroll and said, "Grady, Grady, help me.' He said, 'You don't belong here.' Then the group got me. They hit me on the head and I don't know where else. They beat me to the ground. And I was screaming to Grady for help. I saw Grady's shoes the whole time, while Grady and Turner stood there."

When the ordeal was over, Aaronson reported that Carroll asked him: "What the hell are you doing here causing all this trouble." (5)

A Negro woman stated that she opened her car door to let broken glass fall out of her auto after a white crowd attacked, and Carroll, who had been standing by all the time, said: "Don't you get your . . . out of there. If you do, we'll kill you."(6)

Robert Gordon, a reporter for UPI, tried to escape from the mob by running across the school grounds, but was ordered off the premises by a County Policeman. Then the mob caught Gordon again and knocked him to the street. Finally, two policemen came up and rescued him. One of the policemen told the mob: "OK,boys, he's had enough."(7)

Charles Alexander, 17, was struck with a pistol outside the high school. The assailant then pointed the gun at him. When Alexander pointed the man out to a policeman who was patrolling the sidewalk, he was rebuffed. "I'm busy now," said the policeman.(1)

Instances of police indifference to, and apparent approval of, the brutalities of the day would fill many pages. The police attitude is best summed up by Constable Carroll's explanation concerning the attacks on reporters. "Some of the newsmen needed a cleaning. If they tell a lie, they need a whupping . . ." From whom? "From any body who wants to give it to them," Carroll said.(2)

This day's events did not mark the end of the violence. Although Governor Johnson ordered the State Highway Patrol into the area on Monday night, they did not move into the school area on Tuesday morning until asked to do so by local police.(3) By the time they went into action, many car windows had been smashed and at least four more children beaten.(4)

While the presence of the State law enforcement officers put an end to attacks on women and children, it did not have a beneficial effect on the mood of the white community.

Several hundred whites, shouting defiance of state and federal authority, held a furious session Monday night in the City Hall Auditorium to demand that the patrol be withdrawn. "If you get that State Highway Patrol out of here, there won't be a nigger left in Grenada," cried one man.(5)

On Tuesday night, a group of Negro demonstrators were attacked by a white mob in the town square. The large contingent of State officers stepped between the groups only after the white attack had taken place.(6)

This was the last serious incident of violence. Order was finally brought to Grenada by the presence of the State Highway Patrol, 13 FBI arrests,(7) and a Federal Court order to local officials, so sternly worded by Judge Clayton that one official reported: "When the judge got through, you thought you could crawl through the eye of a needle."(8)

None of these events seems to have brought any basic change to Grenada. Sheriff Suggs Ingram still occupies the throne. Constable Grady Carroll, who received a four month sentence for Contempt of Court, will probably soon be back at the old stand, if he is not already there. The City Council has issued yet another statement in favor of "law and order."(1) A white minister reports that racial lines are so tightly drawn that: "If you so much as suggest talking to the colored leadership, you're labelled a 'nigger lover' and a 'race mixer."(2)

These last items serve to illustrate that the law enforcement process can fail again in Grenada. No changes have been made. No lessons have been learned. As late as the last week in October, over 275 young Negro demonstrators and picketers were arrested, some of them sent to the state prison at Parchman, because all of the jails in the area were full to overflowing.(3)

The only small ray of hope for the future came from the children themselves. One the afternoon of that terrible first day of school, many of the Negro children had gathered in the Auditorium waiting for the mob to disperse somewhat. Sheriff Ingram came and told the children that they could leave and would be given a police escort home. He advised them to leave by a rear door but the youngsters replied:

"No Sir, we're going out the front door like white folks."(4)

They did.

DUAL JUSTICE IN THE COURTS-- UNCONCERNED COMMUNITY

Justice is turned back, and righteousness stands afar off;
for truth has fallen in the public squares, and uprightness cannot enter . . .
The Lord saw it, and it displeased Him that there was no justice. Isaiah 59:15-15

"Dual justice takes many forms, some merely disgusting and others so quietly terrifying that they balk the scrutiny of rational men."

The answer — A concerned community
The ultimate responsibility is with the people.

THE FELLOWSHIP OF THE CONCERNED
THE SOUTHERN REGIONAL COUNCIL
5 FORSYTH STREET, N. W.
ATLANTA, GEORGIA

From the discussion groups of the 1965 workshop of the Fellowship of the Concerned, came an urgent request that the Fellowship of the Concerned launch a campaign of women visiting the courts -- showing their interest and concern in what is happening.

What has been done thus far:

1. The Executive Committee of the Southern Regional Council gave the program their hearty approval.

2. The State Councils on Human Relations will be partners with us in this program.

3. A call went out to the presidents of national women's organizations asking them to come to Atlanta for two day's of discussion. The response was most gratifying.

The morning session of the first day was spent listening to a group of lawyers discussing for us the problems we had to meet and answering their questions. The remainder of the time was in the hands of these national women who divided themselves into several committees.

Mrs. Stuart Sinclair, President, United Church Women, National Council of Churches

Miss Dorothy Height, President, National Council of Negro Women

Mrs. Max Goldstein, National Board, National Council of Jewish Women

Mrs. George Gunning, National Board, National Council of Catholic Women

Mrs. A. L. Cram, Jr., Vice President, National Board Y.W.C.A.

Mrs. Michael Shapiro, First Vice President, B'nai B'rith Women

Mrs. George E. Kimball, Vice President, Unitarian Universalist Women's Federation

Mrs. Benjamin Mays, Representing Woman's Missionary Council, Christian Methodist Episcopal Church

Mrs. O. Ivan Cole, President, International Christian Women's Fellowship, Disciples of Christ

Mrs. Rose Anna Nelson, First Vice President, Woman's Home and Foreign Missionary Society, African Methodist Episcopal Zion Church

Miss Evelyn Green, Executive Secretary, Board of Woman's Work, The Presbyterian Church in the U. S.

Mrs. Niles C. Clark, Representing Woman's Society of Christian Service, Board of Missions, The Methodist Church

Mrs. Edward M. Brown, Representing Council of Lay Life and Work, United Church of Christ.

The following is their report:

A. Issued the following statement.

> "We, as members of national women's organizations, believe that the freedom, dignity, and security of the individual are basic to American democracy.
> "Since it is the nature of women to be a civilizing influence we are particularly concerned about the treatment of people in our democracy today.
> "As women citizens of this nation we feel a moral responsibility for the administration of justice in the courts.
> "This requires knowledge, personal commitment, and united action."

B. Directed the Southern Regional Council to prepare material on the discrimination in jury selection and the dual justice in the courts -- one for Negroes, one for whites.

C. Asked that workshops on the courts be held in each of our eleven Southern States -- and that visits to the courts be made beforehand in preparation for the state workshops. (One of the lawyers who spoke to the group said, "If women would visit the courts regularly it would revolutionize the courts.")

(Please study the attached "Observer Guidelines" prepared for us by Mrs. William Wood, First Vice President, League of Women Voters of the United States.)

WORKSHOP ON COURTS

Prepared by Mrs. Wm. Wood, Vice President,
League of Women Voters of the United States

Observers Program

Some selective process should be used in recruiting observers. Personal appearance and demeanor are important. Those willing to participate should --

1) Conduct themselves in a polite, well-mannered way.

2) Be willing to sit through proceedings and refrain from making remarks or engaging in conversation with those nearby while the Court is in session.

3) Act like a fair-minded person.

It is wise for observers to work in teams of two. This makes it possible to check with one another when any report is written.

When observing in the Courts the following should be kept in mind:

1) Trials are open. However, any judge has power to exclude the public and to have part of the hearing in private.

2) Know the procedures in the Court to be visited. Attorneys can be helpful in briefings on this.

3) Know the Court schedule -- what cases are coming up, the time the Court opens, etc.

4) Many Courtrooms have limited space. Get there in time to get a seat near the front so you can hear. Do not expect special favors in having a seat saved. If offered, do not accept a Judge's invitation to sit on the bench.

5) Areas of interest:
   a. Judge's demeanor toward the person before the Court.
   b. Bail.
   c. Legal Counsel.
   d. Jury selection.
   e. Sentencing, fines, etc.

6) Observe several times with the same judge presiding.

7) Observe procedures under more than one judge.

SOUTHERN JUSTICE:

THE PROBLEM

Much has been written on the South's dual system of justice -- one brand for the white man -- yet another for the Negro. Legislation is even now being debated which hopefully will bring about change. But it will take more than new laws to rectify the abuses of generations. The vigilance of dedicated citizens willing to spend time and patience sitting in courtrooms and observing, willing to inquire, to ask the hard questions about long established procedures can be quietly effective. A coalition of women's organizations acting on local levels can fill this need. When lynch law was prevalent in the South, the Association of Southern Women for the Prevention of Lynching was formed and over the years contributed hugely toward eliminating mob rule in the South. The same spirit of that earlier organization is now needed as the South faces up to the new challenge of Jim Crow justice.

Let's look just briefly at the overall situation, for basic to any meaningful action is an understanding of the directions one is trying to move.

The double standard of justice in the South is most obvious in the record on civil rights cases.

From 1960 through mid-1965 at least twenty-six Negroes and white civil rights workers were slain. Only one assailant was sentenced -- to ten years in prison.

Toward the end of 1965, however, the three men accused of murdering Mrs. Viola Liuzzo were convicted of "conspiracy to violate her civil rights" and were sentenced. This was after one of them had been acquitted of the charge of murder. The next day Damon Strange was convicted of manslaughter in a night-rider slaying in Anniston, Alabama.

If the double standard of justice were limited to civil rights cases, one might find reason for optimism -- however slight -- in these recent convictions. But the problem goes much deeper.

The double standard of justice looms constantly over the daily life of every Negro in the South. In ordinary contacts with police, in traffic courts, in civil procedures, and in criminal cases the dual standard is a standing abuse to all Negroes.

Capital Cases

Despite the fact that more than half of all convicted rapists are white, 87 per cent of all the persons executed for rape between 1930 and 1963 were Negroes convicted and sentenced by southern courts.

Between 1930 and 1961, 34 people were executed for the capital offense of night-time burglary. Twenty-nine of them were Negroes and all but one were put to death in a southern or border state.

Studies have shown that a Negro murderer is likely to get the maximum penalty if his victim is a white person, while southern courts are inclined to be lenient if the victim is another Negro. A white person is more likely to receive the maximum penalty for killing another white person than for killing a Negro.

Minor Offenses

Negroes suffer from what has been described as "cash register justice." Suppose a judge gives two men, one a Negro and one white, the same sentence for drunk driving: $150 fine or twelve months in jail. If the Negro is a laborer at $1.25 per hour (when he can find work) and the white man earns $250 a week, the sentence is not really the same because a fine of three days' pay for the white man is an impossible sum for the Negro.

To be sure, "cash register justice" victimizes the poor of both races, but the Negro, being poorest, suffers most frequently. In a 12-month period ending in June of 1962, 2,341 persons served terms in Georgia's state prison system for their inability to pay small fines. Seventy-five per cent of these were Negroes.

The same result is obtained in the setting of bail: the impoverished sometimes must await trial in jail because they cannot raise the amount which allows the well-off offender to be free.

Experts in criminal correction have long argued that an effort should be made to determine the offender's ability to pay before imposing the penalty. So far the argument has had little effect in the South.

Legal Counsel

An indigent Negro accused of a major crime often must accept a court-appointed white attorney who has little enthusiasm for his case. But even if they have money, Negroes may find it difficult to get an attorney, and in the Deep South, white attorneys are reluctant to accept controversial cases. To do so can cost an attorney his practice and may even result in ostracism by his community. There have been several examples of this in recent years.

Jury Selection

A southern Negro charged with a crime has little chance of being tried by "a jury of his peers." Actually, methods of jury selection work against poor whites as much as against Negroes, and they are unjust in other parts of the United States as in the South. But the record of southern juries in racial cases is a striking and depressing result of the pre-judicial systems of jury selection which prevail.

All-White Justice

Exclusion from juries is not the only way in which Negroes are denied participation in the administration of justice. Only recently have southern cities and states hired a token number of Negro police officers; often their duties are almost entirely confined to Negro neighborhoods.

Very few officers of the southern courts are Negroes. This is as true of southern federal courts as of state and municipal courts. A recent report of the Southern Regional Council included the following statistics:

RACIAL DISTRIBUTION OF OFFICERS AND PERSONNEL IN SOUTHERN FEDERAL COURTS

	TOTAL	WHITE	NEGRO
Circuit Court Judges	12*	12	0
District Court Judges	65	65	0
Referees in Bankruptcy	55	55	0
U. S. Commissioners	253	253	0
U. S. Clerks	28	28	0
Deputy U.S. Clerks	321	321	0
U. S. Attorneys	29	29	0
Assistant U.S. Attorneys	158	153	5
Jury Commissioners	109	109	0
U. S. Marshals	29	29	0
Deputy U. S. Marshals	165	156	9
Secretarial and Clerical	364	**	**

*This is the number of judges of southern residence now serving on the Fourth, Fifth, Sixth, and Eighth Circuits. The numbers respectively are three, seven, one, and one.

Exact number of Negroes not ascertainable. The number from observation is quite small.

SOUTHERN JUSTICE

Jury Selection

In a suit attacking the jury system of Jefferson County, Alabama, Charles Morgan, attorney-at-law, noted that selection techniques "differ from state to state and within states from court to court. The federal system differs from state systems. Qualifications differ from state to state. Federal qualifications differ from state qualifications." Some jury commissioners, Morgan pointed out, compile jury lists from telephone books; others use city directories, voter registration lists, the rolls of the Junior Chamber of Commerce, church membership lists, lists of school teachers, automobile owners, American Legion members, property tax payers. The result of such methods is that no real balance of the population is achieved. Jury lists become heavily laden with middle and upper class citizens. The poor, both Negro and white, are automatically excluded and since residential segregation is a fact of life in the South, jury commissioners can even effectively screen out middle class Negroes by close scrunity of their addresses.

The first step in a program of reform should be for local groups to determine how jury panels are chosen in their particular localities. But it isn't enough simply to pressure for change. An alternative should be presented. How can a true cross-section of the population be achieved, as called for in the proposed Civil Rights Act of 1966? Mr. Morgan advances a surer means than is currently in practice. This is the so-called Kraft method and is, in effect, the methods of opinion research analysts. (John F. Kraft, from whom the name is taken, is president of an opinion and market research firm. He has worked for many years both in the Elmo Roper firm and in the Lou Harris firm.) To select jury panels under this system would be a simple matter of choosing at random a specified number of residential blocks in a given city and from every fifth household making a random selection of citizens eligible to serve on juries -- men and women over 21, upper income and lower income people, white and Negroes. The whole focus of the approach, Mr. Kraft explains, "would be to remove human discretion from scientific sampling, to remove the possibility of bias in selecting the sample."

SOUTHERN JUSTICE

Courtroom Practice -- What Can Be Done

The county courthouse in the South is the last remaining stronghold of publicly sanctioned segregation. Not even the federal government has yet penetrated it. Beyond calling for elimination of discriminatory jury selection methods in state courts, the proposed Civil Rights Bill will not greatly affect accepted practices and procedures at the county courthouse. It will, apparently, be only through local citizen action that change can be brought about. This could be a long and frustrating process. The South has demonstrated its unwillingness to abandon segregation voluntarily and those who take upon themselves the task of reform should be prepared to face a good deal of resistance -- as well as local hostility directed against them. Yet the effort must be made. And it may well be that church women can here be more effective than the more direct action groups. Courts are peculiarly sensitive to any act that might remotely be interpreted as contemptuous. The authority of county judges in contempt cases is very broad. However, local women's organizations, sitting quietly in a courtroom, observing what goes on and later working for reform through community action could hardly be felonious.

Points that observers should be alert for are, of course, evidences of segregation. Such evidence probably won't be hard to find. Negroes may, as a matter of course, automatically sit on the back row or in the gallery or they may be directed to sit in segregated seats by the court. Water fountains in some county courthouses may still be segregated as may restrooms.

Negroes in southern courts traditionally have been denied normal courtesy titles. Few southern judges or lawyers address Negro witnesses by any other than first names. Listings of witnesses in records of trial sometimes do not include "Mr." or "Mrs." titles for Negroes. Negro attorneys are frequently addressed as "Colonel," "Captain," "Preacher," by the court to avoid the use of "Mister."

Another project of the group could be analysis of cases where a Negro and a white man are accused of comparable crimes. The group could sit in on the entire proceedings first of one and then the other. Notes could be kept on how both proceedings were handled, with special attention to the court's attitude toward the defendant, the comparative energies of white defense attorneys on their client's behalf, interrogation of Negro and white witnesses -- and jury panel selection. If both defendants were convicted, a comparison could also be made of the sentences given; follow-through could be made of jail and prison conditions.

SOUTHERN JUSTICE

The Various Courts

Normally one thinks of only two types of courts -- state and federal. While this is, of course, basically the case, state courts are broken down into many categories.

Descriptive names vary from state to state but basically a state court system works this way. Superior courts (or district courts, circuit courts -- depending on the title used within the states) normally will have original and concurrent jurisdiction in all civil and criminal causes -- with the exception of administration of estates which would be under the jurisdiction of probate or ordinary courts. In some states superior courts also have jurisdiction in equity cases (those where injunctive relief is sought) while other states have separate equity (or chancery) courts. Divorce cases and cases involving titles to real estate will also normally fall under the jurisdiction of superior courts -- though some states again have separate court divisions for handling such cases.

Subordinate to the superior courts are the various municipal and county courts which have been created to take the heavy burden of minor civil and criminal cases from the higher court. Some of these include: police or recorder's courts used primarily for the disposition of minor offenses -- such as traffic violations -- and the binding over of greater offenders to higher courts; criminal courts which will handle misdemeanors; county civil courts which will have jurisdiction over civil cases where the sum involved is comparatively small. This sum may vary from state to state, but rarely is over $500.

SOUTHERN JUSTICE

The Rights of Individuals in the Hands of Police

Negro distrust of white policemen is widespread both in rural areas and in the cities; both North and South. Such suspicion is not unjustified. For too long the white policeman has been the secular arm of segregation and racial discrimination and his methods have been no credit to his community or to his profession. Despite efforts of progressive city and county administrations in recent years to eliminate not only police brutality but police violation of individual and human rights, a great deal more effort needs to be made. Citizens groups thus should familiarize themselves with the rights of individuals in the hands of police. The following is a summation of those rights: (Source: Criminal Law and Punishment, P. J. FitzGerald, Oxford University Press, 1962; pp. 175-180.)

1. Search and entry -- no one must submit to being searched unless he is a suspect who has been arrested.
2. Arrest -- police cannot detain a subject for questioning without a warrant;
   Police cannot make an arrest without a warrant unless he reasonably suspects a felony having been committed;
   Arresting officer must bring an accused person (if arrested without a warrant) before a judge as soon as possible. Superior officer in charge must inquire into case and may release the accused on bail if the case is not serious. He must release him if accused does not come before a judge within 24 hours;
   When brought before a judge, the prisoner has the right to demand bail; if refused, he can appeal to higher court. Bail must not be excessive;

The remedy for a person wrongfully detained is to apply for a writ of Habeus Corpus to a judge, requiring accuser and accused to go before a judge where cause of arrest is to be stated. If court is not satisfied that a valid reason exists for detaining the accused, the prisoner is to be instantly released.

A decision of the U. S. Supreme Court handed down June 13, 1966, directly affects the rights of individuals in the hands of police. The ruling holds:

1) that an individual must be warned prior to questioning that he has the right to remain silent;
2) that he must be warned that any statement he makes may be used against him in court;
3) that officials must inform him of his right to have legal counsel present at the time he is questioned;
4) that he must be told by authorities that if he does not have money enough to employ an attorney, he has the right to have one appointed by the court to represent him; to consult with him before making any statement; and to have him present while he is making a statement;
5) that if an accused person requests legal representation no questions will be asked him until an attorney is present.

TITLE I - FEDERAL JURIES

From the proposed

"Civil Rights Act of 1966"

The present statutes reflect the will of Congress that federal juries be composed of a cross-section of the community. But these laws do not provide sufficient guidance to jury commissions across the nation as to how they shall carry out this Congressional purpose. The result has been the use of varying sources of names of prospective jurors, differing systems of selection and diverse tests of qualification. While this uncertain system appears not to have operated unconstitutionally, in some districts Negro representation on juries has been substantially less than the proportion of Negroes in the community, and other classes have sometimes been inadequately represented on juries. In any event, the system used in many districts is an imperfect means of insuring that the will of Congress is carried out, and carried out uniformly.

Title I of the "Civil Rights Act of 1966" is drawn to eliminate uncertainty and make clear beyond dispute that each judicial district or division is fulfilling its constitutional and statutory obligations in selection and assignment of jurors. It sets forth the sources from which potential jurors are to be drawn and the procedures to be followed in selecting jurors and testing their qualifications.

Title I declares it to be the policy of the United States that all qualified persons shall have the opportunity to serve on grand and petit juries in federal courts and shall have an obligation to serve when summoned. It prohibits discrimination in the selection of federal jurors on account of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, or economic status.

The bill requires that the names of prospective jurors be taken at random from the voter registration rolls, which are defined to include lists of eligible voters prepared by federal examiners under the Voting Rights Act of 1965. The voter rolls are considered to be the best universally available source of names substantially reflecting a full and fair cross-section of the community. Where, however, the judicial council of the circuit determines that use of the voter rolls as the exclusive source of names would not be consistent with the prohibition of discriminatory selection, the council would be required to prescribe other sources of names in addition to the voter rolls. It is anticipated that it will be necessary to prescribe additional sources of names for use in some districts where Negroes are at present not fairly represented on the voting rolls.

The qualifications for jury service prescribed by existing law are retained, but it is provided that all persons found in accordance with objective criteria to possess such qualifications are to be deemed qualified as jurors. Under the present law, the statutory qualifications may have been regarded as establishing the minimum to be required, leaving the courts and jury commissions free to impose more stringent qualifications. The bill makes clear that the qualifications set a ceiling, that requirments beyond those listed may not be imposed.

Title I also provides a ready means for challenging jury selection in criminal and civil cases on grounds that the procedures established by the bill have not been followed. This challenge procedure is made available prospectively, and should be a major guarantee of the equal rights which are the objective of the legislation.

TITLE II - STATE JURIES

Title II of the "Civil Rights Act of 1966" is based on the power of Congress to enforce the Fourteenth Amendment by "appropriate legislation" and is designed to eliminate unconstitutional discrimination in the selection of grand and petit juries in State courts. This title provides that no persons shall be denied the right to serve on State juries on account of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, or economic status. In areas in which such discrimination is not practiced, existing jury selection procedures would not be upset. Where discrimination still exists, this title provides the means to eliminate it.

Title II has two principal features. First, it authorizes the Attorney General to bring civil actions in the federal courts for injunctive relief against discriminatory practices in State court jury selection. Under existing law, the Attorney General has no authority to initiate jury discrimination suits but may only intervene (under Title IX of the Civil Rights Act of 1964) in private suits. The authority vested in him by this title would be similar to the authority the Attorney General now has to seek injunctions against discrimination in voting, public accommodations and employment and, under Title III of this bill, against discrimination in public schools and facilities.

Upon a finding of discrimination, the court is expressly authorized to grant specified kinds of effective relief, including a decree which would, (1) prohibit the use of any qualification or ground of exclusion, exemption or excuse which has been administered in a discriminatory manner or which lends itself to such abuse; (2) require the use of objective criteria in determining qualifications, exclusion, exemptions, or excuses; (3) require maintenance of such records as may be necessary to show, in the future, whether discrimination is being practiced; and (4) appoint a master to perform the duties of the State jury officials. In addition, the court may grant other appropriate relief under general equitable principles.

The second principal feature of this title deals with the need for disclosure and development of information relevant to the question whether discrimination results from the system for selecting jurors. This objective is accomplished by a challenge procedure which may be used by the Attorney General in a suit under this title, private litigants residing in the area who seek to enforce the prohibition against discrimination by a civil action under 42 U.S.C. 1983, or a defendant in a criminal case or convicted person attacking collaterally a criminal conviction.

Upon the filing of an allegation of discrimination, appropriate State officials are required to furnish a "written statement of jury selection information." This statement is to describe in detail the procedures followed by the State jury officials in selecting jurors--including the sources of names of prospective jurors, the criteria used in determining qualifications for jury service, and the methods used for summoning jurors and assigning them to jury panels. The complaining party may cross-examine jury officials and introduce any other relevant evidence that may be available in support of the challenge. If, at that point, there is some evidence of discrimination, the complaining party is given access to any other relevant records of jury selection which are not otherwise publicly available and these may be introduced in support of the challenge. If the court then determines that there is probable cause to believe that discrimination has occurred, it is the responsibility of the State to produce additional evidence demonstrating that the alleged discrimination did not occur.

This provision meets twin considerations. It affords interested parties and the court access to the relevant records of jury selection needed to permit a fair determination whether discrimination has occurred or may occur. In addition, it assures that records may be kept confidential except as necessary to the court proceeding. Use of this challenge procedure in collateral attacks upon criminal convictions is available only with respect to judgments of conviction entered after the effective date of the title.

COMMITTEE ON UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES
Eightieth Congress

Necessity for Legislation -

The need for congressional action to combat the subversive activities of the Communists and their followers in the United States cannot be questioned. On March 17 the President asked Congress to appropriate billions of dollars to build up American defenses against the potential threat of the world Communist conspiracy with headquarters in the Soviet Union. It has been clearly established that the Communist Party of the United States is not an American political party, but is actually a disciplined and organic part of the world Communist movement, which has sections in every nation in the world, all under the direction and control of the master conspirators in the Politburo in Moscow. To resist the spread of communism abroad and ignore it at home would be an utterly inconceivable pattern of procedure.

During the past 2 months the Subcommittee on Legislation heard testimony on this subject from some of the outstanding legal scholars and constitutional authorities in the United States. Almost all of them, including many who have long and distinguished records as defenders of civil rights, declared that legislation must be passed to meet the activities of Communists in the United States.

In years past the Communist Party of the United States was lightly brushed aside by some as an insignificant sect of crackpots. Today it is almost unanimously recognized to be a mass fifth column operating on behalf of the Soviet Union. We are confronted with a problem of far-reaching perplexity--one of which the framers of the Constitution could have had little conception--and one that we have never faced before in our history, in its present aggravated form. Acting alone, the Communist Party of the United States does not constitute a substantial threat to the Nation but, acting as it does as the American bridgehead of the Red Army, which has directly or indirectly crushed country after country under its iron heel, the Communist Party of the United States, without question, constitutes a clear and present danger to our national security, and it is the responsibility of the Congress to act now to defend the liberties which the Communists seek to destroy.

The Nature of the Problem -

In order to meet the problem of communism in the United States, it is necessary to analyze the nature and tactics of the Communists.

The Communist movement is, in fact, a world-wide revolutionary political movement, whose purpose is by treachery, deceit, infiltration, espionage, sabotage, terrorism, and any other means, legal or illegal, to establish a Communist totalitarian dictatorship in the United States, and all other countries of the world, which will be subservient to the master conspirators in Moscow.

Certain elements are necessary for the success of the party:

1. It must operate as a secret conspiratorial organization, and when the spotlight of publicity is turned on its actions it loses much of its effectiveness;

2. It must resort to any means, legal or illegal, to accomplish its purpose.

3. The party has found that in the United States it has greater success generally, operating through front organizations who disguise and hide the fact they are Communist dominated and controlled. These front organizations feed the treasury of the party through tax-exempt contributions from fellow travelers and innocent dupes who are led to believe they are serving some humanitarian cause, rather than the interest of the Communist Party.

4. Since the Communist Party of the United States is a part of the Soviet-dominated world organization, travel and communication between the Communist Party of the United States and affiliated parties throughout the world is essential to its success. Severing the threads that bind the world conspiracy together, and which enable it to coordinate its activities on an international scale, would constitute a serious blow to the Communist Party of the United States and to the entire Communist conspiracy.

5. Membership in the Communist Party of the United States should not be confused with membership in American political parties. The party leaders are knowing and willful conspirators to overthrow the Government of the United States by any means, in order to serve the interests of the international conspiracy and of the party dictatorship in Moscow. A great majority of the party members are knowing and willful participants in this conspiracy. Only a few may not be aware of the true subversive character of the party. Around the hard core of party leadership are concentric rings of individuals and organizations, including dupes and fellow-travelers, who knowingly and unknowingly do the party's work.

The Status of Present Legislation -

Congress has passed several laws which were directed specifically at controlling the activities of the Communist Party of the United States. The Smith Act made it a crime to advocate the overthrow of the Government of the United States by force and violence. The McCormack Act required registration of agents of foreign principals. The Voorhis Act required registration of organizations which are agents of foreign governments.

Witness after witness before the subcommittee in its hearings declared that the provisions of all three of these acts clearly apply to the activities of Communist Party members and organizations, and that proof could be obtained to sustain criminal convictions under these acts. The Justice Department, however, has failed to enforce these acts against the Communist Party of the United States. The Communist Party has, in fact, enjoyed a privileged status, insofar as prosecution under these laws is concerned.

During the war, while the Soviet Union was an ally, some justification for this failure might have existed, but now, when the Soviet Union and its Communist satellites are waging a cold war against the United States and the other free nations of the world, such failure to proceed under existing laws against Communists in the United States is utterly inexcusable.

The effective prosecution of Communists under existing laws has fallen generally into two categories. First there are cases in which Communists have been cited for contempt by the Committee on Un-American Activities. Although a number of contempt citations have been voted over the past 10 years, a commentary upon the effectiveness of the Justice Department's prosecution of such cases is that just 1 month ago Leon Josephson was the first Communist who began to serve a jail term as a result of sentence and conviction on a contempt charge. The record of convictions in contempt proceedings has been excellent in recent months.

The Justice Department has also begun to proceed recently against alien Communists who perjured themselves in many cases as to their allegiance to the Communist cause when they entered the United States. It is significant that in some of these cases violations occurred over 15 years ago, yet only now has the Justice Department seen fit to prosecute.

Had the law-enforcement authorities vigorously enforced existing laws against Communists in the United States, the growth of the movement would undoubtedly have been stultified, so that it would not constitute the serious threat to our national security that it does at the present time. This apathy to, and coddling of, the Communists in the United States by the Department of Justice is in great measure responsible for the magnitude of the problem with which we are faced today.

The committee therefore recommends that the Justice Department immediately institute vigorous prosecution against Communists in every case where they have been guilty of violating existing laws. The Congress cannot be expected to pass legislation directed at controlling subversive influences if such laws are to become dead letters due to the failure of the Justice Department to prosecute. The committee wishes to point out that the Federal Bureau of Investigation has done an excellent job in investigating the activities of Communists in the United States, but investigation without prosecution is not an answer to the problem.

Recommendations for New Legislation -

The Committee on Un-American Activities held public hearings last year on several bills which had been introduced to curb or outlaw the Communist Party. Commencing on February 5, this year, additional hearings were held by the Subcommittee on Legislation. Perhaps the most outstanding panel of legal talent ever to appear before a congressional committee testified concerning the bills before the subcommittee. The witnesses were in virtual agreement as to the necessity for new legislation. There was, of course, some disagreement as to the proper legislative approach to the problem. The subcommittee has carefully considered the testimony of the witnesses, having in mind the following factors:

1. We believe it is essential that any legislation we recommend be strictly within our constitutional framework. We do not want it to be so broad as to possibly penalize innocent people along with the guilty. We cannot run the risk of infringing upon the freedom of all our people in order to curb the Communists who seek to destroy our form of government.

2. We feel that it is essential that the legislation be effective. Too often a cursory study of this problem leads people to believe that the answer is very simple; that all we have to do is to outlaw the Communist Party, or pass a law requiring that its members register, and that the problem will solve itself. This is not the case. The Communist Party in its operations presents a problem which is something new under the sun. It changes its spots, its tactics, and strategy without conscience.

3. The subcommittee believes that a democracy has the right to protect its very life from those who would destroy it.

Consequently, your subcommittee makes the following unanimous recommendations to the full committee.

Rejected Proposals -

Several bills before the committee attempt to approach the problem by outlawing the Communist movement as a political party. The subcommittee has found it necessary to reject this approach on several grounds. Barring the Communist Party from the ballot by Federal law would, in the opinion of the subcommittee, be unconstitutional, in that the States have the power to declare what parties and individuals may qualify for appearance on the election ballots. This opinion was shared by a majority of the witnesses before the subcommittee.

The subcommittee also finds it advisable not to report the McDonough bill. The committee, however, believes that that portion of the McDonough bill which seeks to define communism presents a salutary recommendation, and the bill which the committee is recommending contains such a definition.

The Subcommittee Bill -

The bill which the subcommittee is reporting to the full committee attacks the Communist problem on four major fronts:

1. It expands the provisions of the Smith Act by making illegal the knowing and willful advocacy of the overthrow of the Government of the United States by any means, for the purpose of subverting the interest of the United States to that of a foreign Communist power. Under this provision the master conspirators of the Communist movement in the United States can, without question, be prosecuted. While force and violence is without question a basic principle to which all party members subscribe, the present line of the party, in order to evade existing legislation, is to avoid wherever possible the open advocacy of force and violence. Under the provision which the committee is recommending, it is not necessary to prove advocacy of force and violence. It will only be necessary to prove knowing and willful participation in the foreign-directed Communist conspiracy, plus advocacy of the overthrow of the Government of the United States by any means with intent to subvert the interest of the United States to that of a foreign Communist power.

Through this provision of the bill, the law enforcement agencies will have a new weapon with which they can strike at the hard core of master conspirators of the Communist movement.

2. A great majority of the witnesses before the committee emphasized the necessity for constant and relentless exposure of Communist-front organizations. If the cloak of secrecy is removed from the purposes and control of such organizations, they will, without question, wither and die, and the party will have suffered a substantial set-back. The committee has approved those provisions of the Mundt bill (H. R. 5852) which require the registration of Communist-front organizations. This bill places the responsibility for registration upon the officials of the organizations involved, which fulfills one of the recommendations which the Attorney General made concerning the Voorhis Act.

   The bill provides for administrative hearings in the Department of Justice in those cases where Communist Party front organizations refused to register voluntarily. During this hearing the organization will be given an opportunity to present witnesses in its own behalf, as well as being provided with other safeguards. Full judicial review of the findings of the Attorney General is provided. The subcommittee believes that this provision constitutes a landmark in that it provides for the establishment of proper legal procedures which will eventually replace the ex parte findings under the present loyalty order.

   Full publicity will be given to the findings of the Attorney General in such cases, and to the registration statements. Tax exemption will be denied to contributors to front organizations, and they will be required to identify their publications, radio broadcasts, and the like, as emanating from a front organization.

3. It is essential that all Communists be removed from the Government pay roll and the committee consequently has approved that provision of the Mundt bill which specifically denies Government jobs to persons who are members of the Communist Party. The bill also provides a penalty for Government officials who employ persons knowing or having reasonable ground to believe that they are members of the Communist Party.

4. The committee believes that an all-out attack must be made on the foreign connections of the Communist Party of the United States. Without assistance and direction from abroad, the Communist Party of the United States would be a relatively impotent organization. Consequently, the committee has approved that provision of the Mundt bill which denies passports to members of the Communist Party. Additional recommendations to strike at the foreign connections of the Communist Party of the United States are included in the next section of this report.

Additional Legislative Recommendations -

1. The subcommittee recommends that the Voorhis and McCormack Act be strengthened. In view of the clear and present danger of the Communist threat, it is essential that our law-enforcement agencies be provided with several alternative weapons with which they can attack the Communist conspiracy in its various forms.

2. The subcommittee recommends the immediate consideration, by the Judiciary Committee of the House, of proposals which would require all aliens to register annually with the Department of Justice, allow the Department of Justice to hold deportable aliens in custody until arrangements for their deportation can be concluded, and provide for strict reciprocity in the granting of visas and in the treatment of aliens from Communist-dominated countries. The latter recommendation was strongly urged on the subcommittee by Admiral Standley, our former Ambassador to the Soviet Union, and by Congressman Fletcher, of California.

3. Several witnesses before the subcommittee emphasized that the Committee on Un-American Activities was one of the most effective opponents of communism in the United States. The subcommittee recommends that the McDowell bill now in the Judiciary Committee, which would raise the penalty for contempt of Congress, be acted upon as soon as possible, so that the hand of the Committee on Un-American Activities may be strengthened in conducting its investigation of subversive activities.

4. Strengthening of the espionage laws, so as to cope with the new techniques and strategy of the international Communist movement.

Other Recommendations -

1. The subcommittee suggest that the legislatures of the various States should seriously consider legislation which would specifically bar from State employment and employment in public schools all persons who are members of the Communist Party. A coordinated attack on the Communist problem by the States, as well as the Federal Government, is essential.

2. Legislation alone is not a complete answer to the Communist problem. An attack must be made upon it on all fronts, if we are to meet it successfully. The most important element is an understanding and constant vigilance of the American citizens as to the true character, aims, and techniques of the Communist conspiracy. The many civic, patriotic, and fraternal organizations in the United States can be of tremendous service in emphasizing a program of education which will inform the people of this threat. In the words of one of the outstanding witnesses before our committee:

> The people should be informed, accurately and fully and continuously, about the nature, activities, strategy, and tactics of communism. This educational task can be in part accomplished by qualified and concerned private citizens.

Conclusion -

The subcommittee has not attempted to recommend legislation which will deal with so-called theoretical Communists in the United States. We are seeking rather to strike a body blow at the American cadre of the Soviet-directed Communist conspiracy. We believe that if its criminal activities are prosecuted, its false fronts exposed, and its foreign assistance and direction cut away, the movement in the United States, standing alone for what it is, will be overwhelmingly defeated. We are willing to permit the theories of communism and democracy to clash in the open market place of political ideas in America, but we insist that communism not be allowed to have the unfair advantages in this conflict of the unrestricted use of illegal means, the cloak of secrecy and fraud, and the assistance and direction of a foreign Communist dictatorship.

Approved by the full committee April 9, 1948.

MEMORANDUM

To: Sponsors of the Committee of One Thousand April 23, 1948

From: Jeanette M. Gillerman, Executive Secretary

Congress will soon be called upon by the House Committee on Un-American Activities to consider the Committee's bill to control "Subversive Activities" in the United States. To be known as the "Subversive Activities Control Act of 1948," the bill was originally expected to be introduced by April 23, but its introduction is being delayed, it is believed, until preparations are completed to insure immediate passage.

Although the bill has not been publicly announced, its character and provisions are indicated in the report of the Subcommittee on Legislation of the House Committee on Un-American Activities. The proposed bill has already been critically reviewed by the press. A copy of an editorial in the Washington Post and the report of the Subcommittee are enclosed.

Enclosed also is a statement to be used as the subject of a press release or newspaper advertisement by the Committee of One Thousand at the most propitious time. If we may use your name as a signatory to it please sign and return the enclosed card.

37-Un-American Activities

Committee of One Thousand 37 Madison Avenue, New York 10, N. Y.

April 23, 1948

STATEMENT ON PROPOSED "SUBVERSIVE ACTIVITIES CONTROL ACT OF 1948."

We review with critical concern and apprehension the proposals for a "Subversive Activities Control Act of 1948," to be recommended to Congress by the House Committee on Un-American Activities, because of this Committee's history of almost complete disregard of the liberties which this legislation purports to defend.

The Committee has been in existence for about ten years. Its record was succinctly summarized on January 20, 1947, by the Board of Directors of the American Civil Liberties Union--an organization which the Dies Committee itself publicly absolved of any "Communist taint." Referring to the present Committee and its predecessors the Board said:

> ". . . .The principal effect of the committees' probes has been the unwarranted discrediting of genuine liberals who have been earnestly and sincerely seeking needed reforms, particularly in the field of labor, monopolies, and race relations. This has been accomplished by "smear" methods, innuendo, distortion and other propagandistic devices reminiscent of fascist techniques. Nothing in recent years has been as un-American as the conduct of the hearings of the Congressional Committee on un-Americanism."

That Congress is to be asked by a Committee whose conduct has been so described to safeguard the American way of life deserves serious thought.

The Committee has announced that it will propose legislation which purports to do the following:

1. Make illegal the knowing and wilful advocacy of the overthrow of the Government of the United States by any means for the purpose of subverting the interest of the United States to that of a foreign Communist power.

2. Require the registration of "Communist front" organizations as proposed in the Mundt Bill (H. R. 5852).

3. Deny government employment to Communists.

4. Deny passports to Communist Party members.

The Committee suggests additional legislation to -

1. Increase the penalty for contempt of Congress from one to five years and from $1000 to $5000 fine.

2. Strengthen the espionage laws.

3. Require aliens to register annually.

We cannot be unmindful of the fact that for ten years the House Committee on Un-American Activities not only has attacked Communists, but has stamped "subversive" all those whose opinions it found unpalatable. It has exhibited an unwilling-ness, as Professor Walter Gellhorn said, "to tolerate those whose estimates of current problems do not match its own."

(over)

That this bill is primarily a request by the Committee for legislative sanction to accelerate its drive to squeeze all opinion and activity into the channels of conformity is obvious from the following definitions contained in the Mundt Bill and approved for incorporation:

> "SEC. 3....(2) the term "Communist Party" means the political party now known as the Communist Party of the United States of America, regardless of any change hereafter made in such name; and such term includes, irrespective of its name, any organization carrying out the policies of, or engaged in the same character of activities as, the Communist Party of the United States as it now exists and operates;
> (3) the term 'Communist-front organization' means --
> (A) the Communist Party; or
> (B) any organization which engages in any activity intended, or which it is reasonable to believe is intended, to further the objective of
> (i) bringing about replacement of the existing form of government of the United States with a Communist form of government, or > (ii) bringing about replacement of free private enterprise in the United States with a Communist economic system, or > (iii) bringing about acceptance, in the United States, of Communist ideology; or
> (C) any organization which is under the control or influence of the Communist Party."

We are aware of no legislative act that does greater violence to the principles which have guided our country to greatness--the encouragement of criticism and the toleration of dissent. If this bill is enacted, persons and organizations espousing such current controversial causes as the partition of Palestine, the repeal of the Taft-Hartley Law, civilian control of atomic energy, anti-lynch laws, and national health insurance may be subject, if not to criminal action, to abusive investigation and disparaging publicity. They become open to the charge of engaging "in the same character of activities as the Communist Party of the United States," or being under its "control or influence." "America," Professor Henry Steele Commager said, "was born of revolt, flourished on dissent, became great through experimentation."

We condemn what seems to us to be an effort to utilize the unsettled state of international affairs and political discord both at home and abroad to impose upon Americans modern Alien and Sedition Acts, the wisdom of which our history has long since disproved. On the basis of the record of the Committee on Un-American Activities we believe we are justified in discounting this body's estimate of the dangers that face our country. We do not believe we can be charged with ingratitude for refusing their offer to protect our liberties. Instead we propose to Congress the alternative to a government by terror--the defeat of the "Subversive Activities Control Act of 1948" and the abolition of the House Committee on Un-American Activities. By so doing we reaffirm our confidence in the strength and virtue of the Constitution of the United States and our faith in the American people.

Security By Proscription

There is a specious rationality about the legislation to curb communism approved the other day by the House Committee on Un-American Activities which makes it particularly perilous. Indubitably, Communists and some of their bedfellows are a menace to the body politic; indubitably, their devotion to a foreign country is such that they cannot be allowed to hold positions of trust within our own Government. The Committee on Un-American Activities proposes to deal with them, however, by proscription in the guise of exposure. It would require registration and disclosure of membership and of contributors on the part of the Communist Party itself and on the part of all "Communist front" organizations. The justification for this proscription is a legislative declaration that the Communist Party is a "political conspiracy" endeavoring to "subvert the interest of the United States to that of a foreign Communist power."

The Government of the United States is by no means defenseless against the agents of a foreign power or other persons seeking to overthrow it. There is in force at the present time the McCormack Act requiring registration of agents of foreign principals and the Voorhis Act requiring registration of organizations which are agents of foreign governments. There is also a Federal law, the Smith Act, forbidding anyone to advocate the violent overthrow of any government in the United States and another law forbidding the employment of any such person by the Federal Government. It would be a good idea, we think, to test in the courts whether Communists, by mere virtue of their membership in the Communist Party, fall afoul of these laws. The courts are the appropriate place to seek such a judgment.

But legislative designation of the Communist Party and "Communist front" organizations as guilty of violating these laws or any other laws having general application is at once a begging of the question and an infringement of the First Amendment to the Constitution. If Congress could, at its own unchecked discretion, declare it to be a fact that Communists and their fellow travelers are conspirators, it could do the same about Roman Catholics or trade unionists or organizers of a third party. Justice Prettyman of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia put this succinctly and incontrovertibly the other day in his dissenting opinion on the Taft-Hartley Act Communist oath case. Congress cannot, he said, "directly abridge a right protected by the First Amendment merely by making an affirmation of a fact. If it could, it could flout the amendment with impunity."

The House of Representatives had an unhappy experience not long ago when it tried to forbid the Federal employment of three named individuals, Messrs. Watson, Dodd and Lovett, only to discover that it had enacted what the Supreme Court ultimately called a bill of attainder. The present proposal has much the same taint. Congress could properly require the registration of all organizations guilty of endeavoring to "subvert the interest of the United States to that of a foreign Communist power." It could, if it wished, follow the suggestion of Morris Ernst and require disclosure as to the contributions and expenditures of all organizations seeking to influence public opinion. It could, as Adolph Berle recommended, strengthen the Foreign Agents Registration Act to encompass all agents of foreign powers. But to single out the Communists for special restrictions under the law is to legislate in one of the ways the Constitution specifically prohibits.

In empowering the Attorney General to designate organizations as "Communist fronts," the House Committee proposal would improve in important respects upon the power to do this given the Attorney General under the President's loyalty investigation order. It would provide for a hearing and for judicial review. But the invidious character of the designation, the failure to recognize that an organization in which Communists have the upper hand one day may be reclaimed by loyal Americans the next, the extreme vagueness of the language defining a Communist front, all serve to make this a most dangerously blunderbuss sort of legislation.

Perhaps the most serious defect of the proposed legislation is its drastic extension of the doctrine of guilt by association. It would forbid employment in the Federal Government or issuance of a passport to any member of any organization designated a "Communist front." This is a proscription on so broad and unselective a scale as to be wholly repugnant to the most settled tenets of American democracy. It would catch saint and sinner alike, punish the innocent as well as the guilty. There is not much to be said for medicine that kills the patient along with the germs from which he is suffering.

I wish that I might meet with all the sponsors of the Committee of One Thousand to discuss the plans and problems of the Committee. Realizing its impossibility, however, I am using this means to tell you what we believe our Committee ought to do, and to ask for your cooperation.

I am sure you will agree that at a time when the House Committee on Un-American Activities shows such a blatant disregard of civil rights that it earns the condemnation of the President and the Attorney General of the United States, it would be most unfortunate if the Committee of One Thousand were not able to continue to do its part in helping to rid the government of such an un-American agency.

The enclosed report outlining our proposed activities stresses the introduction of a resolution into Congress to abolish the House Committee on Un-American Activities as sine qua non of our objective. We want to organize a group of Congressmen to lead the fight for the passage of such a resolution which we expect will be introduced by Congressman Sabath. As a first step in this project we would plan on the opening day of Congress to have in the hands of every Congressman an open letter signed by the sponsors of the Committee of One Thousand urging the abolition of the Thomas Committee.

We have made many efforts to raise the money necessary to carry out the foregoing program. We are urgently in need of $5,000 to enable our Committee to continue. It is only the failure to raise sufficient funds by other means that compels us to appeal to you for assistance. We shall be most grateful for your help.

committee of 1000

37 Madison Ave., New York 10, NY

Report of Activities to July 31, 1948
And
Proposals for Future Activity

From an initial group of thirty-two, the Committee of One Thousand has grown to over four hundred persons prominent in science, business, the arts, law, education and religion. Thirty-five states are represented.

Dr. Harlow Shapley has been acting chairman, assisted by a temporary steering committee which includes Messrs. Olin Downes, Van Wyck Brooks, Matthew Josephson, Dr. Bryn J. Hovde and Dr. W. Russell Bowie.

During the next six months period the plan is to complete the sponsors group to 1000, establish permanent officers, an enlarged policy committee, and a smaller administrative committee which should meet monthly.

The Committee should look forward to a national meeting of its sponsors in December or early January to plan the Committee's activity during the Eighty-first Congress.

Of primary importance is the introduction of a resolution into Congress to abolish the House Committee on Un-American Activities, similar to the one introduced into the Eightieth Congress by Representative Sabath, and rallying sufficient Congressional support for its adoption.

PAST ACTIVITY The Committee of One Thousand got under way about the time that the appropriation for the House Committee on Un-American Activities was before Congress. About the same time Dr. Edward U. Condon, Director of the Bureau of Standards, was attacked by the House Committee, and was the cause celebre to justify the Committee's request for additional funds.

In addition to releasing a statement protesting the attack on Dr. Condon, signed by 140 sponsors of the Committee of One Thousand, the Committee took an active part in Washington attempting to secure as large a vote as possible against the appropriation for the House Committee on Un-American Activities. Our Committee's activity was responsible for a number of votes against the appropriation. The Committee of One Thousand received special comment by Representative Sabath, Dean of the House of Representatives, and the leader of the opposition to the appropriation.

Immediately after the House Committee on Un-American Activities announced that it would propose a Subversive Activities Control Act to Congress, the Committee of One Thousand assumed the initiative and continued to be one of the leading forces opposed to this legislation until Congress adjourned. A statement issued by the Committee of One Thousand was signed by over 200 sponsors, received good publicity in the press and was used by a number of other organizations as a basis for their own protests. A copy of the statement was sent to each Senator and Congressman.

On May 20 in New York City the Committee of One Thousand held a meeting for its sponsors and guests at which Mr. Arthur Garfield Hays, prominent civil rights attorney, presented his analysis and opinions of the Subversive Activities Control Act, which by that time had been introduced into Congress by Representatives Mundt and Nixon.

The Committee of One Thousand established an excellent relationship with Senator Elbert D. Thomas of Utah, one of the leaders of the opposition to the Mundt bill in the Senate. The Committee provided him with a platform at a luncheon in New York City on June 3 for the first public statement by a Senator against the Mundt bill. Senator Chavez of New Mexico utilized this occasion also to announce publicly for the first time his opposition to the bill in a wire to the luncheon. Senator Claude Pepper also wired the luncheon confirming his opposition to this legislation.

Immediately after this function Senator Thomas took the initiative and called a luncheon meeting in the Capitol at which eleven Senators and an equal number of guests were present, including sponsors of the Committee of One Thousand. During the informal discussion that took place several Senators, particularly Senators Barkley and Lucas, assured those present that the bill would not reach the floor of the Senate.

For the three week period during which the bill was before the Senate Judiciary Committee the Committee of One Thousand contracted for the services of Mr. Heber Blankenhorn, a sponsor of the Committee, as Washington observer and advisor. Mr. Blankenhorn did a most creditable job, keeping the Committee continually apprised of developments in Washington. Through him we were able to get excellent publicity through the Washington press, helping to establish the Committee of One Thousand as one of the foremost opponents of the House Committee on Un-American Activities. (The New York Times on June 7 described the Committee of One Thousand as "a leader of the fight against the Mundt bill.") Individual protests by sponsors of the Committee of One Thousand, as well as personal contact with a number of Senators, did much to stall the legislation in the Senate Judiciary Committee and prevent it from reaching the floor at the last session.

Efforts may be made to pass the Mundt bill or a version of it revised in content but not in principle when Congress reconvenes. Senator Wiley, Chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, has already inserted into the Congressional Record (June 19, 1948) a revamped copy of the bill. Yet, these results are clear -- after 10 years the Un-American Activities Committee ventured to produce something concrete. It was instantly rejected by a large section of American public opinion.

PLAN OF FUTURE ACTIVITY The Committee of One Thousand in working for the abolition of the House Committee on Un-American Activities must be prepared to thwart every move by the House Committee to stifle throught and expression with which it does not agree. Our Committee must continue to make the public aware of the threat to civil liberties that the continued existence of the Thomas Committee represents, and to stimulate protests by effective public opinion against its irresponsible conduct. Simultaneously, organizations and groups must be encouraged to take appropriate action against the very existence of the Un-American Activities Committee.

The views of eminent scholars of American civil liberties must be sought and circulated and the documented widespread opposition to the Thomas Committee collected and announced. The publications and statements of the Thomas Committee must be critically appraised and statements and background material supplied to strategic editors, columnists and radio commentators. An official journal of the Committee of One Thousand, published regularly, could perform a valuable function and be most helpful in promoting the above program. It is hoped that the means can be found to have the first issue appear in the fall.

Paralleling the latest Un-American Activities Committee hearings the Committee of One Thousand must be prepared to hold hearings for the examination of witnesses whom the Un-American Committee summons, then silences. This will require a small panel of sponsors of the Committee of One Thousand, including lawyers, with provision for examining counsel, etc. to prepare a public record of the facts which the Un-American Committee refuses to hear from its witnesses. Or in cases such as Dr. Condon's, where the House Committee publicly accuses, but gives no hearing, the panel could proceed to "hear the case." We will thus begin to "abolish" the House Committee on Un-American Activities.

The Committee of One Thousand is now preparing to circularize every candidate for Congress in most of the forty-eight states, asking them to declare themselves on the House Committee on Un-American Activities. The information gathered from this poll will be made available to the sponsors of the Committee of One Thousand and to interested citizens groups, and will be publicized in the candidates' localities. In addition, we will make available the roll call vote in Congress on several important measures affecting the House Committee on Un-American Activities -- the vote on appropriations for the Committee, on the Mundt bill, and contempt citations.

The need to secure commitments from Congressional candidates against the House Committee on Un-American Activities should not be underestimated. It is known that many members of Congress are intimidated by the House Committee on Un-American Activities and though they have expressed both publicly and privately their disgust with the conduct of that committee, nevertheless, continue to support its requests. It is important to make known to future members of Congress (whatever their political complexion) that there is considerable effective public opinion against the House Committee on Un-American Activities in order to create a more widespread opposition to the Committee within Congress itself.

What Professor Walter Gellhorn said in his article "In Defense of American Activities" (American Scholar, Vol. XVII, No. 2, Spring 1948) bears repeating. "More important than any procedural reform, however, is conscious opposition to the Committee's bullying. The dominant pressures in the country today are toward an uncritical conformity, and toward a fearful unwillingness to preserve the civil rights of unpopular groups. The Committee implies that those who oppose it are Communists or tools of the Communists. And thus it intimidates many who ought to be most eager in their defense of the realm of ideas. It is more comfortable, and certainly safer, to worry about attacks on democracy in foreign countries than to be sensitive about non-democratic trends in our own. But if American democracy is to continue in a state of health, dissident opinion must not be stifled here."

The estimated monthly organizational expense budget of the Committee of One Thousand including salaries, rent, telephone and telegraph, postage, stationery and supplies, is $850.00. To this must be added the cost of special meetings and functions, newspaper advertisements, publications, radio time, and specialized personnel as required. It is not possible to estimate the cost of these items because the extent to which they are utilized depends in no small measure upon the future activity of the House Committee.

The Committee of One Thousand receives its funds entirely from voluntary contributions solicited (1) in person and through the mails, and (2) at public functions held by the Committee. By establishing itself as a source of information about the Un-American Activities Committee, as well as a leading opponent of it, the Committee of One Thousand hopes to brouden its base of moral and financial supporters. Those evincing interest in the program and objective of the Committee of One Thousand should be referred to the Committee.

JACKIE ROBINSON STATEMENT TO HOUSE UN-AMERICAN ACTIVITIES COMMITTEE

Following is the text of a statement made July 18, 1949 by Jackie Robinson, Brooklyn Dodgers baseball player, before the House Un-American Activities Committee (as reported in NEW YORK TIMES, July 19, 1949):

When the House Committee on Un-American Activities invited me to appear here today and express myself on the subject of your present interest, I answered that I would be glad to do so, although it isn't exactly pleasant to get involved in a political dispute when my field of earning a living is as far removed from politics as anybody can possibly imagine.

I am sure you know that I am a professional baseball player. Baseball has been called the great American sport because all Americans get their kicks out of the game some way or other, no matter what their political or social connections may be. So it's customary, and I suppose pretty sensible for ball players to keep out of partisan politics or any other kind of arguements and contests that may split their supporting public.

Of course it will be said and it's certainly true, that the question of Communist activity in the United States isn't partisan politics. But it's also true that some of the policies of this Committee have become political issues. And so, naturally, I've had a great many messages come to me by wire, phone and letter, urging me not to show up at this hearing. And I ought to make it plain that not all of this urging came from Communist sympathizers. Of course, most of it did. But some came from people for whom I have a lot of respect and who are just as opposed to Communist methods as I am.

And so it isn't very pleasant for me to find myself in the middle of a public argument that has nothing to do with the standing of the Dodgers in the penant race--or even the pay raise I am going to ask Mr. Branch Rickey for next year.

"A Sense of Responsibility"

So you'll naturally ask, why did I stick my neck out by agreeing to be present, and why did I stand by my agreement in spite of advice to the contrary. It isn't easy to find an answer, but I guess it boils down to a sense of responsibility.

I don't pretend to be any expert on communism or any other kind of a political "ism." Going to college at UCLA (the University of California at Los Angeles), helping to fight a war, with about ten million other fellows, trying to make good with the Dodgers, and trying to save some money for the time when my legs lose their spring--all this, together with my family life, has been enough to keep me busy, without becoming an "expert"--except on base-stealing or something like that.

But you can put me down as an expert on being a colored American, with thirty years of experience at it. And just like any other colored person with sense enough to look around him and understand what he sees, I know that life in these United States can be mightly tough for people who are a little different from the majority--in their skin, color or the way they worship their God, or the way they spell their names.

Memorandum No. 57, Supplement 1

To All Executive Departments and Agencies

Subject: Corrections in the consolidated, classified list of organizations previously designated by the Attorney General under Executive Order No. 9835.

Attached is a copy of a letter dated January 25, 1951 in which the Department of Justice makes corrections in the citations of two organizations appearing in the consolidated list which the Loyalty Review Board received from the Attorney General and disseminated to all departments and agencies by Memorandum No. 57 of November 16, 1950. It will be noted that the corrected designations of the two organizations are: "Jikyoku Iinkai (The Committee for the Crisis)," and "Dante Alighieri Society (between 1935 and 1940)."

The consolidated list of all the organizations designated by the Attorney General as coming within the purview of Executive Order No. 9835 according to the classifications of Section 3, Part III of the Executive Order, appears in the Federal Register of November 29, 1950 (Volume 15, Number 231), beginning on page 8145. The information furnished herewith will, of course, be published in the Federal Register.

Honorable Hiram Bingham

Washington 25, D. C.

Dear Mr. Bingham:

The Department's attention has been called to an error in spelling which occurred in the consolidated list of organizations transmitted to the Loyalty Review Board by my letter of October 30, 1950. The organization which appears as "Jikyoku Lin Kai" should correctly be designated as "Jikyoku Iinkai (The Committee for the Crisis)".

It has been observed also that the designation of the "Dante Alighieri Society" as printed in the Code of Federal Regulations, 1949 Edition, Title V, Section 210.15 (Appendix A) appears as "Dante Alighieri Society (between 1935 and 1940)". The same designation should have appeared after the citation of the "Dante Alighieri Society" in the consolidated list of organizations transmitted by my letter of October 30, 1950, and it will be appreciated if you will accordingly cite this organization as "Dante Alighieri Society (between 1935 and 1940)".

Yours sincerely,

Subject: Subdivision of an organization previously designated and classified by the Attorney General under Section 3, Part III of Executive Order 9835

In performance of the requirements in Part III of Executive Order 9835, the Department of Justice has previously furnished, and this Board has duly disseminated, information regarding the Attorney General's designation and classification under Section 3, Part III of the Order of the Communist Political Association, its subdivisions, subsidiaries and affiliates.

In a letter dated April 18, 1951, written for the Attorney General, this Board has been informed that the Alabama Peoples Educational Association is one such subdivision, and that it falls within the same three categories of Executive Order 9835 as the Communist Political Association. A copy of said letter is enclosed, and a copy is also being sent to each other Department and Agency of the Government. This information will be published, as usual, in the Federal Register.

Dear Mr. Bingham:

Further reference is made to your letter of January 17, 1951, and to my reply of March 14, 1951, regarding the Alabama Peoples Educational Association which, as you have been advised, is one of the subdivisions of the Communist Political Association designated by the Attorney General as coming within the scope of Section 3, Part III of Executive Order No. 9835.

As you know, the Communist Political Association is designated as a Communist organization, a subversive organization, and an organization which "seeks to alter the form of government of the United States by unconstitutional means". The Alabama Peoples Educational Association as a subdivision of the Communist Political Association falls within the same three categories of the Executive Order as does the parent organization.

Memorandum No. 63

To All Executive Departments and Agencies

Subject: Attorney General's Letter of April 25, 1951 clarifying the designation of one organization previously designated under and classified in accordance with Section 3, Part III of Executive Order 9835

Part III of Executive Order 9835 prescribing procedures for the administration of an employee loyalty program in the Executive Branch of the Government requires the Department of Justice to furnish this Board with --

> "the name of each foreign or domestic organization, association, movement, group or combination of persons which the Attorney General, after appropriate investigation and determination, designates as totalitarian, fascist, communist, or subversive, or as having adopted a policy of advocating or approving the commission of acts of force or violence to deny others their rights under the Constitution of the United States, or as seeking to alter the form of government of the United States by unconstitutional means."

In performance of said requirement, the Department of Justice has furnished to this Board a supplemental letter dated April 25, 1951. In this letter the Attorney General indicates the parenthetical phrase he has added to the designation of the National Blue Star Mothers of America so as to avoid confusion between this organization, previously designated as Fascist within the meaning of Executive Order 9835, and another organization not designated which bears a similar title.

Part III of said Executive Order also requires this Board "to disseminate such information to all Departments and Agencies." A copy of said letter dated April 25, 1951, from the Attorney General, is accordingly enclosed, and a copy is also being sent to each other Department and Agency of the Government.

Dear Mr. Bingham:

In his letter of April 21, 1949, to your predecessor, Mr. Richardson, Attorney General Clark designated the National Blue Star Mothers of America as a Fascist organization within the meaning of Executive Order No. 9835. As you may be aware, another organization not designated bears a similar title, namely, the Blue Star Mothers of America. In order to avoid any further confusion which may result in undue hardship for the Blue Star Mothers of America, it will be appreciated if in future releases containing the designation of organizations under Executive Order No. 9835 you follow the words "National Blue Star Mothers of America" with the following phrase in parentheses "Not to be confused with the Blue Star Mothers of America organized in February 1942".

Sincerely,

Memorandum No. 72

To All Executive Departments and Agencies

Subject: Subdivision of an organization previously designated and classified by the Attorney General under Section 3, Part III, of Executive Order 9835.

In performance of the requirements in Part III of Executive Order 9835, the Department of Justice has previously furnished, and the Loyalty Review Board has duly disseminated, information regarding the Attorney General's designation and classification of the Communist Party, U.S.A., and of the Communist Political Association under Section 3, Part III, of the Executive Order.

Enclosed is a copy of a letter dated May 22, 1952, written for the Attorney General, which relates to the designation and classification under Executive Order 9835 of the Oklahoma League for Political Education, a subdivision of the Communist Political Association. A copy of this letter is being sent to each other Department and Agency of the Government, and this information will be published, as usual, in the Federal Register.

The following changes should accordingly be made in Appendix A, "List of Organizations Designated by the Attorney General Pursuant to Executive Order No. 9835," of the Statement, Regulations and Directives of the Loyalty Review Board, 1951 edition, as amended:

Pages 49, 51, and 52: Under "Communist Political Association - 2, its subdivisions, subsidiaries and affiliates, including: - 15, 23" insert on a new line below "Florida Press and Educational League - 14" the following: "Oklahoma League for Political Education - 29."

Page 56: Add the following footnote: "29. In his letter of May 22, 1952, disseminated May 28, 1952, the Attorney General referred to previous statements (see Footnotes 25, 23, 14) that the designations of the Communist Party, U.S.A., and of the Communist Political Association include all subdivisions thereof; and stated that the Oklahoma League for Political Education which operated for a period of time as the subdivision in Oklahoma of the Communist Political Association was, therefore, designated within the same three categories as the parent organization. (17 F. R. .)"

Memorandum No. 71

To All Executive Departments and Agencies

Subject: Two names of an organization previously designated and classified by the Attorney General under Section 3, Part III of Executive Order 9835.

In performance of the requirements in Part III of Executive Order 9835, the Department of Justice has previously furnished, and this Board has duly disseminated, information regarding the Attorney General's designation and classification under Section 3, Part III of the Order of the American-Russian Institute, New York.

The following information regarding the American-Russian Institute for Cultural Relations with the Soviet Union and the American-Russian Institute, New York, is given by the Department of Justice in a letter dated April 23, 1952, written for the Attorney General in reply to an inquiry which the Loyalty Review Board addressed to the Attorney General:

> "The American-Russian Institute for Cultural Relations with the Soviet Union and the American-Russian Institute, New York, are one and the same organization: these two names have been used interchangeably by such an organization in its literature and activities. When, pursuant to Executive Order 9835, the Attorney General designated the American-Russian Institute, New York, such designation covered such organization under any name by which it was known or self-described, including that of the American-Russian Institute for Cultural Relations with the Soviet Union."

This memorandum is sent you, and a copy is being sent to each other Department and Agency of the Government, in accordance with the requirement in Part III of Executive Order 9835 that "the Loyalty Review Board shall disseminate such information to all departments and agencies." This information will also be published in the Federal Register.

The following changes should accordingly be made in Appendix A "List of Organizations Designated by the Attorney General Pursuant to Executive Order No. 9835", of the Statement, Regulations and Directives of the Loyalty Review Board, 1951 edition as amended:

Page 48: After "American-Russian Institute, New York - 11" add a comma and the phrase: "also known as the American-Russian Institute for Cultural Relations with the Soviet Union - 28."

Page 56: Add the following footnote: "28. On April 23, 1952, the Department of Justice stated this is another name for the organization, which has used the two names interchangeably, and that the Attorney General's designation of the American-Russian Institute, New York (see footnote 11), covered the organization under any name by which it was known or self-described. Information disseminated April 30, 1952."

Please add the alternative name of the organization to your copies of the Attorney General's current list of organizations.

MEMORANDUM April 29, 1953

TO : Heads of Departments and Agencies

FROM : The Attorney General

SUBJECT: Designation of Organizations in connection with the Federal Employee Security Program

Executive Order No. 10450 establishing security requirements for government employees provides that the Department of Justice shall furnish to the heads of departments and agencies the information described in Paragraph 3 of Part III of Executive Order No. 9835. In accordance with this provision the organizations listed herein which were previously designated pursuant to Paragraph 3 of Part III of Executive Order No. 9835 are hereby redesignated, such redesignations to be operative upon the effective date of Executive Order No. 10450. In the interim the designations made pursuant to Executive Order No. 9835 continue in effect.

In promulgating Executive Order No. 10450 the President has reiterated the principle that all persons seeking the privilege of employment or privileged to be employed in the departments and agencies of the Government shall be adjudged by minimum standards and by procedures which are mutually consistent among the departments and agencies of the Federal Government. Membership in, affiliation with or sympathetic association with, any organization designated pursuant to this Executive Order is but one of the factors by which a department or agency shall reach its determination and, as provided in Section 8, is one of the matters concerning which information shall be developed as to whether the employment or retention in employment in the Federal service of the person being investigated is clearly consistent with the interests of the national security.

Mrs. M. E. Tilly
Southern Regional Council, Inc.
63 Auburn Avenue, N.E. - Room 432
Atlanta 3, Georgia

Dear Mrs. Tilly:

In response to you letter of July 27, I have asked Mr. Trevor Thomas, of the Friends Committee on Legislation, to send you appropriate material immediately in connection with the California Senate Fact Finding Committee on Un-American Activities, together with some background information on this Committee.

I have been unable to obtain a copy of the sheet which you refer to concerning national women's organizations. In my opinion, this sheet has probably been prepared by the Minute Women, or some group corresponding to it in California, and lists, not only organizations that have been stamped with the "subversive" label by the Senate Committee, but also any organization brought into the Committee's deliberations in or out of context.

Mr. Thomas is sending you two lengthy reports just published. One is the Seventh Report on Un-American Activities in California, by the Senate Fact Finding Committee. (296 pages) The other is "Opposition to Loyalty" by the Senate Investigating Committee on Education. (200 pages) While, as you will note, these reports are a hodgepodge of fact, heresay, "association", etc., I think they may prove valuable to you in refuting the charges made in the sheets prepared by the Minute Women.

I hope this information proves to be useful to you. If we can be of any further help, please let us know, because we are extremely interested in assisting the Southern Regional Council in every possible way, and because we have a profound admiration for you as an individual.

Sincerely yours,

Fred W Ross

AIR MAIL

I'm not fooled because I've had a chance open to very few Negro Americans. It's true that I've been a laboratory specimen in a great change in organized baseball. I'm proud that I've made good on my assignment to the point where other colored players will find it easier to enter the game and go to the top. But I'm well aware that even this limited job isn't finished yet. There are only three major league clubs with only seven colored players signed up, out of close to 400 major league players on sixteen clubs.

Says Progress Goes On

But a start has been made, and progress goes on, and Southern fans as well as Northern fans are showing that they like the way things are working. And as long as the fans approve, we're going to keep on making progress, until we go the rest of the way in wiping Jim Crow out of American sports.

We are doing this because the American fans are just beginning to understand that a sport, to be a real sport, has got to be contested on the basis of the best man or team winning--and that "best" has got nothing to do with how much brown or red or yellow tint is in a man's skin.

We're going to make progress in other American fields besides baseball if we can get rid of some of the misunderstanding and confusion that the public still suffers from. I know I have a great desire and I think that I have some responsibility for helping to clear up that confusion. As I see it there has been a terrific lot of misunderstanding on this subject of Communists among Negroes in this country, and it's bound to hurt my people's cause unless it's cleared up.

The white public should start toward real understanding by appreciating that every single Negro who is worth his salt is going to resent any kind of slurs and discrimination because of his race, and he's going to use every bit of intelligence, such as he has, to stop it. This has got absolutely nothing to do with what Communists may or may not be trying to do.

And white people must realize that the more a Negro hates Communism because it opposes democracy, the more he is going to hate any other influence that kills off democracy in this country--and that goes for race discrimination in the Army, and segregation on trains and buses, and job discrimination because of religious beliefs or color or place of birth.

"Not Fooling Anyone"

And one other thing the American public ought to understand, if we are to make progress in this matter, is the fact that because it is a Communist who denounces injustice in the courts, police brutality and lynching, when it happens, doesn't change the truth of his charges. Just because Communists kick up a big fuss over race discrimination when it suits their purposes, a lot of people try to pretend that the whole issue is a creation of Communist imagination.

But they are not fooling anyone with this kind of pretense, and talk about "Communists stirring up Negroes to protest" only makes present misunderstanding worse than ever. Negroes were stirred up long before there was a Communist party, and they'll stay stirred up long after the party has disappeared--unless Jim Crow has disappeared by then as well.

I've been asked to express my views on Paul Robeson's statement in Paris tothe effect that American Negroes would refuse to fight in any war against Russia because we love Russia so much. I haven't any comment to make, except that the statement, if Mr. Robeson actually made it, sounds very silly to me. But he has a right to his personal views, and if he wants to sound silly when he expresses them in public, that's his business and not mine. He's still a famous ex-athlete and a great singer and actor.

I understand that there are some few Negroes who are members of the Communist party and in event of war with Russia they would probably act just as any other Communists would. So would members of other minority and majority groups.

There are some colored pacifists, and they'd act just like pacifists of any other color. And most Negroes--and Italians and Irish and Jews and Swedes and Slavs and other Americans--would act just as all these groups did in the last war. They'd do their best to help their country stay out of war; if unsuccessful, they'd do their best to help their country win the war--against Russia or any other enemy that threatens us.

Not as "Any Defense"

This isn't said as any defense of the Negro's loyalty, because any loyalty that needs defense can't amount to much in the long run. And no one has ever questioned my race's loyalty except a few people who don't amount to very much.

What I'm trying to get across is that the American public is off on the wrong foot when it begins to think of radicalism in terms of any special minority group. It is thinking of this sort that gets people scared because one Negro, speaking to a Communist group in Paris, threatens an organized boycott by fifteen million members of his race.

I can't speak for any fifteen million people any more than any other one person can, but I know that I've got too much invested for my wife and child and myself in the future of this country, and I and other Americans of many races and faiths have too much invested in our country's welfare, for any of us to throw it away because of a siren song sung in bass.

I am a religious man. Therefore I cherish America where I am free to worship as I please, a privilege which some countries do not give. And I suspect that nine hundred and ninety-nine out of almost any thousand colored Americans you meet will tell you the same thing.

But that doesn't mean that we're going to stop fighting race discrimination in this country until we've got it licked. It means that we're going to fight it all the harder because our stake in the future is so big. We can win our fight without the Communists and we don't want their help.

THE GREAT AMERICAN EPIC

The great American epic, if it is ever written, will be the story of "America's Tenth Man," the Negro. No other phase of our history embodies so much of dramatic interest. Every emotion is there, raised to its highest power; every experience in humanity's arduous climb upward from the clod. The extremes of tragedy and comedy, love and hate, cruelty and kindness, walk hand in hand through its pages. Faith shines star-like amid its gloom, and paeans born of pain sing through its darkest nights.

And what amazing progress! From the first century to the twentieth at a single step! Religion, language, literature, mechanical skill, commerce, citizenship—the slow gains of two thousand years—encompassed in a lifetime. Where else in all history is there anything like it? Well may James Weldon Johnson sing in the National Negro Anthem:

"Stony the road we trod, bitter the chastening rod
Felt in the days when hope had died,
Yet with a steady beat, have not our weary feet
Come to the place for which our fathers sighed?
We have come over a way that with tears has been watered,
We have come treading our path through the blood of the slaughtered,

Out from the gloomy past till now we stand at last
Where the white gleam of our bright star is cast."

Immortal the genius who shall compass that incomparable Odyssey and make it live again!

Not in itself alone is the Negro's story significant, but equally so in the history of the Nation. No other phase of American life has so profoundly affected all its other phases, economic, political, social, religious. Eliminate the Negro and the problems incident to his presence here, and our history, our politics, our social and economic patterns would be very different from what they are. So we could not ignore this subject if we would. The only question is whether we shall deal with it wisely and constructively.

Foreword

Problems of Human Adjustment

It is hard enough for people to get along together when they are members of the same family. Those of different families find it a greater problem and when another nationality or race is involved it is more difficult still. This, it seems, is due to the fact that people do not so readily understand those who are different from them, that they tend to be suspicious or fearful of those whom they do not understand, and finally that they foolishly assume that those who differ from them must necessarily be inferior.

The United States has sometimes been called the "melting pot" of the world, which means that our population is made up of many nationalities and races. Among this conglomerate population there are many differences, much misunderstanding, more or less "looking down" upon one another by the various groups, and not a little suspicion and hostility. So, while this mixture is probably an element of strength, at the same time it creates numerous population problems.

In the East there is the problem of the "foreign born"—millions of people of foreign birth, speaking various languages, and largely unaccustomed to American institutions. Their assimilation into American life and citizenship constitutes a real problem. On the West Coast there is the problem of some 200,000 Orientals — Chinese, Japanese, and Koreans. These are people of a different race and culture; they work hard and live more cheaply than Americans, hence they are keen competitors; they cannot readily be assimilated. While this group is relatively small, people have sometimes become excited about it and made it the center of heated political controversy. In the Southwest there is another population group that is not yet adjusted. This is composed of a million Mexicans, most of them laborers and agricultural workers. Because of various handicaps, they are often an exploited and neglected element in the population.

For two hundred years the South's most serious population problems have centered about the Negro. Many of these are still with us, unsolved and challenging — problems of justice in the courts, protection of life and property, education, health, economic status, agriculture, civil and political rights. The wise solution of these problems is not a matter of justice only, but equally one of self-interest and patriotism. Only an intelligent, right-minded citizenship can meet this challenge. It is of the utmost importance, therefore, that the most serious attention be given to this question, so that in the future it may be handled more wisely than in the past and with less loss and greater advantage to all concerned. It is with that in view that this brief factual study has been prepared.

I. THE DARK CONTINENT

Africa has been called the "Dark Continent":

1. Because it is a land of dark peoples.
2. Because its interior remained so long unexplored.

These facts open the way to the discussion of two important subjects:

1. The question of human origin and racial differentiation.
2. The effect of African environment upon culture and civilization.

Here we have a continent of dark (that is, heavily pigmented) people. How does this happen? Why are the Africans so different in color from Caucasians? Were they created that way, or did they later become dark; and if the latter, why?

No, the Africans were not created different from other people; nor is their color the result of some curse or ill fortune. It is only the natural response to nature's law of selection and survival.

Science and theology agree that all branches of the human race had a common origin (a "monogenetic" origin, the scientists would say). They all came from the same stock; they are members of one family, the human family. On this point there is general agreement, whatever differences there may be as to the process of creation.

The different branches of this human family have developed decided variations in skin color (pigmentation), hair, features, and stature. Their likenesses, however, are much more numerous and fundamental than their differences. The human framework, the vital organs, the life functions of all races follow one identical pattern. They are all "of one blood," according to the Bible. So also says the scientist, for by his most delicate tests he can find no difference between the blood of red men and yellow, black men and white.

This common likeness is intellectual and spiritual, no less than physical. Man, says the Bible, is "made in the image of God"; not physically, we suppose, but in the powers of reason, discrimination, (conscience, "knowing good and evil"), and freedom of choice. Science also recognizes in man, irrespective of race and culture, these same intellectual and spiritual qualities that set him completely apart from all other created things.

Here is the basis for serious thought regarding the essential worth of every human being, the obligation of mutual respect and consideration, and the right of each person to maximum opportunity to be and to do the best of which he is capable.

NATURAL SELECTION AND SURVIVAL

But if all branches of the human race had a common origin, how does it happen that they now differ so widely in appearance and culture? The answer is much simpler than one might suppose:

1. It is generally believed that the original home of the race was somewhere in Southwest Asia. From that center groups migrated from time to time in various directions and into widely different environments as to climate, soil, food supply, geographical conditions, etc. Each group inevitably was affected by the conditions into which it went. These effects would become more marked as time went on, and at last might become fixed as racial characteristics.

2. Another factor operating to the same end was the well-known "law of natural selection," or "the survival of the fit." This means simply that those individuals whose characteristics were best adapted to the environment would have the best chance to survive, while those least fitted to the environment would tend to drop out. Thus the law of natural selection, working steadily through the ages, would preserve certain characteristics and eliminate others. In this way it would finally develop distinct racial types.

Under the summer sun, for example, one either tans or sunburns. Which is better? To tan, of course, because a coat of tan means that nature has sent into the skin an extra amount of pigmentation as a protection against the heat. To sunburn, on the other hand, is unpleasant, dangerous, sometimes even fatal. It is easy to see, then, that in a tropical climate those born with most pigmentation (that is, those darkest in color) would have the best chance to live and reproduce, while those less pigmented would have a poorer chance. So, through the ages there would be a steady selection of the darker types for survival and a steady disappearance of the lighter types. This would lead at length to the development of a heavily pigmented or colored race. There can be little doubt that this is just what happened in Africa. We see, then, that the Negro's dark skin was not a curse, nor even a misfortune. On the contrary, it was a distinct advantage in the environment in which he found himself.[1]

A biology teacher suggests that the Negro's kinky hair may possibly be explained in the same way; it encloses more air pockets than straight hair and therefore is a better insulator against heat. If we knew enough about biology and about the past history of the various races, we might find in this law of selection the explanation of most racial differences.

3. A third factor which doubtless has played a part in race differentiation, though just how large a part we cannot know, is that of biological mutation. This means the appearance from time to time, without any known reason, of entirely new characteristics. Unlike acquired characteristics, which most biologists believe are not transmissible, mutated characteristics become fixed and are passed on from generation to generation.

CIVILIZATION RETARDED

But would the development of a dark-skinned race be the only result of tropical African environment? No indeed. Culture, civilization and progress also would be profoundly affected.

In a tropical climate one feels less disposed to enterprise and exertion. Indeed, it is necessary to go slow in order to survive. Again, little exertion is required in a climate where food is plentiful (fruit, fish and game), housing practically unnecessary, and clothing burdensome and unhealthful. For all these reasons the natives would go slow and civilization would be retarded.

Would the geography of Africa also be a retarding influence? Decidedly so, because unfavorable to the wide human contacts essential to the growth of civilization.[2]

The Sahara Desert is a "zone of fire" across the North; the smooth coastline affords few harbors; access through the rivers is blocked by

[1]This hypothesis, advanced by many scientists (See Jean Finot, "Race Prejudice," pages 97 ff; R. R. Marrett, "Anthropology," page 84; E. G. Conklin, "The Direction of Human Evolution," pages 11 and 12; A. C. Haddon, "The Races of Man," page 9; Jerome Dowd, "The Negro in American Life," page 3), assumes that the original color of the human species was light. Others think it was probably dark, and that branches of the race going to or remaining in tropical countries retained their pigmentation, while those migrating to colder regions gradually became lighter through the operation of the same law of selection and survival.

[2]There is opportunity here for a stimulating discussion: How do individuals and nations become civilized, anyway? Assume that a child of highly civilized parents is separated from them in babyhood and grows up without ever seeing a human being (marooned on a desert island, say), would it become civilized? Why not? Is the same true in large measure of national civilizations? How much of our American civilization have we developed here? How much have we inherited from earlier civilizations—Greek, Roman, Jewish — and from other lands? Take away these contributions, and what do we have left?

cataracts and falls; the jungle, infested with fever and hostile wild life, is discouraging to travel. So for ages the Africans were isolated, segregated, cut off from the currents of civilization flowing strong in more accessible parts of the world. Thus the development of the race was inevitably retarded.

Closely parallel was the case of the Britons when Caesar invaded England in 55 B.C. The conqueror, representing the rich civilization of Rome, thought the benighted Britons an inherently inferior people. Was he right? No; 2000 years of opportunity have shown that he was wrong. What was the trouble? The Britons, living far out at the edge of the world, were merely the victims of unfavorable environment, needing only a chance to prove their ability. Now that the African at last is beginning to have his chance, will he also prove his ability, as the Britons did? Time alone can tell. Already the race is making notable progress, and many individuals are emerging whose attainments give ground for encouragement.

NATIVE AFRICAN CULTURE

Though greatly retarded, the culture of the native African reveals much that is interesting and encouraging. Note their iron work (some believe the Africans were the first to smelt iron and fashion implements of usefulness and beauty); their pottery, carving, and weaving; their music and dancing;[1] their organized family and community life; their orderly tribal governments; their folklore (the famous tales of Uncle Remus are largely paraphrases of African folk stories); their universal belief in God; their sharing with one another.

Early travelers to Africa wrote of great kingdoms and well-kept cities (Ghana, Mell, Songhay, Dahomey, Ashanti). These were later wiped out by invasion from the North. Missionaries and explorers speak in high terms of the African's innate courtesy, hospitality and faithfulness to friends. The story of Livingstone's bearers, who, undirected, carried his dead body on their shoulders 1400 miles to the sea that it might be sent home for burial, ranks high among the world's golden deeds. (See page 7).

The American anthropologist, Dr. Franz Boas, credits present-day Africans with "cultural achievements of no mean order," including "the power of organization, homely practical philosophy, sound feeling and judgment."

"They have rules of conduct, including regulations regarding marriage and divorce, inheritance of property, division of labor, the waging of war, educational procedure, and religious observance," says a Southern writer, Ina C. Brown.[2] Miss Brown is a Texas girl who traversed the heart of Africa from coast to coast. She testifies that everywhere, though practically without protection, she was treated with unfailing respect and consideration, and was deeply impressed with the innate courtesy and kindliness of the natives.

RELIGION UNIVERSAL

Among the natives of Africa, says Wilson, "the belief in one Supreme Being is universal. Any system of atheism strikes them as too absurd and preposterous to require a denial."[3]

After forty years' observation as a missionary in Africa, Dr. Nassau bears the same witness. "Among all the degraded ones whom I have met," he says, "I have seen or heard none whose religious thought was only a superstition. . . . I have yet to be asked, 'Who is God?' "[4]

[1] Africa has been called "the continent of music." The beat of jazz that dominates the radio around the world is the obvious echo of the drums of Africa.

STRANGE CUSTOMS

To be sure, the Africans have many strange, primitive customs, some of them savage and cruel. Before we judge them, however, we might remember the human sacrifices of the Britons of Caesar's day; the middle-age torture and slaughter of heretics by Catholics and Protestants; the burning of thousands of "witches" in comparatively modern Europe; the hanging of twenty such in Salem, Massachusetts, a few generations ago. What African custom could be more savage than some present-day lynchings; what tribal conflict half so destructive as modern war?

Besides, many African customs which seem strange to us are logical responses to African environment — scant clothing for example. Others are no more illogical than some of our own. Why, for example, are nose rings savage, and earrings civilized?

NO GROUND FOR PESSIMISM

Many of those who know the African best in his own country are wholly optimistic as to his native ability. Sir Gordon Guggisberg, for years the British Governor of the Gold Coast, says on this point:

"If we provide the natives with the means of getting a really first-class education, would they be capable of taking their place alongside Europeans? I emphatically reply, 'Yes, certainly.' The reason of my affirmation is that many Africans have already attained to this, and that by their own efforts."[1]

To the same effect Sir Thomas Graham, a South African judge of many years' experience, is quoted as saying that "he had formed the definite conviction that there was no substantial difference in natural ability between the white and the black."[2]

Similar testimony is given by Joyce Cary, after fifteen years spent in the British Colonial Service in Nigeria. In his recent book, "The Case for African Freedom," Mr. Cary says:

"That the African is capable of equal education and responsibility with Europeans is beyond argument to anyone who has known real Africans."

Dr. Mabel Carney, of Teachers College, Columbia University, wrote after a visit to East Africa (Rural America, April 1927):

"The amazing possibilities, educability and progress of African peoples! Let no one who wishes to find proof of the permanent inferiority of colored races go to Africa, for he will not find what he seeks!"

FROM CHITAMBO'S VILLAGE TO THE SEA

A Saga of Darkest Africa

"Brought by faithful hands over land and sea, here rests
David Livingstone,
Missionary, Traveler, Philanthropist."

This inscription on a black marble slab in Westminster Abbey suggests but faintly a story of heroic devotion that deserves to be recorded among the world's golden deeds. In May, 1873, after years of missionary exploration in Central and South Africa, David Livinstone's worn body was able to go no further. So his native attendants hurriedly built for him a hut in the village of Chief Chitambo, near the shores of Lake Bangweolo, in Central Africa. There, at dawn, a few days later, they found him kneeling in death.

One might have expected that these simple children of nature, left without direction or hope of further employment, would speedily inter the body and hurry away to their distant homes. Instead they held a council. They decided that every effort should be made to carry their master's body to the coast, that it might be sent back to England.

They collected all Livingstone's personal belongings, his instruments and his notes, and carefully packed them for transit. They removed the internal organs and buried them, erecting a marker over the spot. For fourteen days they dried the body in the sun. Then it was carefully wrapped in cloth and inclosed in a large piece of bark. Over the whole a sheet of sailcloth was sewed and the package was lashed to a pole.

When all was ready, two men shouldered the burden and the little band set out on the long, perilous journey. Soon they were stricken with jungle fever and had to put down their load. When the disease abated they went on again. They crossed a river four miles wide. They fought their way through a hostile village. They came to a tribe that refused to permit the passage of a dead body, but by a ruse they were able to proceed.

At last, in February, 1874, the little procession reached the East coast and the sacred burden, which for nine months they had borne on their shoulders and guarded with their lives, was put on board a ship bound for England. Then back into the jungle the brave band went, without other reward than the memory of their great and good friend, and the knowledge that they had been faithful to the last.

II. THE NEGRO IN AMERICA

Negroes first came to the New World not in 1619, as commonly supposed, but with the first explorers more than a hundred years earlier. Ancient manuscripts mention Alonzo Pietro, "il Negro," as the pilot of the Nina, one of Columbus' ships. There were Negroes with Balboa when he discovered the Pacific in 1513; with Cortez in Mexico; with DeSoto when he explored the Mississippi Valley in 1539; with Menendez when he founded St. Augustine in 1565. It is said that the second Old World settler of what is now Alabama was a Negro member of DeSoto's party who liked the country and settled among the Indians. The first explorer of what is now New Mexico and Arizona was Estavanico, a Negro who came from Spain with Narvaez in 1527.

SLAVERY INTRODUCED

The first permanent planting of slavery on the North American continent took place at Jamestown in 1619, when a Dutch ship landed twenty Negroes. These were sold as slaves, or perhaps as "indentured servants," according to the custom of the times. We know that some of the twenty became free after serving a time, while others were permanently enslaved. Negro slavery was legally recognized in Virginia in 1661, and grew rapidly after the further importation of white indentured servants was prohibited in 1688.* By 1715 there were 58,850 slaves in the colonies; in 1775 a half million; in 1800 a million.

Did space permit, a study of many aspects of the slave trade would be interesting: The "three-cornered traffic" in molasses, rum, and slaves; slave raids in Africa; the "middle passage" in the crowded holds of slave ships; the American auction block; separation of families, etc.

Helpful also would be a discussion of the conditions and effects of slavery. Its best aspects: paternal personal interest on the part of owners, loyalty and faithful service in response. Its worst: absentee ownership and overseer control. Its advantages and disadvantages to master and to slave.

ALL SECTIONS RESPONSIBLE

In contemplating the evils of slavery it is well to remember that all sections of the country, North as well as South, must share the responsibility. If slaveholding centered largely in the South (because it was more profitable there), the slave trade centered in New England. Rhode Island, for example, built 103 slave ships in ten years; in 1770 that state alone had 150 ships engaged in the slave trade. When slavery became a divisive issue, leading at last to war, the extremists on one side were just as unreasonable as those on the other and equally responsible for the resulting tragedy. However, it is not necessary at this distance to "blame" anybody for what happened. It is just as well, and much kinder, to assume that most people meant well, on whichever side they were, and that the wrongs they did were mistakes of judgment rather than of intent.

VAST ECONOMIC ASSET

Slave labor was particularly profitable in the production of tobacco, cotton, rice, and sugar. From early times these crops have been pouring into the South millions of dollars annually. Exports of tobacco: 1618, twenty pounds; 1639, 1,500,000 pounds; 1773, 53,000,000 pounds. Cotton

*It is interesting to remember that slavery has been a common human phenomenon, by no means limited to Negroes. Some of ancient Rome's most brilliant scholars were slaves; Britons taken captive by the Romans were sold into slavery; many of Virginia's early settlers were indentured white servants; the colony of Georgia was founded as a refuge for debt slaves.

production: 1810, 85,000,000 pounds; doubled every ten years during the next three decades. By 1840 the South was producing two-thirds of the world's cotton supply. In 1850 slave labor produced agricultural products valued at $136,000,000, a tremendous sum for those days. In 1929, Negro farmers produced crops valued at 646 millions. Mississippi Negroes alone that year grew 1,234,000 bales of cotton, which brought into the state more than $100,000,000. These figures indicate something of the vast economic contribution which Negroes have made to the development and prosperity of the South.

Negro slaves furnished also a large part of the South's skilled labor, doing most of the blacksmithing, wagon making, and iron work; building its colonial mansions; manning its factories, machine shops, and mills; in some cases running its railroads. Many slaves bought their time from their masters, hired themselves out, and thus made enough money to buy their freedom.

Further importation of slaves was prohibited by Congress in 1807. Smuggling continued for several decades, however, and the number of Negroes in the country increased to 2,300,000 in 1830, and to 4,441,000 by 1860.

SOUTHERN SENTIMENT FOR EMANCIPATION

Many Southern leaders early saw the danger involved in slavery. Jefferson said: "I tremble for my country when I reflect that God is just"; George Washington: "I can already foresee that nothing but the rooting out of slavery can perpetuate the existence of our Union."

In 1832 the Virginia Legislature came within one vote of abolishing slavery. Many kindly masters freed their slaves and emancipation societies sprang up in all parts of the South.

The African Colonization Society was organized in the hope of freeing slaves and sending them back to Africa. This Society was endorsed by several legislatures and received the moral and financial support of great numbers of Southern people. Out of this movement came the colony of Liberia, which still exists as the only independent Negro republic in the world.

CONTROVERSY CONCERNING SLAVERY

From 1820 to 1860 the history of the nation was dominated by the long and bitter controversy concerning slavery and its extension. Highlights in the political aspects of this struggle were: Missouri Compromise, 1820; Annexation of Texas, 1845; Fugitive Slave Law, 1850; Kansas-Nebraska Bill, 1854; Dred Scott Decision, 1857.

All this time the abolition movement in the North was gaining in numbers and intensity. Intemperance and heat characterized both sides, as in the political struggle. The whole issue was thrown into the realm of emotion, making rational solution impossible.

Civil War was the result; a vast and needless sacrifice of life, treasure, and national unity. Four million men were engaged; 600,000 were killed. A great national debt was piled up, and there was vast property loss. The South was left prostrate, bankrupt and desolate. A political cleavage was created that still continues.

Might patience and reason on either side have found a better way? Emancipation of slavery in England was achieved by purchase in 1833. Would not this method have been fairer to the South? Would it have been more or less expensive? What of the after effects?*

*An excellent opportunity to discuss the effectiveness or futility of war as a means of adjusting human differences. An interesting sidelight: Only twenty per cent of the Southern people were slave holders; slavery contrary to the interests of the other eighty per cent, who largely made up the Confederate armies. Another: The Confederate Conscription Act of October 11, 1862, specifically exempted from military service owners and overseers of as many as twenty slaves.

A RECORD OF RARE DEVOTION

In connection with the Civil War one cannot overlook the remarkable loyalty to trust manifested by the Negroes in the South during that tragic period. Says the noted Virginia author, Thomas Nelson Page: "No race ever behaved better than the Negroes behaved during the war. Not only were there no massacres and no outbreaks, but even the amount of defection was not large. Not only did they remain loyal, but they were nearly always faithful to every trust that had been confided to them." To the same effect spoke the eloquent Georgian, Henry W. Grady, in a tribute that deserves to be immortalized. Said he:

"When the master, going to a war in which slavery was involved, said to his slave, 'I leave my home and loved ones in your charge,' the tenderness between man and master stood disclosed. And when the slave held that charge sacred through storm and temptation, he gave new meaning to faith and loyalty."*

EMANCIPATION

The Emancipation Proclamation, a war measure, was issued on January 1, 1863, setting free all slaves within territories loyal to the Confederacy.

The Thirteenth Amendment to the Constitution became effective December 18, 1865, and made emancipation universal.

Here was an exceedingly dangerous situation: More than four million slaves, most of them illiterate, suddenly set free without resources, experience, or training in self-direction; suddenly deprived of the economic security of slavery and thrust out on their own responsibility.

Yet there were no outbreaks, no serious disorders, no efforts to get revenge, no "reign of terror" such as often accompany revolution. Said Confederate General John B. Gordon, "No other race relieved from servitude under such circumstances would have behaved so well." It is to the great credit of both races that, with surprising facility and a minimum of disorder, former masters and slaves made new adjustments and set out together to rebuild the South.

RECONSTRUCTION

Reconstruction, everybody admits, was a period of tragic blunders and grave injustice. Says a noted Federal officer, General Samuel Armstrong, "The Reconstruction measures were a bridge of wood over a river of fire." It is only fair to recognize, however, that primary responsibility for the wrongs of Reconstruction rests not upon the newly-freed Negroes, but upon their white leaders. Strictly speaking there was no period when the South was "controlled by Negroes," or "under Negro rule."

Though Negro voters outnumbered the whites in five Southern states, in every state these Negro voters elected white governors; in every state but one the legislatures they chose were predominantly white, three to one, five to one, even ten to one. Graft there doubtless was, in abundance, but we can well believe with Merriam ("The Negro and the Nation") that "most of the plunder seems to have gone into the pockets of knaves of the superior race."

It is interesting to note that of the sixteen Negroes sent to Congress during the Reconstruction period a number were college graduates, educated in the North and abroad. In his history of the United States, Rhodes says of a Negro member of the Mississippi Legislature: "John R. Lynch was a credit to his race and in 1872 made an impartial and dignified speaker of the House." In 1873 Lynch was given a public testimonial by Republicans and Democrats, and the leading white newspaper, the Jackson Clarion,

*For complete quotation of Grady's tribute see "America's Tenth Man," pages 8 and 9.

said of him: "His bearing in office had been so proper, and his rulings in such marked contrast to the partisan conduct of the ignoble whites of his party who have aspired to be leaders of the blacks, that the conservatives cheerfully joined in the testimonial."

The Reconstruction governments, bad as they were, rendered at least one great service: They established in each state a genuine public school system, providing for "separate but equal" opportunities for the children of the two races. This is perhaps the most important single step ever taken in the South.

PROGRESS SINCE EMANCIPATION

Of the Negro since emancipation many authorities have said that no other race in history ever made so great progress in the same length of time. Following are some highlights of this story:

Property owned by Negroes:	1865	1930
Homes owned	12,000	700,000
Farms owned	———	181,016
Farms operated	20,000	882,850
Aggregate wealth, estimated	$20,000,000	$2,000,000,000

In 1934 the Negroes of Georgia paid taxes on 1,331,418 acres of land, assessed at $9,543,452, and on city property assessed at $20,184,142. In 1935 those of Virginia paid taxes on 1,864,030 acres of land assessed at $30,847,-370 and on city property assessed at $26,683,639. Negro land ownership in 1936 was estimated at twenty million acres, an area about equal to that of fifive New England states.[1]

In 1865 Negroes owned few business enterprises. Today they conduct 70,000 businesses in 200 lines. These include 25,000 retail stores; 1,500 factories making fifty-five different products; 23 banks capitalized at $2,000,000; 44 insurance companies with 1,600,000 policies and $300,000,-000 of insurance in force; 300 newspapers and magazines.

The census of 1930 lists 1200 Negro lawyers, 3800 physicians, 1700 dentists, 5000 trained nurses; 4000 actors; 10,000 musicians; 56,000 teachers. "Who's Who in America" in 1937 contained the biographies of a hundred Negroes who have attained distinction in education, the professions, and business.[1]

The 1930 census lists 5,500,000 Negroes as gainfully employed in the United States, or 59 per cent of all those ten years of age and over.[2] These were in almost every type of industry, skilled and unskilled. Agriculture employed 1,987,000; domestic service 1,576,000; manufacturing and mechanical industries 1,024,000; transportation 397,000.[1]

EDUCATIONAL PROGRESS

Before emancipation the education of Negroes was prohibited in many states and little attention was paid to it anywhere. So, when set free in 1865, ninety per cent of the Negroes were illiterate. Schools were immediately begun under government auspices and Negroes, old and young, showed great eagerness to learn. Within five years 200,000 former slaves were enrolled in these schools.

Then came the state public school systems, feeble at first but steadily improving. In 1936 there were 24,000 public schools for Negroes, enrolling 2,400,000 colored children, or 82 per cent of all between the ages of five and seventeen. Of this number 188,000 were in high school grades. This was nine times as many as there were in high school in 1917. What does this increase indicate as to public policy; as to Negro ambition? Meantime illiteracy has declined, decade by decade, from 90 per cent in 1860 to 80 per cent, 70, 57, 44, and on down to 16.3 per cent in 1930. The figure for 1940, not yet announced, will doubtless be considerably lower still.

[1]1940 Census figures not yet available.
[2]The corresponding figure for native whites was 47 per cent.

FORTY-FIVE THOUSAND IN COLLEGE

The first college for Negroes was established by the Presbyterians in Pennsylvania in 1854. In the next two decades a score of similar institutions were established in the South by the Methodists, Baptists, and Congregationalists. Later all the Southern states established state colleges for Negroes. There are now 109 Negro colleges with 45,000 students. In addition, 2,500 Negro students are enrolled in other colleges. About 5,000 a year are awarded college degrees. Two hundred Negroes have won the Ph.D. degree and about the same number have been elected to Phi Beta Kappa. Tuskegee Institute, established by Booker T. Washington, is known around the world for its unique contribution to educational theory and practice.

Negroes have made many important inventions and have been granted thousands of patents. Norbert Rilleaux invented the vacuum pan for refining sugar; J. E. Matzeliger, the shoe lasting machine now in general use; Elijah McCoy, the lubricating cup so often seen on machinery; Granville Woods, numerous electrical devices which have been sold to the great telephone and electric companies.

Many other notable achievements might be cited to the credit of the race. Matthew Henson, who accompanied Peary on all his Arctic expeditions, is the only living American who ever set foot on the North Pole. Dr. Daniel Hale Williams, of Chicago, was the first American surgeon to operate successfully on the human heart. George Carver's fame as an agricultural chemist is nation-wide. Jesse Owens was the outstanding winner in the last Olympic Games. These and others too numerous for mention come readily to mind.

CULTURAL CONTRIBUTIONS

Though greatly handicapped by slavery and its aftermath, Negroes have made notable contributions to the culture of America. Perhaps chief of these is their distinctive music, the Spirituals or folk songs, and the various forms of syncopation now so popular. Marion Anderson, Roland Hayes, and Paul Robeson are ranked internationally among the greatest living singers; Dett, Dawson, Still, and others are recognized as talented composers; Negro conductors and orchestras are widely popular.

To the stage the race has given Bert Williams, Charles Gilpin, Paul Robeson, Richard Harrison, and other popular actors. In painting it is well represented by Henry O. Tanner and Aaron Douglas, and in sculpture by Meta Warrick, Richard Barthe, and Edmonia Lewis. A brief account of the literary contributions of the race will be found in the pages following.

FIVE MILLION CHURCH MEMBERS

When set free Negroes had few churches. They now have more than 42,000 churches with 5,200,000 members, 36,000 Sunday schools enrolling 2,144,000 pupils. Their church property is valued at $205,000,000. They carry on mission work in this country, Africa, South America and the West Indies, and contribute to this work a half million dollars a year.

THE NEGRO AND THE FLAG

Surprising, even spectacular, has been the Negro's record of patriotic service in all the nation's wars.

Crispus Attucks, a Negro, was the first American to fall in the Boston Massacre of March 5, 1770.[1] Peter Salem and Solomon Poor won distinction at the Battle of Bunker Hill; the former is credited with the death of Major Pitcairn, the British commander.[2] Negro troops in the battle of Long Island repelled three desperate assaults and thus saved the American army from capture. In 1771 when Colonel Green was attacked at Point Bridge, Negro troops sacrificed themselves to the last man in his defense.

Writing of the Battle of Monmouth, Bancroft says (Vol. VI, page 142): "Of the revolutionary patriots who on that day periled life for their country, more than 700 black Americans fought side by side with the white." General Lafayette praised the Negro troops who served under General Green. Austin Dabney, a Georgia Negro who served with distinction under Elijah Clarke, received a pension from the government and a grant from the state legislature. A South Carolina slave rendered such service that the legislature liberated his wife and children. Altogether about three thousand Negroes saw service in the Revolution.

In the War of 1812 Negroes fought gallantly. Commodore Peary spoke highly of "their bravery and conduct in the battle of the lakes." Commander Chauncey mentioned the fifty Negroes aboard his ship as "among his best men." General Jackson publicly praised the conduct of the two Negro regiments which took part in the Battle of New Orleans.

Nearly 200,000 Negro soldiers took part in the Civil War. While most of these were on the Union side, a few regiments were enlisted under the Confederate flag, and many others went to war with their Southern masters. Their greatest service to the Confederacy, however, was the labor of the millions back at home who produced the food necessary to support the armies in the field.

During the Spanish-American War, four regiments of Negro troops in the regular army distinguished themselves at the battles of Guasimas, El Caney, and San Juan Hill.[3]

Three hundred and eighty thousand Negroes were enrolled for service in the World War, of whom 200,000 were sent to France. Two Negroes were the first American soldiers to receive the Croix de Guerre. This decoration was awarded also to four entire Negro regiments, one of which was commanded entirely by Negroes, with the exception of the colonel. Altogether sixty Negro officers were decorated. The conduct of the Negro troops was highly commended by Pershing and other officers.

Though hundreds of American citizens during the World War were accused of disloyalty, and some were convicted and imprisoned, not a single Negro was among the number.

It is interesting to observe that American Negroes have probably had a longer background of residence in this country than have white Americans. This is because a large percentage of the whites are descended from people who came to this country in the last hundred years, while nearly all the Negroes have an American ancestry going back at least 150 years.

III. LITERATURE AND MUSIC

The study of American literature without some consideration of the Negro's contribution is not complete. Furthermore, it is not nearly so interesting as it might be, for the Negro's literary offering, like his music, has unique qualities and values. Possibly because closer to the primitive, it has the imaginative vividness that rarely survives sophistication. From the tragedy and heartbreak of slavery and its aftermath it derives peculiar poignancy and power. It has also unusual human interest, as reflecting the Negro's mental and emotional reaction to his environment.

Unfortunately, the subject can be treated here only in barest outline, with brief life sketches of a few Negro authors and meager quotations from their work.*

PHILLIS WHEATLEY

At eight years of age an African-born slave girl on the auction block in Boston; at twenty acclaimed on two continents as among America's most talented poets — such, in brief, is the story of Phillis Wheatley, in point of time the second American Negro poet, and the first of major consequence.

Brought over with a cargo of slaves in 1761, the little African girl attracted the attention of the wealthy John Wheatley, of Boston, who bought her as a present for his wife. Mrs. Wheatley, a benevolent woman, noted the girl's quick mind and determined to give her a chance. Twelve years later, Phillis published a 124-page volume containing thirty-nine "Poems on Various Subjects," with an introduction by the governor and other prominent people of Massachusetts. About the same time she paid a visit to England, where she was entertained by Lady Huntington and read her verses before members of the nobility.

In response to her poem in his honor, General Washington wrote her a letter commending her "poetic talents" and "elegant lines" and inviting her to call at his headquarters, where, it is said, she was received "with marked courtesy" by Washington and his officers.

Phillis Wheatley's work was in the traditional style of the eighteenth century, and is ranked as among the "best American echoes of the English classicists."

A HUNDRED NEGRO POETS SINCE WHEATLEY

Phillis Wheatley's work begins an interesting story of Africa's contribution to American literature. Handicapped as the race has been — and is — by slavery and its consequences, nevertheless more than a hundred American Negroes have published volumes of verse, most of it pleasing, some of it of high order. After Phillis Wheatley, the next well-known name in the list is that of Paul Laurence Dunbar, who came on the scene a hundred years later. In the intervening century, however, there appeared a number of minor Negro poets. Of these we mention only one:

*Most of the material appearing here is quoted from "Singers in the Dawn," an attractive 24-page anthology of Negro poetry, published and for sale at 10 cents per copy by Conference on Education and Race Relations, Atlanta. For further study of this subject the following are recommended: "The Book of American Negro Poetry," James Weldon Johnson; "Negro Poets and Their Poems," R. T. Kerlin; "Caroling Dusk," Countee Cullen; "Anthology of Verse by American Negroes," White and Jackson; "Anthology of American Negro Literature," V. F. Calverton; "Early Negro American Writers," Benjamin Brawley; "Readings from Negro Authors," Cromwell, Turner and Dykes; "Negro Poetry and Drama," Sterling Brown.

A RHYMING JANITOR

George Moses Horton, a slave employed as janitor at the University of North Carolina in the eighteen-hundred-twenties, used to write love letters and verses for the students to send to their sweethearts. For these he received twenty-five or fifty cents each. In 1829, his white friends published a little volume of his poems called "The Hope of Liberty," which they vainly tried to sell for enough to buy his freedom. Horton's memory has become one of the traditions of the University.

PAUL LAURENCE DUNBAR

Born June 27, 1872, in Dayton, Ohio, of poor parents formerly slaves, Paul Dunbar began writing verse in his grammar school days, edited his school paper, graduated from high school in 1891, and published his first volume of poems, "Oak and Ivy," two years later at the age of twenty-one. His second book, "Majors and Minors," published in 1895, attracted the attention of William Dean Howells, who gave it a favorable review. This introduced Dunbar to the literary world. His third volume, "Lyrics of Lowly Life," with an introduction by Howells, won the author national recognition. This was followed by four other volumes from 1896 to 1905. His collected poems, four hundred of them, were brought out by Dodd, Mead and Company in 1918.

Though Dunbar was never robust and died of tuberculosis at the age of thirty-four, he still takes first rank among American Negro poets. While best known for his poems in Negro dialect (a medium which he often employed because of its popular appeal), much of his work, perhaps the best of it, is in conventional English. Following is one of his best-known selections:

LIFE

A crust of bread and a corner to sleep in,
A minute to smile and an hour to weep in,
A pint of joy to a peck of trouble,
And never a laugh but the moans come double:
  And that is life!

A crust and a corner that love makes precious
With the smile to warm and the tears to refresh us;
And joy seems sweeter when cares come after,
And a moan is the finest of foils for laughter:
  And that is life!

A KENTUCKY SCHOOL TEACHER

Joseph S. Cotter, born at Bardstown, Ky., Feb. 2, 1861, quit school after the third grade; was laborer, factory hand and teamster until twenty-two; ambitious night school student for two terms; then school teacher, and finally high school principal in Louisville. Writer of verse and folk stories and author of several books. Father of the brilliant but short-lived young poet, Joseph Cotter, Jr.

GEORGE M. McCLELLAN

George M. McClellan, born at Belfast, Tenn., 1860, was educated at Fisk University and Hartford Theological Seminary. "A gentle poet of nature, of the seasons, of birds and flowers and woodland scenes." A collection of his verse, "The Path of Dreams," was published in 1916. His poem "The Feet of Judas" evidences a great soul and a sound philosophy. Two of the five stanzas are quoted:

Christ washed the feet of Judas!
And thus a girded servant, self-abased,
Taught that no wrong this side the gate of heaven
Was ever too great to wholly be effaced,
And though unasked, in spirit be forgiven.

And so if we have ever felt the wrong
Of trampled rights, of caste, it matters not,
Whate'er the soul has felt or suffered long,
Oh, heart! this one thing should not be forgot:
Christ washed the feet of Judas.

W. E. B. DUBOIS

William E. Burghardt DuBois, born at Great Barrington, Mass., 1868, was educated in the public schools, Fisk University (A.B.), Harvard (A.M. and Ph.D.), and University of Berlin. Teacher at Wilberforce and Atlanta Universities. His famous book, "The Souls of Black Folk," ranks with the best American literature. Much of DuBois' prose is essentially poetic. His one great prose poem, "A Litany of Atlanta, Done at Atlanta in the Day of Death, 1906," was wrung from his soul by the horrors of a race riot in which nearly a score of people, most of them innocent, were killed and wounded. There is hardly a more powerful piece of writing in American literature.

WILLIAM STANLEY BRAITHWAITE

William Stanley Braithwaite, born in Boston, 1878, was largely self-educated. For years he has been nationally recognized, without regard to race, as anthologist, critic and literary authority. Beginning in 1913, he brought out yearly a collection of magazine verse, admittedly the best series of anthologies published in America. Every major library has them. Braithwaite is himself the author of three volumes of poetry.

UP FROM GEORGIA

John Wesley Holloway was born in Meriwether County, Ga., in 1865. His father, a former slave, was one of the first school teachers in Georgia. Young Holloway was educated at Clark University, Atlanta, and at Fisk; became a teacher and then a preacher. Is the author of a volume of verse entitled, "From the Desert," in which he has sought to catch and preserve certain picturesque, but passing, phrases of life in the "Old South."

A HITCH-HIKER AT HARVARD

Edgar Smyth Jones, eager for an education, in 1910 walked hundreds of miles from the South to Harvard University. Camped the first night on Harvard Square in Cambridge and was jailed for vagrancy. The case attracted wide attention. Jones was quickly released and the resulting interest enabled him to bring out a volume of verse.

LESLIE PINCKNEY HILL

Leslie Pinckney Hill was born in Lynchburg, Va., 1880; was educated in the public schools and at Harvard; taught at Tuskegee Institute; is now principal of Cheney (Pa.) Training School for Teachers. His poetic work, says James Weldon Johnson, is "quiet, restrained, scholarly; philosophical, rather than lyrical." He has published two volumes of poems, "The Wings of Oppression" (1921), and "Toussaint L'Ouverture" (1928). His poem "The Teacher" has been widely quoted; two stanzas must suffice here:

Lord, who am I to teach the way
To little children day by day,
So prone myself to go astray? . . .

Lord, if their guide I still must be,
Oh, let the little children see
The teacher leaning hard on Thee.

Alice Dunbar Nelson, widow of Paul Laurence Dunbar, born in New Orleans, was educated in the public schools, Straight College, Cornell, Columbia, and the University of Pennsylvania. Teacher, lecturer, and journalist. Is the author of three volumes of prose and of many uncollected poems.

A VOICE OF PROTEST

Claude McKay was born in Jamaica, British West Indies, 1890, and published a volume of verse before coming to America. Entered Tuskegee Institute at twenty-two. Spent two years at Kansas State College, then went to Harlem, New York, where he made his living as waiter, porter, houseman, and dock-worker, writing all the while. Became a contributor to a number of magazines. Brought out a volume of poems in London in 1920, and published "Harlem Shadows" in this country in 1922. Has spent most of his later years in Europe. McKay is a "poet of rebellion," the spokesman of the protesting post-war group. The following lines were his reaction to a series of race riots in the summer of 1919:

If we must die—let it not be like hogs
  Hunted and penned in an inglorious spot,
While 'round us bark the mad and hungry dogs,
  Making their mock at our accursed lot.
If we must die—oh, let us nobly die,
  So that our precious blood may not be shed
In vain; then even the monsters we defy
  Shall be constrained to honor us though dead!

SONGS OF THE HEART

Georgia Douglas Johnson, a native of Atlanta, a product of its public schools and of Atlanta University, "was the first colored woman after Frances Harper to gain general recognition as a poet. . . . Her poems are songs of the heart written to appeal to the heart." An enthusiastic critic credits her first volume, "The Heart of a Woman" (1918), with "exquisite artistry and infallible poetic content," "perfect lyrical notes and poignant pathos." Two other volumes, "Bronze" (1922), and "An Autumn Love Cycle" (1928), have since appeared. The following quotation is typical of the note of pathos that runs through her work:

I'm folding up my little dreams
  Within my heart tonight,
And praying I may soon forget
  The torture of their sight.

For Time's deft fingers scroll my brow
  With fell relentless art—
I'm folding up my little dreams
  Tonight, within my heart!

"SWIFT TO ITS CLOSE"

Joseph S. Cotter, Jr., born in Louisville, 1895; was a precocious child and had the advantage of his father's library. Entered Fisk University, but soon developed tuberculosis and had to leave. Most of his work was done during the six years of illness which ended fatally in 1919, in his twenty-third year. His one little volume, "The Band of Gideon," is a contribution of genuine poetry. Here is his gentle challenge to his brothers of another race:

Brother, come!
And let us go unto our God.
And when we stand before Him
I shall say—
"Lord, I do not hate,
I am hated.
I scourge no one,
I am scourged.
I covet no lands,
My lands are coveted.
I mock no peoples,
My people are mocked."
And, brother, what shall you say?

ANNE SPENCER

Anne Spencer, born Bramwell, W. Va., 1882; educated at Virginia Seminary, Lynchburg. Now a resident of the latter city. Her writings, though not voluminous, manifest real poetic ability. This is her apostrophe to Paul Laurence Dunbar:

Ah, how poets sing and die!
Make one song and Heaven takes it;
Have one heart and Beauty breaks it;
Chatterton, Shelley, Keats and I—
Ah, how poets sing and die!

STERLING A. BROWN

Sterling A. Brown, born in Washington, D. C., May 1, 1901; educated in city schools, Williams College (A.B. and Phi Beta Kappa), Harvard University (A.M.) Has taught literature in various colleges; now professor in Howard University. His most distinctive poetry is in the picturesque lore and language of the Negro roustabout of the open road.

JONATHAN H. BROOKS

Jonathan H. Brooks, the son of a poor tenant farmer, was born near Lexington, Miss., in 1904. At fourteen his mother sent him to a high school in Jackson, having saved money enough to keep him there four months. There his literary promise was recognized by a prize in a story contest. Then the money failed and it was three years before he could go on with his high school education, which he completed at the age of twenty-one. Following this he graduated from Tougaloo College at Jackson, Miss., and is now a minister. His poems have appeared in many papers, but no collection has been published.

A SINGER OF "THE BLUES"

Langston Hughes, born in Joplin, Mo., February, 1902; Cleveland public schools and Columbia University; extensive travel in Europe and Africa. Is known chiefly for his book "The Weary Blues" and for the unconventionality of his work in thought and style. These few lines are typical:

I, too, sing America.

I am the darker brother.
They send me to eat in the kitchen
When company comes;
But I laugh,
And eat well,
And grow strong.

COUNTEE CULLEN

Countee Cullen, one of the last and best known Negro poets, was born in New York City, May 30, 1903, the son of a Methodist preacher. He was educated in the public schools, in New York University (A.B. and Phi Beta Kappa, 1925), and in Harvard (A.M., 1926). In 1923 and again in 1924 he won second prize, and in 1925, first prize, in the Witter Bynner undergraduate poetry contest open to all the colleges of America and participated in by 700 students representing 300 colleges. At twenty-two he published "Color," a volume of verse that brought him wide recognition. This was followed shortly by a second volume entitled, "Copper Sun." Cullen is essentially a lyric poet, following the classic models. His technique is faultless and his work witty, epigrammatic, intellectual, and richly imaginative. Here is his "Epitaph for a Lady I Know":

She even thinks that up in heaven
  Her class lies late and snores,
While poor black cherubs rise at seven
  To do celestial chores.

JAMES WELDON JOHNSON

James Weldon Johnson was a native of Jacksonville, Fla., graduated from Atlanta University with the degree of A.M.; did three years' graduate work at Columbia University; received honorary degree of Doctor of Literature from Talladega College and Howard University. Was several years principal of a high school in Jacksonville; then was admitted to the bar and practiced law there. Went to New York to collaborate with his brother J. Rosamond Johnson in writing for the light opera stage. Served consulates in Venezuela and Nicaragua. Fourteen years secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. Then professor of literature in Fisk University. Met his death in an auto accident in 1938.

A prolific writer, he was the author of "Fifty Years and Other Poems"; "God's Trombones," a remarkable poetic transcription of typical Negro sermons; "The Book of American Negro Spirituals" (two volumes); "The Book of American Negro Poetry," the most complete anthology in this field; and "Along This Way," an autobiography that attracted wide and favorable attention. His poetic work is unusually mature and some of it ranks with the best in contemporary literature. His "Creation," from "God's Trombones," is a truly great poem that will live, noble in concept and nobly expressed.

In the following challenge to his native country Johnson voices the question which 12,000,000 Negroes are asking:

TO AMERICA

How would you have us—as we are,
  Or sinking 'neath the load we bear?
Our eyes fixed forward on a star?
  Or gazing empty at despair?

Rising or falling? Men or things?
  With dragging pace, or footsteps fleet?
Strong willing sinews in your wings?
  Or tightening chains about your feet?

WRITERS OF NOTABLE PROSE

It is probably fair to rate Booker T. Washington's "Up From Slavery" as the best known Negro contribution to American prose. This simply-told story of the author's remarkable life and work is ranked along with Franklin's autobiography as one of the great American classics. It interests equally the child and the philosopher and has been published around the world in a score of translations. Every library should have a copy.

Next perhaps should be mentioned Dr. DuBois' "Souls of Black Folk" as outstanding in both literary and sociological value. Several important historical volumes have been produced by Benjamin Brawley and Carter G. Woodson. Other books that should not be overlooked are James Weldon Johnson's "Along This Way" and "Negro Americans, What Now?", Charles S. Johnson's "Negro in American Civilization," and R. R. Moton's "What the Negro Thinks."

Negro writers of fiction have yet to achieve a secure place in American literature, but a few have done creditable work in this field. Among these may be mentioned Charles W. Chestnut, Jessie Fauset, Claude McKay, Walter White, and Zora Neal Hurston. Last to achieve distinction in this field is Richard Wright, author of "Native Son." This novel, published in 1940, was selected as a "Book-of-the-Month" and immediately became a best seller. It has since been dramatized.

THE NEGRO SPIRITUAL

The Negro's distinctive music — the Spirituals or folk songs, and the various forms of syncopation now so popular — has probably been his chief contribution to American culture. It represents, too, the only distinct musical contribution that America has made to the world. Some may question the artistry and value of ragtime, jazz, and swing; the fact remains, however, that this type of music dominates today the popular musical taste of the world. It is, of course, distinctly Negroid in origin and goes back in some of its characteristics to the primitive music of Africa.

At the other extreme are the deeply religious Spirituals or folk songs, full of peculiar beauty, pathos, and power. Following is an interpretation of the Spirituals by Dr. Frederick H. Hall of Dillard University, New Orleans, a highly trained and noted director of Negro choirs:

"The Spiritual had its beginning in the heart of the Negro as he labored in the fields of the South. These songs are outbursts of religious fervor and in many cases are influenced by conditions which surrounded the people in whose minds they were born.

"They are called Spirituals, Jubilees, Melodies, Folk Songs. Either name is correct. They are called Jubilees because of the ray of hope that is expressed in each. Regardless of how sad the song may be, or how miserable the conditions surrounding its birth, there is always found in it the hope of a great day of Jubilee when all sadness will be turned into joy. They are called Spirituals because of the deep religious feeling they express. They are called Melodies because of the striking melody built upon a scale that was originated by the slaves. When a new song was born it usually began with a new melody hummed by one person. After the tune was caught, the whole group or congregation would join in, increasing the strength of the melody and adding harmony. These songs are called Folk Songs because they satisfy the well-known scientific definition of that term.

"The Negro Spirituals express a sympathy of feeling between words and music not always found even in the compositions of learned musicians. For instance, the originators of these songs would never have taken words such as 'Nobody Knows De Trouble I See' and set them to a happy tune like 'Every Time I Feel the Spirit.' In every instance words and music harmonize; and herein lies real artistry.

"Some of these songs are sad and some are happier. This is true because of the difference in living conditions of the people who originated them. In different sections there are different interpretations, different words and slightly varying melodies of songs that originally were the same. This is true because at first the songs were not written down, but were carried from place to place in the minds of the Negroes, and very frequently a new condition caused a slight change of the song.

"These songs are deeply religious and should not be sung in such a way as to cause laughter or ridicule. Instrumental accompaniment always spoils the effect of the songs, and sometimes robs them of their identity."

The Spirituals show the character of the people in whose hearts they originated. Though composed in the days of slavery as expressions of the heartache of servitude and the longing for freedom, they reveal no trace of bitterness or revenge, but only the virtues of faith, hope, and love. Perhaps it is this fact that gives the Spirituals the soul-stirring power that has made them popular around the world.

IV. CIVIC PROBLEMS

Of 122,775,046 people in the United States in 1930, Negroes numbered 11,891,143, or a little less than one in ten. These were distributed as follows: In thirteen Southern states, 8,805,636; in other sections, 3,085,508.

Net increase of Negro population 1920 to 1930: In thirteen Southern states, 364,529 — or 5 per cent; in other sections, 1,063,483 — or 63 per cent. The reason: Nearly one million Negroes went North during the prosperous '20s.

The 1940 census showed a total population of 131,669,275, of whom 12,865,518 were Negroes. Of the latter 9,261,792 were in thirteen Southern states (the coast states from Virginia to Texas, plus Kentucky, Tennessee, Arkansas, and Oklahoma), and 3,603,726 were in other sections. During the decade 1930 to 1940 the net increase of Negro population in the South was 456,157, or five per cent, while in the rest of the country the increase was 518,218, or sixteen per cent. The greater increase North was doubtless due to continued migration, though at a diminishing rate.

One interesting result: The six cities having the largest Negro population are all north of the Potomac River.[1]

Most people think Negroes are increasing faster than white people. Instead, they are not even keeping up. The proportion of Negroes in the total population has been growing steadily less for 150 years. In 1790 (the first census) Negroes made up 19.3 per cent of the population, or practically one in five. In 1940 they comprised only 9.7 per cent of the population, not quite one in ten. The proportion of Negroes in the South also has been decreasing rapidly. In 1880 it was 36 per cent, in 1940 only 23.7 per cent. The same trend is found in the various Southern states, as shown by the following table:

PER CENT NEGRO POPULATION

	1900	1930	1940		1900	1930	1940
Mississippi	58.5	50.2	49.2	North Carolina	33	29	27.4
South Carolina	58.3	45.6	42.8	Arkansas	28	25.8	24.7
Louisiana	47.1	36.9	35.9	Tennessee	23.8	18.3	17.4
Georgia	46.7	36.8	34.7	Texas	20.4	14.7	14.4
Alabama	45.2	35.7	34.7	Maryland	19.8	16.9	16.5
Florida	43.7	29.4	27	Delaware	16.6	13.7	13.4
Virginia	35.6	26.8	24.7	Kentucky	13.3	8.6	7.5

Subjects for thought and discussion:

Effects of decreasing proportion of Negroes: Will it make the South's racial problems more serious or less so, as the years go by?

Effects of heavy migration to other sections: Economic, political; on the South, on the Nation.

PROBLEMS OF HEALTH

The birth rate of Negroes is higher than that of white people. Why, then, are they increasing less rapidly? The answer is found in the Negro's high rates of morbidity and mortality (sickness and death). In 1938 the Negro death rate was about 15 per thousand, that of white people 10.8 per thousand. This means that Negroes are dying at a rate nearly 50 per cent higher than white people.[2]

---

[1]These are New York, 457,444 Negroes; Chicago, 277,731; Philadelphia, 250,880; Washington, 187,266; Baltimore, 165,843; Detroit, 149,119.

[2]Though the conditions are still deplorable it is encouraging to note that in recent years Negroes have made great gains in health. Between 1910 and 1930 their death rate per thousand decreased from 24.2 to 16.5, and in ten years their average life span increased from 41 to 46 years. These gains were due to education, increasing emphasis on hygiene and sanitation, and better public health services.

Tuberculosis is one of the commonest diseases among Negroes. Their mortality from this cause is two to five times as high as that of white people. Since this disease is largely preventable and curable, it appears that public health agencies have not given proper attention to its prevalence among colored people.

In 1938 Negro infant mortality (the death of babies under one year of age) was 77 per thousand as compared with 47 for white infants. This was due to unsanitary surroundings; poor medical attention at birth and later (a great number of Negro mothers have no physician at the birth of their children); improper food because of ignorance and poverty; lack of maternal care, since so many Negro mothers have to go out to work.

SUGGESTIONS FOR THOUGHT AND DISCUSSION

Effects upon the community of unfavorable Negro health conditions; loss of time involved; reduced efficiency and producing power; expense of caring for the sick and burying the dead. This loss runs to hundreds of millions a year; much of it, due to preventable illness, could be saved by better public health services. Does the loss fall upon the whole community or upon the Negro only?

Other questions, dealing with the principle of social solidarity and interdependence: Disease germs do not respect the color line. Every day more than a million Negro cooks, laundresses, and maids go into the homes of white people to prepare their food, wash their clothes, and care for their children. If these domestic helpers live in unsanitary, disease-breeding slums, what will be the inevitable effect upon the people for whom they work? What does all this suggest to the white community (1) from the standpoint of justice to the Negro, (2) from the standpoint of the welfare of all? What steps might be taken to improve these conditions? (Public health services, clinics, hospitalization, slum clearance, decent homes, sewerage, water, sanitary surroundings, etc.)

SUGGESTIONS FOR INVESTIGATION

What are the health conditions of Negroes in your state, your county, your community? What public health facilities are available to them — medical and nursing service, clinics, hospitals, etc? What services are available in the Negro schools? How do all these compare with those provided for white people?

Sources of information: Reports of state, county and community departments of health; addresses by nurses, physicians, and health officers. Visits to health offices, clinics, and hospitals. Personal observation of Negro housing and community conditions, the worst and the best.

THE PROBLEM OF POVERTY

Though the aggregate wealth of the Negro group is large, the great majority are still poor and dependent. Many own practically nothing. Earnings are uncertain and meager, standards of living low. Low wage scales are largely responsible. What do low wages mean in standards of living? In health? In ambition and efficiency? How do low wages affect purchasing power? What effect does this have upon the business of manufacturers and merchants? What effect upon the demand for farm products? How do the low wages of this group affect the general wage scale? What did Booker T. Washington mean when he said, "You can't hold another man down in the ditch without staying down there with him"? Should equal wages be paid for equal work, irrespective of race? Would this be of advantage to the white worker as well as to the Negro?

THE PROBLEM OF FARM TENANCY

Of the 882,850 Negro farm operators reported by the 1930 census, 700,911 were landless renters and tenants. Average income per tenant family was less than $225 a year. Only one in two hundred of these families had a telephone and but one in three hundred had water and lights in the home. More than three-fourths of their houses were valued at less than $500 each. Yet in 1929 these Negro farmers produced crops and foodstuffs valued at 646 millions of dollars. Had their condition been such as to favor ambition and efficiency, would they have produced more or less?

What are some of the worst features of tenancy? (Short tenure, frequent moves, irregular school attendance, misuse of the land, lack of interest in the community, uncertain contracts, careless settlements, hopeless debt, etc.) How might these conditions be improved? (Much can be learned from the successful efforts of Ireland, Denmark, Finland, and other European countries to promote farm ownership.) What is the United States now doing to the same end? (For information write to the Farm Security Administration, Washington, D. C.)

THE PROBLEM OF RECREATION

Why do cities provide parks and playgrounds? By what group of children are these facilities most needed, those of the poor or those of the well-to-do? In what sections are they most needed, in crowded slums or select residential areas? As between Negro and white children, which group is worse off in the matter of housing, streets, and opportunities for recreation? Which group needs parks and playgrounds most?

Where, as a matter of fact, are most parks and playgrounds found, in the poorer districts or the wealthier ones? For white children, or for Negroes? One example: A Southern city with 100,000 Negroes, making up one-third of its population; for white people 1,300 acres of parks valued at $3,000,000; for Negroes, one park of 14 acres valued at $41,000.

Does this concern Negroes alone, or does it concern the whole community? Is it a matter of justice only, or one of self-interest as well? To what extent does the community pay for its failure to provide these facilities? (In poor citizenship, disease, inefficiency, indigence, crime.)

Similar problems are found in relation to almost all other public services: Libraries (often inaccessible to Negroes); water mains; sewers (which frequently end where the Negro section begins); street paving and lights; public education. Inquiry at the city hall will be helpful; first-hand observation even more so.

THE PROBLEM OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS

Consideration of this vital subject will help the reader to visualize some of the fundamental principles of Americanism and democracy.

Why do democracy and public education belong together? (Democracy is based on the value of the individual; assumes general participation in the process of government — every man a sovereign citizen; undertakes to provide an equal chance for all; depends upon intelligent citizenship for its effectiveness; hence feels the need to provide universal education.)

Were public schools started in the first place for the children of the well-to-do or the children of the poor? What were the early public schools called in Virginia?

What do the laws of the Southern states say with regard to public school facilities for Negroes? (They shall be "separate but equal.") To what extent are these laws carried out? How do the Negro schools of your state and community compare with the white schools: In buildings and grounds? Equipment? Length of school term? Salaries of teachers? Consolidation? Transportation of pupils? Expenditures per child?

The following table is compiled from official reports:

CURRENT PUBLIC SCHOOL EXPENDITURES
PER CHILD ENROLLED, 1939-40

State	White	Negro
Alabama	$38.77	$11.67
Arkansas	26.84	10.63
Florida	56.57	22.43
Georgia	43.38	12.47
Louisiana	65.96	15.46
Maryland	72.49	55.28

Kentucky and Tennessee, no separate figures.

As will be seen from the above table, in most of these states the Negro child is at a great disadvantage in the matter of schools. In many counties less is spent on the Negro schools than the amounts the state has sent down to those counties on account of their Negro school children. In such cases, the white schools get all the school funds raised within the county, their full share of state funds, and also a considerable part of the state funds sent down for the Negro child. One state superintendent reported recently that more than four-fifths of the counties in that state were thus diverting to white schools $1,200,000 of state funds allotted them on account of Negro children. In another state the amount thus diverted in a recent year was more than $600,000. Thus it comes about that in counties with many Negro children their schools are often neglected and the white schools are generously provided for, largely from funds the county received because of its Negro children.[2]

Buildings and equipment for Negro schools are usually inferior; salaries of Negro teachers are usually much lower than those of white teachers of equal grade; shorter school terms for Negro schools are not uncommon; consolidated schools for Negroes are practically unknown in several states. Some counties expend solely on bus transportation of white children more than they expend for all purposes on their Negro schools.

Individuals and study groups will find it interesting to secure and examine the reports of their state, county, and city school boards on the above points. Visits to local schools will be especially enlightening.

If wide differences are found, somebody will offer the explanation that Negroes do not pay as much taxes as white people. This will raise interesting questions, civic and economic: Which is the American way, to distribute tax benefits chiefly to those who pay the most taxes, or equally to all, irrespective of their ability to pay? Many white people pay no taxes. Should the state for that reason discriminate against their children in favor of the well-to-do? If not, why discriminate against Negro children because their parents are poor?

[1]The figures for Mississippi and Virginia are not fairly comparable to those from the other States, for the reason that they exhibit only the per pupil expenditures for "instruction." If all the other items entering into "current expenditures" could be shown by race, (such as administration, transportation of pupils, fixed charges, and plant operation and maintenance), the ratio would be considerably more unfavorable to the Negro child, running in Mississippi to about eight to one.

[2]For example, in 1939-40 Russell County, Alabama, spent on its white schools $67.62 per child enrolled and on its Negro schools $3.66; Lowndes County $89.03 and $5.12; Dallas County $84.72 and $5.64; St. John Parish, Louisiana, $67.37 and $7.33; De Soto Parish, Louisiana, $87.31 and $8.53.

Another civic question, that of indirect taxes: Everybody pays indirect taxes who buys anything at all. Example: Gasoline taxes in Georgia, $20,000,000 a year. Every citizen has rights also in the taxes paid by railroads, public utilities, and other great corporations.

An interesting economic principle: In the last analysis, who pays the taxes on a rented house, the man who owns it or the man who pays the rent? Who pays the taxes on a plantation, the man who owns the plantation or the man whose labor makes it productive?

Finally, the question of the general welfare. Can people with little or no education be as efficient, as productive, and as law-abiding as if they had received greater advantages? Does not the whole community suffer when those advantages are denied or limited in relation to any group?[1]

OFFICERS OF THE LAW

In some communities a serious race problem is found in the attitude of officers of the law. Negroes, being largely without influence and political power, are sometimes arrested and thrown into jail for insignificant offenses and on the barest suspicion. They may be threatened and tortured to extort confessions or testimony. Then they may be convicted and sentenced to prison or to death solely on evidence thus secured.[2] Usually people are assumed to be innocent till they are proved guilty, but with Negroes it often works the other way.

In the process of arrest Negroes are sometimes beaten, and occasionally shot and killed. In many places they look upon white policemen as their natural enemies and expect no justice at their hands. To improve this condition, many Southern cities have Negro detectives and police to serve in Negro sections. This plan has been found helpful in keeping order and retaining the confidence of the Negro community.[3]

MURDER AT THE HANDS OF THE MOB

A problem peculiar to America ("peculiar" in the sense that it is found in no other part of the world) is that of lynching, the murder of people by mobs. Though nearly everybody condemns lynching, there are still a few who excuse it. These should know such facts as the following revealed by careful investigation of the 118 lynchings for the eleven years 1931 to 1941, inclusive:

1. Thirteen of the persons lynched, or eleven per cent, were not accused of any crime whatever. Two of these were lynched "as examples"; others because of personal grudges.
2. Thirty-eight of the victims were charged with only minor offenses, some of them quite trivial. Among the latter were "speaking disrespectfully," "altercation with bootlegger," "stealing liquor," "drunkenness and disorderly conduct," "striking white man," "drawing a knife." One Negro was lynched because he tried to vote.
3. Twenty-six of the victims were accused of homicide. In the case of four of these there was no evidence of guilt whatever; one had killed by accident, another in self-defense, and a third was admittedly crazy.

[1] Apparently there is a close connection between ignorance and crime. Some time ago the University of North Carolina made a study of 1036 Negro convicts in 33 prison camps. More than a third of these convicts were found to be totally illiterate and eighty-three per cent were unable to read newspapers. Not one of them had gone to high school.

[2] In 1936 a former governor of Mississippi saved the lives of three Negroes sentenced to death on evidence secured in this way. In setting aside this verdict the United States Supreme Court said: "The rack and torture chamber may not be substituted for the witness chair."

[3] Among Southern or border cities using Negro police are Baltimore, Washington, Louisville, Knoxville, Memphis, Tampa, St. Louis, Kansas City, Austin, Beaumont, Houston, Galveston, Muskogee, Oklahoma City, Tulsa, and a number of smaller places. Several larger Southern cities have Negro probation officers to work with the juvenile courts, and a few have colored policewomen.

4. Only one-third of those lynched were accused or suspected of actual or attempted attacks on women. In a number of these cases there was grave doubt of guilt and at least two of the victims were clearly innocent of the charge.

But even if all mob victims were worthy of death, lynching would still be wrong. It exalts anarchy above law, and thus strikes at the foundations of ordered society. "Every lyncher," said the great Mississippian, Bishop Charles B. Galloway, "becomes a law-despiser, and every law-despiser is a betrayer of his country."

It is gratifying to note that distinct progress is being made toward the elimination of this crime. In the five years ending with 1941 there were only 26 lynchings, against 79 for the previous five years. By years the record for that period is as follows: 1937, eight; 1938, six; 1939, three; 1940, five; 1941, four. Compared with the average of 78 lynchings a year beginning in 1882, the figure for 1941 marks a decrease of 95 per cent.

PEONAGE

Another occasional practice for which there can be no defense is that of "peonage," or debt slavery. This means that Negroes who get in debt to landlords and employers are sometimes held in servitude by force and intimidation, on the pretext of working out their debt. Some years ago a prominent Georgia planter, under suspicion of holding Negroes in peonage, was convicted of killing or causing the death of eleven Negro farm hands to keep them from testifying against him. In November, 1936, a city marshal in Arkansas was fined $3,500 for holding eight Negroes in enforced slavery.* About the same time four men were arrested in Florida, charged with holding Negroes in peonage in a turpentine camp. A Louisiana planter convicted recently on a similar charge defended himself by saying that he was only doing what everybody else did. This, of course, was not true, but it indicates that in some sections the practice is not uncommon. It is very difficult for the courts to break it up, because the victims of peonage are usually afraid to testify. In other cases public opinion is such that convictions cannot be secured.

THE BALLOT

No study of this kind would be complete without a consideration of the problem of Negro suffrage. The Fifteenth Amendment, ratified March 30, 1870, provides that "the right to vote shall not be denied or abridged on account of race, color, or previous condition of servitude." This amendment does not mean that every person must be allowed to vote, irrespective of his fitness to do so; it leaves each state free to decide what qualifications for suffrage shall be required. It does mean, however, that these qualifications should apply equally to all citizens, and that no one who can meet them should be denied the ballot merely because of his race.

Nevertheless, in many sections Negroes, even when intelligent and well educated, are kept from voting by one means or another. Most of the Southern states, for example, provide that voters must be able to read and "interpret" the constitution of state or nation to the satisfaction of the election officers. If they see fit to do so, these officers can refuse to accept the most intelligent interpretation. Thus the best educated Negro in the community may be denied the ballot.

In many sections it is sufficient merely to let Negroes understand that they are not supposed to vote and that it may make trouble for them if they try to do so. Actual intimidation and violence are sometimes resorted to. The one-party system, based on the primary in which only white persons may vote, is another means by which Negroes are excluded, particularly in state and local elections. Thus, in some states and in certain sections of others, it comes about that few Negroes have any part whatever in the governments under which they live. Consequently, they have little or no political influence and no power to protect their interests.

*The Arkansas Gazette, leading daily paper, said of this case: "It was as grave an offense as could be committed in America against fundamental human rights."

A great many people are beginning to wonder whether a wiser way may not be found. Not everybody is competent to exercise the ballot, to be sure. It should probably be protected, by suffrage limitations. But should not such limitations be applied equally to both races? Would good government be endangered by such a course, or would it be made stronger and more secure through increased loyalty on the part of the Negro group?

Dr. R. R. Moton, former president of Tuskegee Institute, expressed the Negro's view of this matter in the following words:

"Negroes would like to share in the government only in proportion to their merit, their ability, and their fitness. They have no desire for dominance. There are many Negroes who own property. They have something at stake in every state and county and town in the South. They are as anxious as any other citizen that their property be protected, and they are concerned for the best interests of the community. Therefore, they want to get the best man available to govern the community or the state or the nation. Here in Tennessee you might pick out the best colored man in the state as a candidate for governor and you could not get the Negroes of Tennessee to vote for him. They wouldn't want a Negro as governor. That is not lack of respect for their race, either. They would want as governor the man with the most experience and the best background, the man who is most representative of all the people. So you see after all, there is really nothing to fear from the Negro in politics."*

This problem of the suffrage is not simple, of course. In some sections it is much more difficult than in others. It cannot be solved overnight. However, it is one of the most important problems of our section, and those who are coming into citizenship must work it out in harmony with the public interest and the best traditions of our democracy.

JURIES AND COURTS

Similar to the question of the ballot is that of jury service for Negroes. In a case that was carried up from the Alabama courts in 1935 the Supreme Court of the United States set aside a verdict against a Negro on the ground that Negroes were systematiclly excluded from jury service on account of race. Governor Bibb Graves, of Alabama, immediately issued a statement in which he said: "Holdings of the United States Supreme Court are the supreme laws of the land. . . . This decision means that we must put the names of Negroes in jury boxes in every county in the State. Alabama is going to observe the supreme law of America." He then advised the officials of every county to include in the jury rolls the names of Negroes who were qualified for jury service by intelligence and character. In cases involving Negroes, courts in many sections of the South are beginning to call one or more qualified Negroes for jury service. No unfavorable results have been observed. Negroes naturally feel that in this way their interests in the courts are better protected, and the white people concerned seem to recognize the fairness of this procedure.

As a matter of fact Negroes are often at a disadvantage in the courts. Their guilt is more likely to be taken for granted, and they are sometimes convicted on insufficient evidence, merely because of this presumption of guilt. They are likely to get heavier sentences than white men convicted of similar offenses, and far more likely to be sent to the electric chair.

*The part taken by Negro voters in recent presidential elections tends to confirm Dr. Moton's statement. Though the Communists nominated a Negro for vice president, very few Negroes voted for him. Some stuck by their traditional loyalty to the Republican party, but the great majority voted for Roosevelt. In the last three elections the populous Negro district of Chicago has elected to Congress a Negro Democrat, Arthur Mitchell, defeating the Republican candidate who was also a Negro.

A white man who steals a hundred thousand dollars has a much better chance of escaping punishment than a Negro who steals a hog. This is a well-known weakness of American courts that ought certainly to be corrected.

THE REAL QUESTION

In essence, all these civic problems reduce down to just two: (1) That of doing justice to a minority group, and (2) that of serving the best interests of all. The American people would like to do both, of course. Is it possible to do both at the same time, or must they sacrifice one to accomplish the other? That is the real question that future citizens must face.

There are some who think it necessary to deny the rights of the minority, to limit their opportunities, and "keep them down" in order to advance the welfare of the majority.

There are others who feel sure that no good can come from injustice, that in keeping others down people degrade themselves, and that the best interests of all will be served by the highest welfare of each.

The former view is the theory of autocracy against which our Revolutionary forefathers revolted.

The latter is the theory of the democracy which they established.

Which shall America follow in reference to its 12,000,000 Negro citizens?

CONSTRUCTIVE SOUTHERN OPINION

How intelligent Southern opinion answers that question is not a matter of doubt. The expressions quoted below are typical of hundreds:

Said the great Georgian, Henry W. Grady:

"Let us give the Negro his uttermost rights, and measure out justice to him in that fullness the strong should always give to the weak. . . . And let us remember this — that whatever wrong we put on him shall return to punish us. Whatever we take from him in violence, that is unworthy and shall not endure. . . . But what we win from him in sympathy and affection, what we gain in his confiding allegiance and confirm in his awakening judgment, that is precious and shall endure — and out of it shall come healing and peace."

To the same effect spoke the late Henry L. Whitfield, while Governor of Mississippi:

"We must see to it that at all times the less favored black man shall get a square deal in business relations and in the courts. . . . Wise leaders among Negroes must be encouraged, points of agreement between the races must be emphasized and points of friction minimized. Every man and woman in this State must see to it that the laws protecting Negroes in their lives and property are religiously enforced . . . and that there be the fullest cooperation between the white man and the black to the end that peace and prosperity come to white and black alike."

This from the late Bishop F. F. Reese of Savannah represents fairly the attitude of religious leaders:

"The Negro is entitled to the opportunity to make the best of himself of which he is capable, and no prejudice, contempt, or injustice on the part of the white man should hinder or handicap him. He should have every opportunity and every assistance from his stronger brother to work out his salvation individually and racially."

In this joint statement speak the editors of a hundred daily newspapers:

"In the harmonious cooperation of the thoughtful and exemplary men and women of both races lies the prospect of larger understanding and better interracial relations."

With the above sentiments Southern educators are in agreement. Says Dr. John Stewart Bryan, President of William and Mary College:

"Education, sympathy, wise counsel and friendly help will as nearly solve the racial problem of the whites and blacks as can be done by human nature."

V. COMMON MISCONCEPTIONS

Many common interracial attitudes and practices are based on assumptions that are largely or wholly without foundation. Among these, the following are almost certain to emerge in any discussion of this subject:

(1) That Negroes were divinely ordained to be the servants of white people; that God cursed one of Noah's sons, turned him black, and condemned him to perpetual servitude. The best answer is to have inquirers read carefully the Bible story on which this belief is based (Genesis 9, 20 to 27). Thus they will see that God is not mentioned in connection with the so-called curse, that nobody was turned black, that not a word is said about perpetual servitude, and not a word to connect the colored races with Canaan, who was the innocent object of Noah's unreasoning resentment.

(2) That the Negro is a political menace who may some day take over the government. This fear is based on two things: (a) The memory of Reconstruction; (b) the belief that Negroes are increasing faster than white people, and so constitute a growing political threat. Many believe that Negroes already outnumber white people in several states. Facts sufficient to set at rest these false assumptions and groundless fears are found under "Reconstruction," "Population Trends," and "The Ballot." (Pages 11, 22 and 27).

(3) That the Negro is a potential economic threat as a competitor of the white man; hence he must be "kept down." This is a very superficial and shortsighted view. It is to the obvious advantage of society that every man attain his highest efficiency and productiveness, since to increase the total of goods produced increases the sum of goods available for consumption, and hence lifts the general level of living. It is desirable that every man live in a good house and have enough of the necessities of life. This tends to make him a better citizen, more productive, more loyal and contented, less liable to be resentful, troublesome, and criminal. Furthermore, is it not true, as suggested before, that to keep any man down somebody must stay down with him?

(4) That Negroes should have very little education. This is a survival of three slave-time assumptions: (a) Negroes cannot take much education. (b) They do not need much education. (c) It would not be safe to give them much education.

Abundant experience has shown that all these assumptions are false: (a) Thousands of Negroes graduate annually from college, many of them with advanced degrees. (b) Twelve million Negroes need great numbers of educated leaders, teachers, preachers, lawyers, doctors, and business men. (c) The education of Negroes, as of anybody else, makes for better citizenship, better morals, greater efficiency, greater usefulness. Many striking illustrations may be found in the stories of Negroes who have achieved.

(5) That Negroes are inherently (that is, permanently and hopelessly) inferior to white people. Science offers no proof on this point. The race certainly has been retarded; and it is easy to see why. (See section on Africa.) Other races, including the Anglo-Saxon, were greatly retarded in the past, but have largely outgrown their handicaps since opportunity came to them. It is reasonable to assume that the same will be true of Negroes.

But do not Negroes commonly rate lower than white people in intelligence tests? That in general is true, though there is much overlapping. Some white people rate higher than most Negroes, but in turn some Negroes rate higher than most white people. Besides, it is well known that there is no final test for pure intelligence apart from acquired knowledge. Psychologists have never been able to frame one. Hence it is to be expected that most Negro children, having had poorer advantages than most white children, would rank lower.

In the extensive tests of American soldiers in the World War (100,000 white and 19,000 Negro), white soldiers on the average tested higher than Negro soldiers. But it was found also that white soldiers from the North tested higher than white soldiers from the South. Did this mean that the former were inherently more intelligent than the latter, or only that they had had better advantages? Furthermore, to our surprise, we find that the median scores of Negro soldiers from Pennsylvania, New York, Illinois, and Ohio were actually higher than those of white soldiers from several Southern states.[1] Was that a measure of relative intelligence, or a measure rather of relative opportunities? If we make allowance for the latter factor on one side, must we not in fairness make it also on the other?

(6) That no genuine Negro ever showed real intelligence or ability. What about George Carver, the South's foremost agricultural chemist and Fellow of the London Royal Society of Arts? What about Phillis Wheatley, African-born slave, who wrote such good poetry that she was complimented by President Washington and entertained by the nobility of England? What of Robert R. Moton, former head of Tuskegee Institute, a school with 1,500 students and an annual budget of half a million dollars? What of Roland Hayes, world-famous tenor, who sings perfectly in four languages and has been honored by the crowned heads of Europe? What of Mary McLeod Bethune, who has built up a great school at Daytona Beach, Florida, with a plant worth $500,000? These are all black people, with no visible evidences of white blood. What about hundreds of other pure-blooded Negroes who have achieved notably in spite of great handicaps?

(7) That Negroes are more criminal than white people. It is true that Negroes do furnish an undue proportion of the prison population; however, there are a number of reasons why this is so, quite apart from inherent criminality: Negroes are more likely to be arrested on suspicion and for slight offenses; they have less money and less influence and so are more likely to be convicted; for a given offense they commonly receive longer sentences; finally they are less likely to be pardoned or paroled.

Besides, Negroes live largely in the worst sections of the cities; they are provided with few parks, playgrounds, and other facilities for normal recreation; their school advantages are almost always inferior, consequently many are ignorant and illiterate. Were Negroes given equal opportunity and complete fairness at the hands of the law, there is no reason to believe that their crime rate would be any higher than that of white people.

(8) That Negroes want social equality[2]—that they wish to invade the social life of white people. This is purely an assumption, with no evidence whatever to support it. Negro leaders deny it emphatically. Negroes want justice, not social intermingling. Education, protection, decent

[1] "Race Differences," Otto Klineberg, Chapter IX, page 182.

[2] "Social intermingling," of course, is a much more exact term and should be substituted for the term "social equality," which is so generally used.

living conditions, the normal rights of citizenship, a chance to develop their best — these are the things they ask. Speaking of intermarriage, Dr. R. R. Moton, former principal of Tuskegee Institute, said at a conference of educators at Peabody College: "Not one Negro in a thousand believes in intermarriage. You don't want it and we don't want it; so let's drop the subject and forget it."

"Social equality," said former Governor Northern of Georgia, "is a delusion set up by the demagogues." "If we could just rout that old bogey out of our imaginations!" wrote a great Georgia woman, Mrs. John D. Hammond. "Nobody," she continues, "can force on anybody associations undesired . . . The higher they (the Negroes) rise, the more the tides of their own race life will fill and satisfy and lift them along their own path."

In any case it seems perfectly clear that the integrity of the two races can best be preserved by giving the Negro every opportunity for self-improvement, full protection of his rights, normal respect and consideration, and a chance to develop wholesome self-respect and pride of race.

(9) The "lumping fallacy" is another that should be guarded against. This is the common habit of forming our opinions concerning the people of any other group on the basis of the most unpleasant experiences we have with any of them. For example: Every week in any Southern community we meet hundreds of Negroes. Most of them are wholly inoffensive in their conduct toward us; many of them are extravagantly respectful. That makes little impression upon us, for that is what we are accustomed to, what we normally expect. But should one of the hundreds for any reason make himself obnoxious, we tend to remember him above the rest and to brand them all with his offense. This of course is wholly unfair. Sometimes it results in the gravest injustice, as in riots and mob violence in which many innocent people are punished because one or a few are suspected of wrong doing.

RECOMMENDATIONS

Unanimously Adopted by Conference on Education for Southern Citizenship*
Blue Ridge, N. C., August 25-30, 1941

It is the sense of this body that our colleges and public schools have the opportunity, and a corresponding obligation, to render the South and the nation an inestimable service by training up a citizenship intelligent and fair-minded enough to handle wisely and justly the racial problems that are so serious a factor in our regional, national and international life.

To that end we believe it desirable:

1. That every important college in the South carry a special course of study of race problems;
2. That this subject be dealt with objectively also in college courses in sociology, social problems and the like;
3. That it be treated constructively in the college and public school teaching of geography, history, civics, literature, music, and other subjects where such treatment can be given logically and normally;
4. That programs and materials of adult education be expanded to include a broader understanding of positive racial relations;
5. That school libraries provide the books and supplementary materials necessary for such study;
6. That teachers' colleges especially seek to prepare teachers for wise and effective work along these lines.

---

* Thirteen Southern States were represented in this conference by forty delegates from State Departments of Education, Universities, Colleges and Public Schools.

First Edition, 5,000, September, 1942
Second Edition, 5,000, April, 1943

WHY A UNIT OF STUDY ABOUT THE RACE PROBLEM?

"It is a difficult subject," says the teacher. "Why not ignore it?" Because:

1. We could not ignore it, even if we would. No other question has more profoundly influenced American life. No other looms so large in our history. If we study American history at all, we cannot escape the race question.

2. Again, if we study history intelligently, we must see that many mistakes have been made in dealing with this question. Slavery itself, the political heat and passion which slavery engendered, the nightmare of Civil War, the wrongs of Reconstruction—all these were tragic mistakes, for which our country has paid dearly. How important, then, that the rising generation be prepared to deal with this situation more wisely than those who have gone before!

3. Many serious problems still center about this question—problems of justice in the courts, protection of life and property, education, health, economic efficiency, wages, agriculture, public and private morals. The wise solution of these problems is not a matter of justice only, but equally one of self-interest and patriotism. Only an intelligent, right-minded citizenship can meet this challenge; and the building of such a citizenship is a major objective of education.

4. Southern educators agree that the schools should take account of the race question as one of the major issues with which future citizens will have to deal. Hence nearly all the Southern State Departments of Education are recommending and outlining units of study on this subject.

These recommendations do not contemplate a process of propaganda, but rather a sound educational approach to the practical problems involved in the biracial situation. By an objective study of the facts, they seek to focus on these problems the light of reason, rather than the heat of emotion. From such an approach much is to be gained and nothing lost.

5. Hundreds of schools have introduced such studies and proved their effectiveness. They tie in naturally with the work in history, geography, literature, civics, sociology, biology, and other public school subjects. Invariably, so far as can be learned, the reactions have been favorable and the results satisfactory.

6. If it be admitted that here is a great need, and if experience has demonstrated an effective means of meeting this need, it follows that here also is a great opportunity and a corresponding obligation.

7. The whole future of world peace and the effectiveness of our democracy here at home is tied up with the degree to which the people of all races are given opportunities to contribute to modern culture and to share the fruits of modern civilization.

As the basis of a sound educational approach to this problem, "Understanding Our Neighbors" has been prepared under the auspices of a number of educators composing the Conference on Education and Race Relations. It is factual, non-controversial, interesting and stimulating; it is in effective use in hundreds of schools. A copy will be sent free to any teacher interested.

"WHAT SHALL WE TEACH?"

Assuming agreement that sound teaching on the race problem is desirable, the question arises:

"What then shall we teach?"

The answer is simple:

Merely teach THE FACTS, just as you would in relation to any other subject.

Not Theories;
Not Opinions;
Not Propaganda.

Just the plain, everyday, unquestioned facts of science, of history, of present-day conditions and problems, as they relate to this subject.

Not extraneous matters, dragged in to support this view or that, but such facts as belong logically to the several subjects in which they are introduced and are necessary to a thorough, well-rounded knowledge of these subjects. Sources from which such facts may be drawn are almost limitless. Among these are books, (history, biography, literature, sociology, civics), magazines, newspapers, official reports, community surveys, interviews, personal observations.

The pamphlet "Understanding Our Neighbors" is recommended as a practical study outline and source book. Its pages present in convenient form a large body of essential material. It points out other sources of information, and suggests lines of constructive discussion, helpful in forming intelligent opinion.

TWO PLANS OF STUDY

Using "Understanding Our Neighbors" as a text, the study of the race problem may be conducted naturally in either of two ways:

(1) Obviously it fits perfectly as a unit into such courses as "Problems of Democracy," "Social Problems," "Sociology," "Community Problems," "Social Science," and the like. Its inclusion in such courses is not only logical, but essential, if one is to do a thorough job. So this unit may be set naturally into the frame of any such course as a normal part of the day's work. That is usually the best way of doing it.

(2) There is, however, another practical method—that of dividing the subject and integrating its various aspects with the several social science courses in which they naturally belong. Thus, one section of the study might be integrated with a course in geography (Part I); another with the study of United States history (Part II); a third with the study of English, or literature, or poetry (Part III); yet a fourth into the study of civics under whatever name. (Parts IV, V and VI.)

In this second method, again, there need be no apology for the various inclusions. They belong in these courses logically, naturally, inevitably. Their inclusion, indeed, is essential if a good, honest job of education is to be done.

In utilizing this method careful coordination is needed. For example, instead of giving the various sections of the unit simultaneously, thus perhaps overloading the pupil and overemphasizing the subject, better results may be expected if they are given successively and in order. Thus each section prepares the pupil for the next; the work proceeds more smoothly, and the results are cumulative. It is important, too, that the same group of students be carried through the whole series.

While the first method—that of a single unit in social science—seems likely to be simplest and most effective, either plan is thoroughly practical and will yield excellent results in pupil interest and development.

SOME GENERAL SUGGESTIONS

In introducing this subject, as said before, it should be kept clearly in mind that it is not something extraneous and irrelevant, but a natural, logical part of the educational process. Hence the teacher will neither apologize for it on the one hand nor overemphasize it on the other. Rather should it be presented as just a normal part of the day's work, with the emphasis always on facts rather than on theories and opinions. The great task is to normalize the subject.

ENCOURAGE DISCUSSION; AVOID ARGUMENT

There is a great difference between these two. Argument is usually based upon dogmatic opinion; discussion, on the other hand, centers around facts. Argument sets out to maintain a preconceived point of view, however illogical; discussion calmly studies the subject in an honest search for truth. Argument generates heat, of which there is already too much; discussion develops light, and it is light that the pupil needs. Directed discussion, therefore,—unimpassioned reasoning about the facts and their significance—has the greatest educational value. Remember always that light is needed rather than heat, reason rather than emotion.

AVOID DOGMATISM

As argument should be avoided and discouraged, so should dogmatism. Truth has many sides; no one person can see them all. Nobody knows the answers to all the problems, or all the answers to any of them. Some of them, indeed, time only will reveal. Meanwhile, there is need on all sides for mutual respect for diverse opinions. So, however fixed the teacher's convictions on any point, no effort should be made to dragoon into conformity those who disagree. One needs only to make the salient facts available and to stimulate honest inquiry as to their significance. The formation of opinion may safely be left to the intelligence of the pupil.

GIVE THE PUPILS A CHANCE

It will be noted that a great many questions are suggested throughout the text. These are meant to be real questions addressed to the pupils, not rhetorical questions to be answered by the teacher. To be sure, it will often be easier and quicker for the teacher to answer, and the temptation will be great. In general, however, it will be much better to restrain the impulse, so that the pupil himself may work out and express the answers. Thus he is doubly profited—his mind has been stirred to creative activity, and the product is much more a part of himself than if it had been communicated by another. So, don't give the answers unless it is necessary. Let the pupils have a chance—many chances—as many as possible.

I—SIGNIFICANCE OF THE AFRICAN BACKGROUND

Many years ago when the writer studied geography, it was taught primarily in terms of human differences. Chinese, Indians, especially Africans, were presented as very "odd" people, because their customs were so different from mine. So I assumed that both the customs and the people were essentially inferior, and none of my instructors ever taught me to the contrary.

Fortunately, we have learned a better way. Now we teach geography in terms of human values—in terms of likenesses rather than of differences. Thus we find it one of the most direct roads to understanding and sympathy.

The study of Africa may be used to this end with peculiar effectiveness. The subject may be introduced by a series of questions that excite interest and thought, as suggested in the text. Then by the process of discussion the answers can be developed naturally and with ease along the lines indicated. The teacher need supply only such comment and explanation as may be required to help the pupils to see the essential facts clearly. The most important of these are:

1. A common origin (the Bible and science in agreement).

2. Variations later developed; likenesses more numerous and fundamental. Stimulating questions: "Here are two men of different races; how many physical differences between them can you name? How many likenesses? What about mental and spiritual differences and likenesses?"

3. How did the differences arise? Point out on a globe, map, or board the general region where man is supposed to have originated. Draw lines to indicate migrations in various directions, one into tropical Africa. Invite thought and expression as to the varying conditions into which the different groups would go, and the effects of each type of environment on the individual and on the development of racial and cultural differences.

4. Help the pupils to work out a clear comprehension of the "law of selection and survival," using simple illustrations and language that the pupils can visualize and understand. The analogy drawn from tan and sunburn, which they themselves will develop eagerly in response to apt questions, will go a long way to make it perfectly clear. They may even be able to suggest other illustrations of the process—kinky hair for insulation, wide nostrils for ample air supply, etc.

5. Effects of African environment on personal habits, industry, clothing, housing, temperament, travel, contacts. Let the pupils use their imagination on these matters and express themselves freely.

6. From the Foreword of "Understanding Our Neighbors" have students prepare a pictorial chart showing the racial composition of the people of the world. Also have them prepare a wall chart showing the population of the world by continents.
   Have the class read speeches, books, articles, etc., on postwar planning for significant materials having to do with race.
   Have students prepare a study of the racial composition of the Allied forces in World War II.

7. The study of native African culture may be vitalized by pictures or specimens of African ironwork, pottery, carving, weaving, basketry, and African folklore. A visit to a museum might be very rewarding; books on African culture and biography will help.

8. Discuss significance of African customs different from ours. Had our primitive ancestors any comparable customs? Are some of the African customs logical and sensible? Have the most highly civilized peoples yet outgrown occasional lapses into barbarism?

9. Note testimonies of travellers, missionaries, officials, and educators as to inherent intelligence and capacity of African natives.

10. Round up the chapter with a general discussion, or with the preparation of papers on its significance. Make use of the Foreword in developing the international significance of race problems.

II—THE NEGRO IN AMERICA

If integrated with a course in American History, the study of this chapter should follow, rather than accompany, the preceding one.

The treatment of the subject is obvious, and suggestions are hardly needed. The teacher, of course, will be on the lookout for additional material to enrich the study and a great deal should be available in the form of histories, essays, fiction, pictures. "America's Tenth Man," a survey of the Negro's contribution to American history, will be found very helpful.*

Have pupil locate on the map regions traversed by early Negro explorers; Jamestown, scene of first permanent planting of slavery.

Enliven study of the slave trade by visualizing on map or board the "three-cornered traffic," and by authentic descriptions of various aspects of the trade.

Let the pupils discuss the effects of slavery, good and bad, on all concerned and on the South.

Help them to see that all sections were responsible and that sectional bitterness on either side is illogical.

Under head "Vast Economic Asset," interesting visualizations are possible: Take, for example, Mississippi's Negro cotton crop in 1929, which was 1,234,000 bales. Estimating approximate size of a cotton bale as 2½ x 4 x 5 feet, let the pupils turn the crop into a fence and see how nearly it would enclose the whole State of Mississippi; or figure how tall a solid monument it would build, ten feet square.

Take, then, the value of that Mississippi crop, approximately $100,000,000. Let the pupils convert it into silver dollars (which weigh fourteen to the pound) and load it into railroad cars, 100,000 pounds to the car. How many cars would be required to haul it away? Or let them stack up the dollars, nine to the inch, 108 to the foot. How tall a stack would the hundred million make?

On slave labor in the old South consult U. B. Phillips' books "American Negro Slavery," Bancroft's "Slave Trading in the Old South" and "Life and Labor in the Old South." If in the neighborhood there are samples of slave architecture or ironwork the pupils will enjoy seeing them.

Give the class additional facts as to Southern sentiment for emancipation, the voluntary freeing of slaves, the Colonization Society, etc. Have the class locate and report on Liberia.

The long political controversy concerning slavery need be sketched only in outline, since school histories usually treat it in full detail. It will be sufficient that its general significance be clearly seen.

The abolition movement and the Civil War invite discussion and thought as to the best technique of human adjustment. Would patient, rational processes have been better than the intolerance, heat, and violence which characterized the struggle? Does this have any significance for people today when misunderstandings arise between the races? Current illustrations may be cited.

Under "A Record of Rare Devotion," get a copy of Grady's speech or of "America's Tenth Man" and have the class read the tribute referred to.

---

* Sample copy free; 50 cents per dozen. Commission on Interracial Cooperation, Inc., Standard Building, Atlanta.

Help the pupils visualize the pathetic plight of the newly-freed Negroes and the difficulties of adjustment of both races to the new conditions.

Under "Reconstruction" the class may profitably discuss the wisdom of seeking to impose, by unreasoning, vengeful force, an unjust human situation; the relative responsibility of the Negroes and of their white leaders for the wrongs of that period; and the one notable service rendered the South by the Reconstruction governments.

Under "Progress Since Emancipation," note that tenancy was the logical first agricultural adjustment of the emancipated slaves, followed by increasing ownership of farms and homes, as they became able to buy.

Inquiries may be made as to local Negro ownership of farms, homes, and business enterprises. Reports of Negro banks and insurance companies will prove interesting and are available on request.* In some cases with good effect classes have been taken to visit such institutions.

What does the public school enrollment of Negro children suggest as to their desire for education? How does it compare in percentage with that of white children?

Catalogs, magazines, and advertising matter from local and nearby Negro colleges will prove interesting; a visit to such an institution will be even more so.

Have the pupils search available libraries, magazines, and newspapers for biographical sketches and stories of notable Negroes.

Under the head "The Negro and the Flag," have the pupils check school histories to see to what extent these histories recognize the Negro's patriotic contribution to America.

A closing question: In the light of the Negro's part in exploring and developing America, winning its independence, and participating in all its patriotic struggles, which would you call him—an alien or an American?

III—LITERATURE AND MUSIC

The material presented here is necessarily far from adequate; it should be richly supplemented from books listed in the Bibliography. If not available in school or local libraries, some of these books can doubtless be secured by correspondence. "Singers in the Dawn" will serve well and may be secured singly or in quantity at negligible cost.

The selections quoted were chosen not only for their literary excellence and human interest, but also for their significance as illustrating typical attitudes and reactions to the varying conditions which Negroes confront. There is Dunbar's fine philosophy in "Life"; McClellan's classic of forgiveness; McKay's bitter defiance; Cotter's gentle questioning; Cullen's keen irony; James Weldon Johnson's ringing challenge. These quotations should have definite value to the pupils as media of interpretation.

The librarian might arrange an exhibit of books by and about Negroes, and samples of Negro newspapers and magazines might be secured.

The class (perhaps the whole school) will enjoy learning to sing some of the favorite spirituals. For this purpose "Southland Spirituals" and "Songs of the South" are good collections, available at very small cost. Victrola records and radio programs offer other possibilities.

IV—CIVIC AND ECONOMIC PROBLEMS

Interest and vitality may be added to the population studies on page 22 by having the pupils make graphs illustrating increase of Negro population, North and South; proportion of Negroes in South's population, 1880 and 1940; per cent of Negro population, state by state, 1900, 1930, 1940.

---

* Conspicuous among these are Citizens Trust Company, Atlanta, Ga., and North Carolina Mutual Life Insurance Company, Durham, N. C.

Write the Bureau of the Census, Washington, D. C., for 1940 population figures by races in the various states and larger cities.

Encourage thorough discussion of questions raised in connection with these population trends, particularly as they affect various aspects of the race problem in the South.

In connection with "The Problems of Health," a great deal of discussion will be in order, on the lines suggested in the text. Investigation of state and local health conditions will add interest and vitality to the study. Graphs will be helpful here also.

Under the heads "Poverty," "The Negro in Agriculture," "Recreation," and "Public Schools," the numerous questions suggested in the text should elicit adequate discussion.

Examination of official public school reports will add to the interest of that subject. Graphs will help. Nothing else, however, will so effectively vitalize this inquiry as comparison of local school conditions through personal observation.

In the matter of parks, the pupils might be asked to figure in square feet the areas provided per citizen, white and colored, by the Southern city mentioned.[1]

Under the head "Officers of the Law," inquiry might be made locally or by correspondence with the police departments of other cities as to the effectiveness of Negro police.

A graph might be made showing the annual lynching record for the past five years as contrasted with the sixty-year average.[2]

In connection with "The Ballot," the Fifteenth Amendment might be read, followed by discussion of the means employed to restrict or deny Negro suffrage. The class might debate the advantages of limiting the ballot, as against universal adult suffrage. If suffrage qualifications are held to be needed, what form should they take and how should they be applied? Have the class read and comment on Dr. Moton's statement on this point.

On the subject of court practices in relation to Negroes, a Monday morning visit to the police court of almost any city will be highly instructive—much more effective than cold theory or heated dogmatism.

Discuss fully "The Real Question."

Finally, have the class read "Constructive Southern Opinion" and express their own reactions to the views which it sets forth.

Have the class take their community as a unit and work out a practical plan for the improvement of Negro-white relations in the community.

V—COMMON MISCONCEPTIONS

This section of the book is meant primarily to prepare the teacher to deal with the many questions that are certain to arise throughout the course. It may then well be used by the class as a general roundup.

Have students collect rumors having to do with Negro-white relations. Evaluate these and try to determine their origin. Establish a "listening post" for rumors on race.

VI—SOME SUGGESTIONS FOR INTERRACIAL COOPERATION

Take up each of the suggestions made by the Conference on Education for Southern Citizenship and have the class discuss and evaluate each.

---

[1] A very simple matter: For the Negro $\frac{14 \times 210 \times 210}{100,000}$; for the white $\frac{1300 \times 210 \times 210}{200,000}$.

THREE SELECTED UNITS OF WORK ON THE RACE PROBLEM

HIGH SCHOOL, ST. PETERSBURG, FLORIDA

Three weeks were given to the project in four citizenship classes enrolling 129 pupils. An intensive study was made of "America's Tenth Man" and other publications of the Conference on Education and Race Relations. Books and other supplementary materials from the school and city libraries were read and reported on. These included Moton's "What the Negro Thinks" and Brawley's "History of the American Negro."

The newspapers and magazines were watched for constructive articles regarding Negroes.

A number of committees worked on specific phases of Negro life—economic conditions, political and civil rights, educational facilities, cultural contributions, etc.

Visits were made to the Negro schools and churches, Negro leaders were interviewed, and surveys were made of Negro business and residential areas and recreational facilities. The findings were compiled in four booklets which were typed by the commercial classes and illustrated by the art students.

Four classes made a study of Negro literature and presented a program on it to student assemblies numbering 440. "Singers in the Dawn" was used as the basis of this study.

A music class gave two programs of Negro selections.

CENTRAL HIGH SCHOOL, CHATTANOOGA, TENNESSEE

Two hundred students studied "America's Tenth Man" and other pamphlet materials.

Essays were written by 150 students and posters and scrapbooks were made.

Open forums on race relations were held in the Hi-Y Club.

Two outside speakers addressed the students on the racial situation.

A radio broadcast was given, with four student speakers. It is estimated that this broadcast reached 25,000 people.

Copies of the source pamphlets were presented to the editors of the local papers, and commendatory editorials were published. Copies were sent also to all the junior high schools in the city.

HIGH SCHOOL, BILOXI, MISSISSIPPI

"America's Tenth Man" was studied for one week by 188 students in three sections of American history, three junior home rooms, and two sections of European history. Seventy papers were written on the subject and a prize was awarded for the best.

A study of the native African in contrast with the present-day Negro was made in four history classes, enrolling 118 pupils.

A general assembly program and three junior home-room programs were presented, dealing with Negro progress, health, education, literature, religion, and music.

Books and equipment were presented to the Negro school.

Newspapers and magazines were watched for current-event reports. Several articles on the project were published in the school paper.

Essays, posters, and booklets were made by ten classes in English and civics, enrolling 224 students.

The project enlisted the interest of practically every student, and the results were highly satisfactory.

Lawyer Says Race Segregation Illegal

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Jan. 15 — (AP)—A Negro attorney opposed the Alabama Public Service Commission's railroad race segregation order today as both discriminatory and illegal, and declared it "violated" the United Nations Charter.

Arthur D. Shores, of Birmingham, appeared at a public hearing in opposition to the commission's order directing railroads operating in the state to segregate white and Negro passengers by curtains and partitions when separate accommodations are not available.

Shores said he represented the Coordinating Committee for Equal Transportation Facilities in Alabama, which he said was composed of representatives of organizations of both races.

A railroad spokesman, meanwhile, suggested several changes in the commission order, chiefly related to the requirement that partitions and curtains must be "in place and drawn at all times" when Negroes are seated in Pullman cars.

W. A. Northcutt, general solicitor of the Louisville & Nashville, said that would be "wholly impractical and unworkable."

He agreed, however, with the provision that Negroes requesting seat space or berths may be assigned to space in enclosed accommodations if available.

Shores declared the order, the effective date of which is Feb. 1, would impose a "badge of inferior citizenship" on members of the Negro race and would be "embarassing and humiliating."

SCIENTIFIC AND CULTURAL ORGANIZATION

GENERAL CONFERENCE

PARIS

Nov. 19 - Dec. 10, 1946

REPORT OF PROGRAM COMMISSION

ADOPTED BY THE

GENERAL CONFERENCE*

* Text of UNESCO/C/23, with corrections approved by the General Conference in Plenary Session.

Reproduced by UNESCO Relations Staff, Department of State.

The Programme Commission at its First Plenary Session adopted five criteria for the selection of proposals for inclusion in the programme of UNESCO. These criteria had to do with the purpose of the Organisation, the coherence of the programme, its financial feasibility, its feasibility in terms of staff and the appropriateness of any given project to the end in view. In addition to the establishment of these criteria, the Commission requested that proposals be distinguished in terms of priority, with particular reference to the possibility of accomplishment in the year 1947, and that projects "should be few in number and should involve, at least in the first year, crucially important and obviously useful undertakings."

The work of the Commission was thereupon assigned to six Sub-Commissions which were requested to observe the criteria established and to conform to the instructions issued.

The six Sub-Commissions have now completed their work and have submitted to the Programme Commission their final reports which, with minor modifications, have been adopted. These reports are, in themselves, remarkable and distinguished documents. They cannot be read without a mounting sense of the limitless possibilities and the potential importance of the mission of UNESCO. Neither can they be read without an acute and poignant realization of the immediate and present urgency of the task with which UNESCO is faced. All of the reports place first in the order of urgency the needs of the peoples who have felt at first hand the impact of the war. All of them put in the first order of priority the provision of the materials and the services which are necessary if the children of these countries are to resume their education, if their artists and scientists and men of learning are to pursue again their callings, if their libraries are to be rebuilt and stocked again with books, and if the apparatus of scientific inquiry is to be renewed.

The drafting committee, appointed to develop from the reports of the various Sub-Commissions a coherent and single programme, has nevertheless found itself obliged to make an over-all selection in terms of immediate significance. This selection, necessarily somewhat arbitrary, has been made by applying to the reports of the various Sub-Commissions the criteria already established by the Commission as a whole.

The Committee, that is to say, has had in mind the requirements that proposals approved should serve to advance the purpose of the Organisation "to contribute to peace and security by promoting collaboration among the nations through education, science and culture"; the requirement that projects approved should constitute a coherent whole; the requirement that they should be practically feasible and appropriate; and the requirement that they should be few in number and should relate to matters of self-evident importance and usefulness.

As regards the first of these requirements, the Committee has borne i mind also the language in the Preamble to the Constitution which cites the "common welfare of mankind" as one of the concerns of the Organization. It is the view of the Committee, as we assume it is the view of the General Conference, that the stated purpose of UNESCO to contribute to peace and security must be read in the light of this phrase, and that the "peace" to which reference is made must be interpreted in a positive rather than a negative sense. "Peace" in this context, in other words, means something more than a mere absence of overt hostilities. It means a condition of solidarity, harmony of purpose and coordination of activities in which free men and women can live a secure and satisfactory life - a condition in which war is affirmatively prevented by the dynamic and purposeful creation of a decent and human relationship between the peoples of the world - a condition in which the incentives to war are neutralized by the social, spiritual and economic advances created and achieved.

Thus interpreted, the principal criterion of selection, taken together with the additional criteria established by the Programme Commission, seems to the Committee to offer a means by which the projects reported by the Sub-Commissions may be reduced to such a single and coherent programme as we understand to be desired. Needless to say, the selection we have made is in no sense intended to eliminate any item recommended by any Sub-Commission and approved by the Plenary Session of the Programme Commission. The full reports of the Sub-Commissions are appended to this report and are thus submitted to the Plenary Session of the Conference for Adoption. What we have done is to indicate how those projects may be made to conform most nearly to the established criteria and how they may be combined in a single programme which will, we hope, be regarded as coherent, important, and demonstrably useful.

One further preliminary word is necessary. We have not selected our projects in terms of the division of the entire subject matter into the various fields assigned to the Sub-Commissions. We have selected them rather in terms of UNESCO's over-riding purpose to contribute to peace and security, and more particularly, in terms of the various functions by which - as it seems to us- UNESCO can best contribute to this purpose. These functions, given the over-all purpose and the field of human intercourse in which UNESCO is to act, are fairly evident. UNESCO will contribute to peace and security by promoting collaboration among the nations in the preservation of men's knowledge of themselves, their world and each other; in the increase of that knowledge through learning, science and the arts; and in the dissemination of that knowledge through education and through communications generally. This last function, given the present distressed and critical state of the world, would seem to be the most important, though not necessarily the most urgent. There are great areas of the world in which the preservation of men's knowledge of their world and of each other is crucially important. Unless the institutions of learning can be restored in those countries in which the malice and superstition and ignorance of the common enemy destroyed them, it will be impossible for men and women and children to pick up again their lives as human beings.

And, there are other fields also in which the increase of knowledge has the first importance - fields in which the events of the last few dreadful years have clearly demonstrated that lack of knowledge may be a cause of war: fields which cry out for the concerted and disinterested analysis of which scholarship and science are capable and the concerted and imaginative understanding which those who love the human spirit and who believe in the capacities of the human mind can give.

The urgent projects aimed at the preservation of the knowledge and the means of knowledge of mankind are not listed in detail here. They will be found in the place of first importance in the reports of the Sub-Commissions. Their character is familiar to us all and to all the world. Whatever, UNESCO can do in rehabilitation will be all too little, and even that little will be all too late. Nevertheless, we of this Conference and of this Organisation are agreed that everything we can do must be done.

Nevertheless, it is universally agreed, and has been agreed since the Conference at London, that UNESCO, whatever its responsibilites for the preservation of knowledge and the reconstruction of the institutions and the means of knowledge, is not itself only a relief or a rehabilitation agency. It is an agency for the preservation of the peace through understanding. What is required of us here at this first Conference is to present to the world a programme which shall clearly demonstrate how, and in what measure, UNESCO intends to accept the responsibility imposed upon it by its Charter, and by what means it proposes to translate that responsibility into action and into practical results.

We begin our description of UNESCO's programme, therefore, with those forward projects which relate most directly to the future task. First among these, we put those projects in the field of the dissemination of knowledge through education and mass communication which appear to us most likely to produce practical and effective results in the immediate future, whether through the removal of barriers to communication between peoples or through the increased effectiveness and richness of such communication.

Two projects looking toward the increased effectiveness of communication through the channels of education seem to us to belong at the beginning of this account. The first of these is the proposed development of a worldwide programme in fundmental education (or the establishment of minimal educational standards) by which it is anticipated, will contribute to the vital struggle against illiteracy which must now be joined, and must now be won.

In the words of the Preparatory Commission, "the Charter of the United Nations points out that stability and well-being are necessary if peaceful and friendly relations among the nations are to be created. Such conditions imply advances in economic and living standards as well as the universal acceptance and observance of fundamental human rights and freedom... The present educational inequality between nations represents a danger to the peace of the world which cannot become ONE if half of it remains illiterate."

Such a programme will involve, in addition, new forms of education, especially for adults in agriculture, health and citizenship. The first step in this great project will be the appointment of a panel of experts, most of whom would not be permanent members of the UNESCO Staff. On invitation, they will assit in the development of programmes of education, making contacts with workers in the field. The central staff of UNESCO will assist in providing suitable materials, in the clarification of language difficulties and in the utilization of all forms of instruction, - books, pictures, films and radio - which may serve the purposes of the programme. Assistance will be sought in collateral fields, such as libraries and the social sciences. As the programme advances, follow-up work will carry the new skills of reading and writing to a fuller implementation of every-day life and, further, to a growing recognition of international problems.

The time

The time has come to recognize, what can only be recognised from the international point of view which UNESCO occupies, that the world owes a duty to its less-favoured peoples, not only in their interest but in its own. It is not necessary, in order to recognise this duty, to assert that the roots of the evil of our time lie solely in the things of the human spirit, any more than it is necessary to assert, in order to arrive at certain other conclusions, that the roots of these evils lie solely in material conditions. It is necessary only to admit - as all in this room must admit, for otherwise they would not be here - that what passes in the minds of men is a reality - and a reality which may well affect the great issue of peace and war - of life and death.

A second major project intended to facilitate communication through the channels of education is the proposal for a comprehensive revision of text books and related teaching materials. This project calls for a clearing house for the collection and dissemination of information on the revision of text books, starting with the accumulation of the most commonly used text books. Necessarily involved in this proposal is the assumption by UNESCO of a responsibility to report to the General Conference and to the United Nations and the world at large any instances of the misuse of text books which might be considered to constitute a danger to the peace. No question of censorship is involved here or elsewhere in UNESCO's programme. UNESCO is not the policeman of the mind, nor the censor of the imagination. UNESCO is, however, charged, under its Constitution, with a duty to preserve the peace in so far as the peace can be preserved through the instruments of education, of science and of culture. It has, therefore, a clear responsibility, finally and in the last analysis, to call to the attention of the member nations of UNESCO and of the United Nations any misuse of the facilities of teaching which it considers dangerous to the peace.

Communication between peoples in the contemporary world, however, is not limited to education or to the materials which education traditionally employs. A technological development of revolutionary importance, and of incalculable potentialities for good or evil has taken place in the press, radio, the motion picture and in the newer technical developments of a related character. It is now, for the first time, possible to conceive of culture in planetary terms because it is now, for the first time, possible to communicate upon a planetary scale. Proposals before this Conference provide for the employment by UNESCO of these new means of mass communication and for action by UNESCO to remove the obstacles in the way of their full and most effective employment.

The first of these proposals is the proposal for the establishment of a world-wide network for radio broadcasting and reception. It is not suggested that UNESCO should embark immediately upon an undertaking of such scope and cost. It is suggested, however, that UNESCO should undertake forthwith a study of the possibility of such an undertaking with a view to the presentation to the next General Conference of a practicable plan for action. Closely associated with this proposal is a second proposal that UNESCO should undertake a survey of the press, the film, and the whole range of telecommunications, postal services, with a view to examining the adequacy of existing channels to the world's communication needs. It is thought that proposals can be made, in the light of such a study, for the elimination of inadequacies where they are found to exist and for the encouragement of such supplementary services as

services as best will fill UNESCO's purposes. Specific proposals are made for the establishment of an international radio forum and a world university of the air by which, within the framework of existing facilities, subjects of international interest can be discussed.

Combined with these positive proposals for the development of existing channels of communication and the possible establishment of a new planetary system, there are also what might be called negative or curative proposals for the removal of barriers obstructing the flow of communication. Any such undertakings on UNESCO's part must, of course, be related to similar undertakings by other agencies of the United Nations, such, for example, as the Economic and Social Council, and its organs.

But it is not in the field of the mass media alone that barriers exist which UNESCO must labour to remove in the accomplishment of its essential and central purpose of advancing the freedom of the people of the world to understand each other. Similar barriers exist in connection with libraries and museums and in connection with literature and the creative arts. Never before in the history of the world have there been as many men and women hungry for books who lack the means of satisfying their hunger. Never before in the history of the world has the freedom of the creative artist to satisfy the fundamental need of his time been so restricted as it is restricted now by commercial practices, and by censorious suppression. Among the projects proposed are projects aimed at the removal of these barriers. Studies are proposed of discriminatory commercial rates, of bureaucratic customs formalities, of unnecessarily high postal rates and of other similar obstacles to the movement of books and other materials of communication. Cooperation is also proposed in the preparation for the universal Copyright Conference proposed by the Belgian Government for 1947.

Furthermore, and as regards creative artists, a resolution has been proposed in the following terms:

"That the freedom of the creative artist to accomplish his proper purpose as an artist in any nation is a matter of concern to the peoples of all nations, and

"That UNESCO, acting for an on behalf of the peoples of all nations, will take such measures as are open to it under its Constitution to protect and defend the freedom of the artist wherever it is put in danger".

But in these fields also, UNESCO is not conceived of merely in negative terms. In this same field of the creative arts, it is proposed that UNESCO should, in the near future, conduct an investigation of the way in which conditions affecting the livelihood and work of the creative artist may be improved, and should cooperate with other agencies in safeguarding the valuable art and culture of primitive and non-industrial peoples from debasement or extinction.

Again, as regards printed materials, it is proposed that UNESCO should establish a central international inter-library loan system by which readers in any part of the world may, given the cooperation of the world's librarians, have access, either in original or copy, to the printed materials

materials contained in any library in any country. It is proposed further that UNESCO should assist libraries and schools to obtain books, periodicals, works of art and museum objects from all the countries of the world, matching needs with available supplies. The use of photographic reproduction, both for the protection and for the greater availability of printed materials, is conceived of upon a scale never before undertaken. It is clearly seen and clearly proposed that the world's resources of cultural materials destroyed in the war can be replaced in part by a world system of loan and reproduction where they cannot be replaced in kind.

And beyond the development of technological and scholarly means by which the remaining resources of the world may be made more fully and more widely useful, it is also proposed to encourage the establishment of public or popular libraries and museums where they do not now exist, as aids in the great labour of mass education which must be undertaken.

The principal proposals for activity in the field of increase of men's knowledge of themselves, their world and each other are to be found, as would be expected, in the fields of science. The proposals before us in the natural sciences do not, of course, neglect the essential and pressing problem of the preservation of knowledge - the replacement of scientific and technical apparatus, particularly in the devastated areas of the world. It is proposed that this replacement should be accomplished by surveying actual needs and by stimulating the creation of agencies to collect and distribute needed supplies. A related proposal carrying beyond rehabilitation into the continuing labour of scientific work is the proposal for the interchange of scientists of all grades. UNESCO, it is proposed, shall administer fellowship grants made available to it and shall establish a limited number of fellowships from its own funds. It will also stimulate and, to some extent, subsidize meetings of international scientific and other learned organizations. It will cooperate with international unions of scientific personnel. Travelling panels of scientists will be sent to various countries on invitation. In regions remote from the main centres of scientific research and technology, experience has shown that a small mobile team concerned with scientific liaison cannot only facilitate but universally stimulate the advance of science and its application. All these proposals are, of course, part only of a broader programme of exchange of personnel, and encouragement of international conferences which is to be found in the reports of all the Sub-Commissions.

One of the most interesting of the proposals having to do with increase of knowledge is a proposal in a field in which new knowledge is urgently necessary. It is proposed that UNESCO should study the problem of satisfactory living in the Equatorial forest zone. As a concrete beginning UNESCO will take over the coordination of the various researches by many nations on the resources and conditions of life in the great Amazonian forest with a view to establishing later an Equatorial Survey Institute. A similar proposal relates to the study, in collaboration with other United Nations Organisations, of the urgent scientific problems arising in those regions of the world where the majority of the population is undernourished. As a first stage, UNESCO will recruit teams of specialists expert in nutritional science and food technology to attack the problem in three sample regions - the Amazon forest, India and China.

Other Projects

Other projects looking toward the increase of knowledge in ways directly related to UNESCO's responsibility to contribute to peace are to be found in the Social Sciences where it is proposed that UNESCO should undertake a study of tensions conducive to war. This study would include studies of nationalsim and internationalism, the pressure of populations and the effect of technological progress upon the well-being of peoples. It will call for a new type of cooperation among social scientists, anthropologists, geographers and psychologists, and it will demand, as the work progresses, new methods of investigation and report. In such an elaborate undertaking, recourse will be had to the national commissions of Member States wherever possible.

With respect to nationalism and internationalism, the three main objectives will be :

(1) To bring to light the distinctive character of the various national cultures and national ideals.

(2) To help in stimulating the sympathy and respect of the nations for each other's ideals and aspirations and appreciation of national problems.

(3) To study and recommend for action possible measures which can bring the nations into closer cooperation, while maintaining fullest respect for their cultures and ideals.

The study of population will be undertaken cooperatively with the United Nations Economic and Social Council which has set up a demographic commission. Among the factors which may be identified as forming a part of this great problem are the excessive increase or decrease in populations, the effect of migration, tensions created among groups within nations or dependent areas and problems arising from certain customs, standards or political restrictions.

It is also proposed that UNESCO undertake a similar study upon the group of problems created by the impact of modern technological developments upon social life and social institutions. It is believed that tensions, both national and international, created by this impact are, thus far, little understood. A new attack upon this problem utilizing modern methods of survey and analysis is presented.

Again it is proposed that UNESCO should examine the philosophic problems of the time. It is agreed, of course, that UNESCO must not be committed to a dogmatic position in any field or to a philosophy which would exclude other basic philosophies directed to the human and humane ends to which UNESCO, by its Constitution , is devoted. The philosophic problem of UNESCO is the problem of finding common ground for understanding and agreement between diverse philosophies and religions. This is a new and important problem for philosophy directly related to the cause of peace. It is proposed that it should be the subject of discussion in a conference of philosophers to be called in the year 1947.

These, in the view at least of this Committee, are the projects offered by the Sub-Commissions which outline most clearly the character which UNESCO will take on when it moves from its preparatory planning stage to the stage of action. There are, of course, many additional proposals listed in the reports of the Sub-Commissions which, equally with the proposals here named, are before the Conference for adoption. It is clearly the responsibility of the Director-General to determine, within the limits of the funds made available to him, which of the many projects proposed by the Sub-Commissions and approved by the Programme Commission and the General Conference he will undertake. All the Drafting Committee has attempted to do is to draw from the reports of the Sub-Commissions those items to which they seem to have devoted principal attention and which, under an over-allexamination, appear to conform most nearly to the criteria established. If the General Conference agrees with the Drafting Committee, it will be saying, in effect, that the Director-General would be well advised, in its opinion, to frame his programme around the projects here presented. We wish, however, to be clearly understood to state that the Director-General, as the responsible officer of the Organisation, must, in the last analysis, make the selection and produce the programme.

We have not in this report touched upon the question of the machinery by which these various proposals shall be realised. The reports of the various Sub-Commissions contain in some detail an account of the instruments to be used. It is sufficient, we think to state here that although these various proposals are advanced as proposals for action by UNESCO, they are, in the last analysis, proposals advanced for action by the peoples of the world. Without the collaboration of the member nations, UNESCO can do nothing and can be nothing. Without the collaboration of the peoples who compose the member nations, the undertakings of UNESCO -- undertakings which touch most nearly the lives of peoples everywhere - can have no reality and no true meaning. In presenting, therefore, this report, and in proposing that the programme which it outlines should be adopted, we are speaking not to the General Conference of UNESCO alone but to the peoples of the world.

Here, in our opinion, is a programme for common action to construct in the minds of men such defences of the peace as the minds of men can maintain. If it is possible in the present dark and lowering atomosphere of cynicism, suspicion and despair for men to agree upon a common programme, they should, we think, be able to agree on this. In the final count, in the last determination, we must trust our power to be men. As men -- as thinking men -- as men who think, believe and have the will to act - we can agree together on the end of peace. Agreeing on that end, we should be able to agree that there are steps by which the end can be approached. In the high confidence that the projects here proposed are projects which can bring us nearer to the hoped-for goal, we put these programmes in your hands.

EDUCATION

PREAMBLE

"The Education Sub-Commission is of the opinion that National Commissions or National Cooperating Bodies can play an important part in promoting and implementing this program and it strongly urges them to accept this responsibility. Other relevant national and international organizations can be of great assistance in furthering this program."

I. IMMEDIATE WORK FOR INTERNATIONAL UNDERSTANDING

(a) A STUDY OF EDUCATION FOR INTERNATIONAL UNDERSTANDING in the primary and secondary schools and in institutions of higher learning of the member states, to be conducted by the Secretariat of UNESCO, in consultation with a panel of experts and in collaboration with the member states.
To be begun in 1947 (A)

(b) A SEMINAR ON EDUCATION FOR INTERNATIONAL UNDERSTANDING for teachers from member states, together with regional seminars (on the same lines) as considered feasible by the Secretariat.
To be held in 1947 (A)

(c) PUBLICATION OF AN INTERNATIONAL EDUCATIONAL YEARBOOK and the establishment of a Committee on Educational Statistics.
To be undertaken in 1947 (B)

(d) CLEARING HOUSE ACTIVITIES ON INTERNATIONAL EXCHANGE OF PERSONS - Children, students, teachers, youth leaders, leaders in adult education and workers' organizations, and members of various professions. These activities should include a study of the equivalence of school standards and college and university degrees.
To be begun in 1947. (A)

(e) ASSISTANCE

(e) ASSISTANCE TO INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS CLUBS working through the educational agencies and youth organizations of the member states, providing information and materials for their use.
To be begun in 1947. (B)

II. LONG TERM WORK FOR INTERNATIONAL UNDERSTANDING

(a) A PROGRAM OF FUNDAMENTAL EDUCATION under the direction of the Secretariat and a panel of experts, to help establish a minimum fundamental education for all persons.
To be begun in 1947. (See publication: Fundamental Education: Common Ground for all Peoples). (A)

(b) THE COLLECTION OF DATA ON ADULT EDUCATION from member states on the content and techniques of adult educational activities - exploratory steps during 1947. (A)

III. IMPROVEMENT OF TEACHING AND TEACHING MATERIALS FOR INTERNATIONAL UNDERSTANDING

(a) A PROGRAM FOR THE IMPROVEMENT OF TEXTBOOKS AND TEACHING MATERIALS AS AIDS IN DEVELOPING INTERNATIONAL UNDERSTANDING.

1. UNESCO should establish a clearing house for the collection and dissemination of data on the analysis and revision of textbooks and other teaching materials. As a first step in this direction UNESCO should ask every member state to send in 1947 a full set of its most commonly used textbooks in history, geography, civics and other subjects related to international understanding.

2. The Secretariat should arrange for the study of these materials with the assistance of National Commissions and other national bodies; member states should be invited at the same time to study their own textbooks from the point of view of their effect on international understanding. The results of these enquiries should be reported to the next General Conference.

3. The Secretariat should draw up in consultation with qualified experts, a set of principles or code of ethics by which each member state might, as it sees fit, analyze its own textbooks and teaching materials.

4. UNESCO should establish contacts with the member states and with associations of educationists and scientists and with other learned societies, in order to assist them, when invited, in the presentation of events and facts of international significance.

5. UNESCO should call world conferences, if deemed desirable, on specific aspects of the revision and improvement of teaching materials.

6. UNESCO should encourage member states to make bilateral and regional agreements concerning textbooks and other teaching materials; and should assist by preparing 'model Agreements' and the dissemination of information on such agreements.

7. UNESCO should encourage bilateral and regional enterprises and give assistance to them, whether under governmental or non-governmental auspices.

8. UNESCO should prepare from time to time new materials on international affairs to be placed at the disposal of textbook writers.

9. UNESCO should undertake the responsibility of reporting to the General Conference instances of textbook usage inimical to peace among nations.

(A)

(b) A TEACHER'S CHARTER - A Committee appointed by the Director General, should invite drafts of such a charter from interested persons and groups with a view to improving the status of teachers.
To be begun in 1947. (C)

(c) CLEARING HOUSE FOR STUDIES ON THE TEACHING PROFESSION, to include the demand for teachers, problems of recruitment, the training of teachers, their status, and remuneration.
To be begun in 1947. (B)

IV. ACTIVITIES

IV. ACTIVITIES IN COOPERATION WITH OTHER ORGANIZATIONS

(a) APPOINTMENT OF AN EXPERT COMMITTEE ON HEALTH EDUCATION in conjunction with the United Nations, the World Health Organization, the Food and Agricultural Organization, the International Labor Organization and other organizations with special competence in this field, to explore the field of health education.
To be begun in 1947. (A)

(b) STUDY OF HANDICAPPED CHILDREN, with special reference to those in war devastated countries, should be undertaken by the Secretariat in 1947, with other organizations concerned with this problem. (A)

V. ACTION ON OTHER PROPOSALS

(a) RECONSTRUCTION CAMPS in war-devastated countries were endorsed for their educational merits, the project being undertaken as part of the reconstruction and rehabilitation program of UNESCO.

(b) THE RE-EDUCATION OF EX-ENEMY COUNTRIES was raised in a proposal calling for the immediate study by UNESCO of the general problem and issues arising in connection with the opening up of ex-enemy countries to educational and cultural influences from democratic countries, and the matter referred to the Executive Board of UNESCO.

(c) AN INTERNATIONAL EDUCATION NEWSLETTER or some other form of news releases should be studied further by the Secretariat. (C)

(d) WORLD PEACE DAY - that the Secretariat investigate the celebration of the first of January throughout the world as a day of the comity of nations and universal brotherhood. (C)

(e) TRAINING IN INTERNATIONAL RELATIONS, with particular reference to an International Study Center and an International University, was referred to the Social Sciences Sub-Commission, with the understanding that any plans would be developed in collaboration with the Education Section of UNESCO.

(f) EDUCATION OF YOUTH ALONG GENERAL, TECHNICAL AND PROFESSIONAL LINES
Action postponed.

A Committee,

A Committee, appointed by the Education Sub-Commission of the Programme Commission, with power to act for it, considered priorities for projects recommended by the Education Sub-Commission. The Committee decided to classify projects in three categories:

A - most urgent

B - desirable

C - advisable

Category A	I (a)
	I (b)
	I (d)
	II (a)
	II (b)
	III (a)
	IV (a)
	IV (b)
Category B	I (c)
	I (e)
	III (c)
Category C	III (b)
	V (c)
	V (d)

The Committee points out that while all the projects listed in Category A are urgent, a number of them will not involve heavy commitments in staff or funds in 1947.

Several projects, namely V (a), V (b), V (e) and V (f) have not been classified. These require no additional staff for any action which may be taken in 1947.

MASS COMMUNICATION

PROJECTS FOR 1947 IN ORDER OF PRIORITY

P.1. Rehabilitation: (a) Commission on Immediate Technical Needs.

UNESCO should as a first and pressing measure appoint three Commissions on Immediate Technical Needs, to examine the requirements of those countries, particularly in Europe and the Far East, where the war has caused serious loss of equipment and personnel, or where rehabilitation and reconstruction are affected by inadequate technical knowledge and facilities. They should examine present needs for raw materials, equipment and trained technical personnel in each of the fields of films, radio and press. Their enquiries should cover the supply of raw film stock, pulp and paper; film cameras and projectors, radio transmitting and receiving apparatus; printing machinery and type. The Commissions should present their reports within six months, and should include in them recommendations regarding:

(i) immediate measures for correcting the deficiencies referred to;

(ii) further plans ensuring a continuous improvement in the supply of equipment and raw materials, together with the provision of such expert advice and technical personnel as may be required.

(b) Technical Training Scheme.

On the basis of a general scheme and with the object of facilitating the pooling of experience, UNESCO should encourage on the widest international basis, the exchange of instructors and trainees in this field.

UNESCO, in the interests of those countries trying to create, extend or improve their own mass media, should operate a scheme whereby countries w with the best technical resources would give to countries less favoured the benefits of their experience by training guest-personnel in the various fields.

For this purpose fellowships should be established either by the host-countries, through Government or non-Government bodies, or, where necessary, by UNESCO itself.

Simultaneously, a higher order of fellowships should be established which would enable qualified practitioners in the fields of mass media to have "refresher courses" in countries other than their own.

P.2. Free Flow of Communication.

UNESCO should cooperate with the Sub-Commission on Freedom of Informatio of the Commission on Human Rights in the preparation of the report on the obstacles to the free flow of information and ideas. The report should include a survey of available facilities throughout the world for the printing of news, books and periodicals, and production and distribution of films,

films, and the broadcasting and reception of radio programmes. It should deal with copyright restrictions, with the cost of cables and wireless communications - indeed with all restrictions on the flow of information and ideas across international boundaries, and with the suppression and distortion of information and ideas by any influence. UNESCO should take immediate action to develop an agreement with the Commission on Human Rights to assure early and effective action in this field, taking cognisance of the initiative of the U.N. in calling a Conference on Freedom of Information in 1947.

Surveys of Media of Mass Communication.

P.3. A. Radio.

(i) UNESCO should appoint a Committee of Experts to make a comprehensive study of proposals to undertake a world-wide radio network. This study in itself should be sufficiently comprehensive to be called a project under UNESCO. Such a study should cover the needs of peoples, types of programmes, availability of receivers, the interests of member nations in such activities and the means of encouraging technological developments. If the conclusions emerging from this study indicate the feasibility and desirability of a world-wide network, UNESCO should welcome the availability of such resources in communicating its programmes to the peoples of the world, and should expect to take the full responsibility for the preparation of all programmes within its general areas of interest.

(ii) UNESCO should appoint a Programme Committee to study the possibility of collecting material on matters within UNESCO's interest for use on any national or international radio facilities that may become available to UNESCO.

B. Press and Films

UNESCO should undertake a 1947 Survey on Press and Films and make a factual analysis of their present world structure. The survey should examine the extent, range and trend of production and distribution, and within the limits of a factual survey, the nature and degree of public usage. Arising from this survey a short report for popular publication should be prepared. Under this Survey, UNESCO should set up panels for specific analyses, as follows:-

Films.
(a) Themes and distribution of feature and short films; (b) content of newsreels; (c) recent techniques for the utilisation of films, film-strips, and related visual media, with particular reference to:- (i) education, (ii) discussion of social relationships, (iii) the increased appreciation of the arts (iv) the meeting of rural needs; (d) possibilities of improving techniques of the sound film to overcome language difficulties.

Press

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

Press

(a) Circulation of the principal newspapers and periodicals in terms of national and international coverage; (b) characteristics and trends of popular periodicals; (c) nature of control of principal newspapers and periodicals; (d) legislation affecting the press in force in various countries.

C. Telecommunication and Postal Services.

UNESCO should initiate an investigation of available means, including priorities, to improve, extend and cheapen services to press and radio by cable, wireless and mail. It should stimulate and work for international conventions to this end and follow closely the proceedings of the various Telecommunications Conferences planned for next year.

P.4. Copyright.

(a) UNESCO should establish a Provisional Committee of experts in the matter of copyright, representative of its artistic, literary and scientific endeavors. This Committee should have recourse to the advice and counsel of experts in the various copyright systems or organisations. It should be asked to study and formulate recommendations on the responsibilities of UNESCO in the field of copyright and on the bearing of these special questions, including those relating to the rights of authors in literary scientific and artistic works, on its programme of work.

(b) UNESCO should request the National Commissions or National Bodies of the Member States cooperating to send to it by March 1st, 1947, their observations on copyright matters which relate to the programme and work of UNESCO.

(c) UNESCO should, in accordance with the recommendation of the Provisional Committee on Copyright, cooperate in the preparations for the Universal Copyright Conference proposed by the Belgian Government for 1947.

P.5. International Ideas Bureau: World Feature Story Project: International Forum; World University of the Air.

A. International Ideas Bureau.
UNESCO should collect ideas of international significance and stimulate their use in feature films, radio programmes and press features. It may be desirable to encourage Awards to successful feature films or radio programmes based on such ideas, these Awards to be made, not by UNESCO, but by outside organizations.

B. World Feature Story Project.
UNESCO should also, from time to time, arrange with leading researchers, writers, radio and film producers to cooperate in presenting and producing a major theme of world interest and significance in the

BEST COPY AVAILABLE

significance in the field of UNESCO's interest, in such a way that the subjects will appear simultaneously in all media.

The themes should be examples of human enterprise and excellence. Possible subjects for 1947 are:- Teaching children in a war-stricken country, in terms of international cooperation involved; the "T.V.A." scheme for India; or an example to the world of creative and imaginative work in art, e.g. the Moscow Art Theatre. Later projects might include a combined enterprise, such as the development of the Amazon.

C. International Forum.

UNESCO should organise or stimulate an International Forum, in the press or radio, or preferably both, to be a series of discussions on international subjects by well-known figures of various nationalities. These discussions would be syndicated throughout the world in the press, and/or on the various national networks.

D. World University of the Air.

In consultation with national broadcasting bodies, UNESCO should arrange a series of talks by the greatest authorities on UNESCO subjects, the talks to be transmitted where necessary and made available to any network willing to cooperate in the scheme and transmitting such talks under the title of the World University of the Air. Texts or transcriptions would be available to networks of countries remote from the main centres.

As regards the International Forum and the World University of the Air, UNESCO should not finance the schemes or act as a commercial agent, but, in cases of strict necessity, should be prepared to underwrite them.

P.6. World Press Conference.

Without prejudice to its proper powers of initiative, UNESCO should cooperate with U.N. in the proposed world conference of journalists in 1947, with particular regard to:

(a) the possible unification, by friendly negotiation, of the rules and practices of the journalistic profession in various countries;

(b) the formulation by journalists of a code of honour guiding their professional practices;

(c) the status of foreign correspondents with a view to assisting their work;

(d) the operation of news agencies.

UNESCO should arrange with U.N. to preserve its identity in a UNO-UNESCO conference.

P.7. Convention for

P. 7. Convention for Facilitating the International Circulation of Visual and Auditory Materials of an Educational, Scientific and Cultural Character (by exempting them from customs duties).

(a) UNESCO should send to all its member States and non-member States the text of the Convention, as drafted at this first General Conference, as soon as it has been approved by the Legal Section and referred to U.N., and recommend to member States that they should sign and accept it, and invite non-member States to accede to it.

(b) UNESCO should recommend to all States accepting the Convention that they should also make provisions whereby any educational scientific or cultural body within their own territory shall be able to import free of customs duty and quantitative restrictions visual and auditory materials not provided for in Articles I and II of the Convention, if the materials are required by the educational, scientific and cultural body for educational, scientific or cultural purposes.

(c) UNESCO should recommend to all States accepting the Convention that, in carrying out the obligations of the Convention, they should use, or associate with their appropriate governmental agency, the National Commission of appropriate National Cooperating Body provided for in Article VII of the Constitution of UNESCO.

(d) UNESCO should do whatever is necessary and is within its field of competence to secure the implementation and operation of the new Convention.

(e) UNESCO should proceed at once, in pursuance of Article VIII of the new Convention, with further discussions designed to prepare for presentation at the 1947 Conference a further Convention to reduce to a minimum other restrictions which might interfere with the international circulation of the material referred to in Article I of the present Convention, and which are not dealt with in the present Convention.

P.8. Working Centres.

UNESCO should arrange, under its own auspices, the establishment in various capital cities of Working Centres to meet the needs of journalists working outside their countries of origin.

STIMULATION.

S.1. Needs of deficiency Countries.

UNESCO should stimulate the supply to dificiency countries of films relative to their needs on the freest possible basis, and stimulate the production of films describing needs and achievements of such deficiency countries. It should also call a conference with a conference with a view to aiding the reconstruction of Educational Broadcasting.

S.2. Press and Publications.

(a) UNESCO should stimulate a number of organised tours of journalists from different countries for exchange of views and for purposes of goodwill.

(b) UNESCO should promote the presentation of an Award for the best series of articles which have spread impartial information and furthered international understanding.

(c) UNESCO should encourage, in collaboration with the Educational authorities, the improvement of periodicals for children, which in certain countries exercise a great influence for good or ill.

(d) UNESCO should promote the formation of standard classes in journalism, with exchange facilities between countries, for pupils and teachers.

(e) UNESCO should use its influence to increase the international circulation of national newspapers and periodicals by facilitating their free and rapid entry, and by encouraging libraries to include those dealing with UNESCO subjects in their Reading Rooms.

(f) UNESCO should draw the attention of the Press to sources of accurate information and should encourage the speedy circulation of official papers and reports from national sources, even though these are primarily issued for domestic consumption.

(g) It should stimulate the production of genuinely international periodicals by providing access to suitable material.

S.3. Institutes of Scientific Information.

UNESCO should encourage the establishment in member countries of Institutes of Scientific Information, with the intention that UNESCO should eventually act as a clearing house between such Institutes.

S.4. National Visual Councils.

UNESCO should stimulate the establishment in all countries,- possibly in conjunction with the national library services - of National Visual Councils or Institutes, to facilitate the provision of films and film information services to educational and community organisations. In their turn, these Councils might correlate and express the needs of such organisations to producers at home and, through UNESCO, to producers elsewhere.

Complementary to this

Complementary to this, UNESCO should encourage the promotion of National Film Societies and Scientific Film Societies for the provision of specialised programmes in the fields of UNESCO interests.

S.5. International Film Organisations.

UNESCO should cooperate with existing International Film Associations and should assist in the formation of an International Film Council representing the Film interests of all countries.

S.6. Emphasis on visual content.

UNESCO should stimulate the development and use of the film medium by such means as will overcome language difficulties through emphasis on the visual over the auditory and the furtherance of this aim through Awards of Merit to be made by suitable national and international organisations.

S.7. New Developments in auditory and visual aids.

UNESCO should encourage developments in the fields of auditory and visual education, with a view to the use of auditory and visual aids to assist UNESCO in the carrying out of its work in its various fields of interest.

S.8. Exhibitions.

UNESCO should stimulate the inclusion by countries planning educational, scientific or cultural exhibitions of exhibits illustrating the practices or achievements of other nations in similar fields. In this connection, UNESCO should be prepared to supply information as to where such additional exhibits or material are obtainable.

DIRECT SERVICES.

D.S. 1. United Nations Film Board.

UNESCO should help to form and run a United Nations Film Board which will co-ordinate the film interests and activities of all agencies of the United Nations, prevent overlapping and secure economy.

D.S. 2. Exchange of Press material and techniques.

UNESCO should establish a Clearing House for basic material on UNESCO subjects from the world press; make suggestions for and provide assistance in the preparation of publications and articles on UNESCO subjects (but not as a producer agency except in rare circumstances); supply information on request about the latest techniques and journalistic practices, both editorial and technical; and should assist interested persons and organisations to obtain such materials.

D.S.3. Radio and International

D.S. 3. Radio and International Programmes.

While the Secretariat should be free to cooperate with the United Nations and other agencies in the presentation of international programmes through transcription or otherwise, UNESCO should not enter into large commitments in the matter of an international network without consulting the Committee of Experts.

D.S. 4. Exchange of Radio material and techniques.

In collaboration with the existing International Bodies UNESCO should establish a clearing house of radio-information with the object of encouraging countries to reflect in their national broadcasting programmes the culture and achievements of other countries. To this end, UNESCO should collect information about programme techniques and new developments in broadcasting services throughout the world, in order to draw the attention of other countries to those ideas, or provide guidance on request.

D.S. 5. Information on visual media.

UNESCO should, in conjunction with U. N., and the other Specialised Agencies, act as a Clearing House for information about films, film-strips and other visual media, particularly in the fields of health, food, agriculture, social and economic problems, education, science and the arts. It should promote the adoption by all countries of common methods for collecting and cataloguing information. This international information service should be used by UNESCO for three purposes:-

(a) to provide each country with information available from all countries:

(b) to organise, through national organisations, demonstration exhibits showing the use being made of films for educational, scientific and cultural purposes;

(c) to show producers what new films are required, and assist in their supply.

UNESCO should not itself produce films, save in exceptional cases where normal agencies cannot satisfactorily be used.

D.S. 6. German educational films.

UNESCO should continue the work of selecting and adapting suitable German educational and scientific films for use by other countries, on the lines established by the Audio-Visual Aids Commission of the Committee of Allied Ministers of Education. The films should be available to all countries wishing to have them, and the cost of the work should be borne by the countries concerned.

A. GENERAL AND DEFINITIONS

1. The Sub-Commission on Libraries and Museums, during the course of its meetings on 28 and 29 November, carefully studied and gave its general approval to the reports presented by the Preparatory Commission and the Secretariat. Detailed resolutions and contributions made during the course of the discussion are given in the report of the proceedings, to which the Secretariat should give due regard.

2. The Sub-Commission emphasises the fact that UNESCO's libraries, museums and archives activities must principally and most urgently be directed towards tasks of rehabilitation; but requests that problems of a permanent nature be also dealt with immediately.

3. UNESCO's activities in the fields of libraries and museums must be at the service of education, science and culture as a whole. The libraries, museums and archives programme must therefore develop in close collaboration with the other departments of UNESCO's work.

4. The Sub-Commission recognises that the term "libraries" covers all collections of documents, manuscripts, printed books, photocopies and other educational materials, etc. and that the term "museums" applies to all collections of other objects, in the widest sense of the word, including natural objects.

B. COLLABORATION WITH SPECIALISED INTERNATIONAL ORGANISATIONS

1. The Sub-Commission recommends that, in accordance with Article 11 of its constitution, UNESCO should establish formal relations in regard to certain specific and limited matters, with such specialised international organisations as the International Council of Museums, the International Federation of Documentation, the International Federation of Library Associations and the International Standards Organisation.

C. PUBLIC LIBRARIES AND MUSEUMS

1. In the recommedations set out below the chief emphasis is on the scientific and cultural tasks in the fields of libraries and museums. But an essential responsibility of UNESCO is education at all levels, and UNESCO should contribute to this task by providing a new stimulus to public libraries and museums throughout the world.

2. UNESCO should promote the establishment and development of public circulating and reference libraries and museums for adults and children.

3. Conferences of librarians, museum professionals, educators and of others interested in these subjects should be sponsored by UNESCO, in cooperation with the appropriate international agencies.

4. Included in UNESCO's studies in this field should be the organisation of exhibitions of all types, especially circulating exhibitions, which can play an educational role of the greatest importance.

D. REHABILITATION

D. REHABILITATION OF COLLECTIONS AND PROTECTION OF MONUMENTS

1. The objective of UNESCO is to operate effectively in all the fields of education, science and culture. A first duty must be to assure the protection of the sites, monuments, documents and objects of the civilised world.

2. UNESCO should therefore assist in the restoration of collections and monuments which have suffered from the war. It should in the main stimulate and coordinate the efforts of governments and organisations, above all on behalf of the nations which at the present time lack adequate resources.

3. UNESCO should first assemble the elements of an inventory of what has been destroyed and of library, museum, archival and related needs, by stimulating surveys and the preparation of reports. It should seek to obtain immediate protection of monuments, etc. still in danger and which require urgent attention. Plans for meeting these needs, including reproduction where necessary, should be formulated for action by governments, private agencies and individuals, or if necessary by UNESCO itself.

4. The Executive Board should be asked to establish a special fund for this purpose, to which governments, foundations and individuals would be invited to contribute.

5. Service for the protection of monuments, sites and collections should take a permanent form, for the dangers which they run do not all derive from war: fires, floods and civil disturbances have all in the past caused great ravages and still do so.

E. ELIMINATION OF BARRIERS TO FREE CIRCULATION

1. UNESCO should encourage free access by the citizens of all countries to sites and collections.

2. In the field of libraries and museums UNESCO should seek to procure the lowering of the barriers which interfere with the free circulation of educational, scientific and cultural material from one country to another. Among these obstacles are tariffs, currency exchange, customs formalities, postal rates, freight charges, patents, censorship, etc.

F. COPYRIGHT

1. Libraries and museums interests should be represented in all discussions on copyright.

G. EXCHANGES AND DISTRIBUTION

1. In connection with the work of the Clearing House, the Director General, with the approval of the Executive Board, should obtain from the Allied Control Authorities appropriate powers as an agency entitled to operate in occupied countries. The Sub-Commission also expresses the hope that the occupying powers will be willing to cooperate with UNESCO in the solution of all the problems dealt with in the Sub-Commission's recommendations.

2. So far as exchanges of books and periodicals are concerned, measures can be taken at once through the creation of an International Clearing House for

for Publications. Among the first problems which the Clearing House must consider is the manner in which several large existing stock-piles of books, which exist in Germany, Czechoslovakia and England, can be distributed for the benefit of education, science and culture.

3. To fill the serious gaps created in public collections during the past seven years, the Clearing House should facilitate exchanges between all kinds of organisations and use all the available techniques, particularly methods of reproduction and documentation, etc.

4. UNESCO should encourage the creation in each country of a central library for lending, allied to those which exist already. These libraries would serve as the foundation of an international lending system.

H. BIBLIOGRAPHICAL SERVICES

1. The Sub-Commission considers that it is necessary to establish a working centre which will coordinate all bibliographical and library tasks, and in particular should coordinate and encourage international lending.

2. Most of the Sub-Commissions of UNESCO have emphasised the need for international bibliographies in their own fields. These undertakings should be encouraged and coordinated through the Centre in collaboration with specialists and bibliographers.

3. Moreover, the need has everywhere appeared for subject surveys, indexes and abstracts. It will be the obligation of the Bibliographical and Library Centre to stimulate the meeting of this demand.

4. The Centre should also be prepared to supply information about bibliographical sources in all countries. It is desirable that the Centre should encourage and, if necessary itself undertake, the publication of bibliographies, union catalogues, indexes, abstracts, etc., and assure their distribution throughout the world.

5. UNESCO should encourage, through the appropriate international organisations where possible, the adoption of uniform terminology and methods in libraries, museums and archives, with special reference to bibliography, cataloguing, classification, indexes, abstracts, formats, statistics, etc.

I. PROFESSIONAL EDUCATION FOR LIBRARIES, MUSEUMS AND ARCHIVAL WORKERS

1. UNESCO should immediately encourage the exchange of personnel between institutions in different countries. The chief effort should be directed, in association with the organisations of librarians and museographers and archivists to the encouragement and improvement of professional and technical education.

J. MUSEUM DOCUMENTATION AND TECHNIQUES

1. The Sub-Commission formally expressed the wish that parts of the essential work carried on until 1946 by the International Museums Office, one of the divisions of the former International Institute of Intellectual Cooperation, should be continued.

2. The

2. The technical problems of exhibitions should be studies, thus putting at the service of the whole of UNESCO the competence and experience of museums.

K. REPRODUCTION AND OTHER TECHNIQUES

1. UNESCO recognises the increasing importance of methods of reproduction of documents and of other objects. It should carefully study and promote all library and museum techniques, and should gather and distribute technical information helpful in the development of libraries and museums and archival workers in their specialised techniques.

L. PUBLICATIONS

1. UNESCO should study the problems involved in publishing. It should seek to establish precise statistics of publications. As a matter of rehabilitation, consideration should be given to the means of helping nations at present lacking publishing material such as printing plant, paper, ink, etc.

M. ARCHIVES

1. UNESCO should encourage the creation of an international organisation of professional archivists. It will deal, in collaboration with the organisation, with questions of technique and administration, such as the exchange of personnel, the general accessibility of archives, the establishment and exchange of inventories, the reproduction of documents and the exchange of reproductions.

N. CONCLUSION

The programme which has been outlined is vast. The greater part of the projects described in it can be set on foot in 1947, but if this is to be done it will be necessary to provide adequate funds. The Sub-Commission is of the opinion, which it has requested its Chairman and its Rapporteur to convey to the Conference, that the budget proposed is inadequate both absolutely and relatively to the total budget of UNESCO. The Sub-Commission therefore formally requests an increase in the budget for Libraries and Museums. It asks for this more particularly because one of the first tasks of Libraries and Museums must be the establishment of the UNESCO Library, which is essential for the work of the whole organisation and which will require a large personnel and considerable expenditure in the acquisition of working collections, for the service of the Secretariat and for the operation of UNESCO's information services. The budget of the library should not in any case appear as part of the resources of Libraries and Museums.

NATURAL SCIENCES

I. The Sub-Commission on Natural Sciences gives general approval to the statement of the tasks and functions of the scientific secretariat of UNESCO, as outlined in the White Booklet working paper "Science and UNESCO" (Prep.Com./Nat.Sci.Com./12), and the Green Booklet "Report on the Program of UNESCO", Chap. V. (C/2).

II. The Sub-Commission on Natural Sciences, learning that approximately $ US 1,096,500 will be available as budget for the Natural Sciences Section in 1947 (see Prep.Com./Nat.Sci.Com./14) considers that the program for the year should be as stated in document Prep.Com./Nat.Sci.Com./23 (being the amended version of Prep.Com./Nat.Sci.Com./13); with the funds allocated roughly as follows:-

	$US
Personnel	146,500
International Conference	130,000
Studies and Surveys	70,000
Publications & Productions	50,000
Grants-in-aid	400,000
Consultation and Field Services	200,000
Exchanges, Fellowships	100,000
	1,096,500

The Sub-Commission considers that no sum less than $ US 1,000,000 in any year would allow of the carrying through of an effective program.

III. The Sub-Commission on Natural Sciences takes note of the fact that number of further matters are discussed in the White Booklet, on which no immediate action is proposed (see Prep.Com./Nat.Sci.Com./13a), with the exception of items 1 and 3.

IV. The Sub-Commission on Natural Sciences forwards herewith the attached Special Resolutions to the Program Commission.

SPECIAL RESOLUTIONS

All Carried Unanimously

Special Resolution A (Ref. page 31, item 3)

Resolved:

That the Sub-Commission on Natural Sciences approves the Draft Formal Agreement between UNESCO and the International Council of Scientific Unions, and urges the Sub-Commission on External Relations to do so also. (copied to the Chairman of the Sub-Commission on External Relations)

Special Resolution B (Ref. page 31, item 5)

Resolved:

That UNESCO should concern itself, in cooperation with the International Council of Scientific Unions, with the matter of restarting the publication of scientific journals interrupted by the war, and of starting new journals; and that this problem should be handled from the point of view of the rationalisation of such journals and their distribution among the various countries.

Special Resolution C (Ref. page 32, item 6)

Resolved:

That, without waiting for funds to be found by the Economic and Social Council, but if possible with the financial cooperation of WHO and FAO, UNESCO should institute a group of Nutritional Science and Food Technology Field Teams consisting of scientists of high quality, chosen with reference to all aspects of the problem, with assistants, based (where possible) on existing laboratories, but made fully mobile by special transportation aids; and that these teams be formed for the following regions:-

Immediately:- (a) India
(b) Hylean Amazon
(c) China

As soon as conditions permit:- Africa.

Special Resolution D (Ref. page 32, item 10)

Resolved:

That the scheme for the establishment of an International Institute of the Hylean Amazon at Belem (Paraguay, Brazil) should be supported; that the secretariat be authorised to set up an International Scientific Commission in consultation with Brazil, Colombia, Bolivia, Equador, Peru, Venezuela, France, Great Britain, Netherlands, and the USA, to investigate the question on the spot as soon as possible in all aspects, including both immediate, and long-term plans, financial matters and the framing of a draft agreement between the cooperating governments and UNESCO; further that the Executive Board consider this project on the recommendation of this Commission, and instruct the secretariat accordingly.

Special Resolution E (Ref. page 33, item 14)

Resolved:

That the Sub-Commission on Natural Sciences is unable to accept the view, implicit in the Draft Directives governing UNESCO's relations with Non-Governmental International Organisations (UNESCO/C/Admin & Jur /SC Leg & Ext.Rel./3 Part II) that such organisations cannot be granted financial aid towards their administrative expenses, while recognising, therefore, that in cases where national governments already pay contributions (as in the case of the International Scientific Unions) grants should only be made for specific projects, the Sub-Commission considers that, at least so far as international scientific organisations are concerned, the Draft Directives should be amended so as to place, between items IV (e) and (f), an item reading

"Financial support by UNESCO to the organisation towards its administrative expenses, as a temporary measure in its initial stages, if it is not in receipt of direct contributions from national governments for this purpose".

It recommends this change to the Program Commission.
(copied to the Chairman of the Sub-Commission on External Relations)

Special Resolution F

Resolved:

That the Budget Break-Down presented by the Secretariat be accepted on bloc, with the addition of the words "and national" in the second line of item V a, after "international".

Special Resolution G

Resolved:

That the Sub-Commission on Natural Sciences considers that the secretariat should have the power to transfer funds from one item to another within the budget of the Section of Natural Sciences, with the approval of the Director-General, in the course of its work, if found necessary; care being always taken to keep purely administrative expenses at a minimum. (copied to the Chairman of the Sub-Commission on Administrative and Financial Matters).

Special Resolution H

Resolved:

That in view of the fact that the Natural Sciences and Technology constitute the material basis of modern world civilisation, and that their clarity and universality form one of its major spiritual forces, the Sub-Commission on Natural Sciences considers that the Budget allotted allotted to the Natural Sciences should be increased in future years, and should not be less than $ US 1,000,000 even if the total budget of UNESCO is reduced below its present figure.

DIGEST OF DIRECTIVES AS AMENDED BY THE SUB-COMMISSION ON NATURAL SCIENCES

The directives which follow give the lines of work of the secretariat in 1947. It should be emphasised that the directives are not placed in the order of their importance.

Of the concrete operations referred to in directives 6 and 10, these which have highest priority are the Hylean Amazon scheme and the Nutritional Science Field Teams scheme.

THE SECRETARIAT IS INSTRUCTED:-

1. To do whatever is possible, according to the means which may become available, to meet the needs of the devastated areas in scientific and technological apparatus and equipment, including purchase and shipment, and having special regard to the availability of war surplus equipment which might be of use.

   And to make recommendation to the United Nations Organisation for the adoption of a policy of reparations in the form of scientific equipment, newly manufactured and in commercial and governmental stock in the ex-Axis countries, for the scientific rehabilitation of the war-damaged countries.

   Note: In transferring scientific equipment as part of reparations, every effort will be made not to interfere with the continued scientific activity, at a normal level, in the countries supplying the equipment.

2. To establish a series of Field Science Cooperation Offices starting with those regions of the world remote from the main centres of science and technology; to begin in 1947 with four (East Asia (China), South Asia (India), Middle East, and Latin America); each to consist of scientific men engaged in every type of liaison work which will assist the scientists of the region, having special regard to the raising of the standard of life of the non-industralised peoples.

3. To assist in every way possible the work of the International Council of Scientific Unions and the specialised unions which it federates.

4. To stimulate the setting up of International Advisory Councils in the Engineering, Medical, and Agricultural Sciences, by inviting representatives from each of the existing international organisations in these fields, together with representatives of the relevant UN specialised agencies and other interested bodies.

5. To explore all possibilities of imporvement of the present situation in scientific literature, e.g. (a) by ameliorating the present serious position in the movement of books and periodicals, (b) by preparing for a world congress to consider rationalisation of scientific publishing and abstracting, (c) by stimulating the photolithographic reproduction of back runs of the most important scientific periodicals, (d) by assisting existing scientific microfilm and photostat services, (e) by taking measures to establish uniform scientific terminology in all countries speaking the same or allied languages.

6. To assist scientific work of international significance by grants-in-aid directly or through the relevant international scientific union, and by sending scientific and technical assistance by means of personnel on mission to national insitutions. Amongst the kinds of assistance would be:- (a) support of type-culture collections (bacteria, algae, fungi, genetic mutants) leading to the preparation of a world-catalog of strains maintained, (b) grants towards selected expeditions, (c) aid to multisearch groups, (d) aid to existing international laboratories (such as Naples, Jungfraujoch, Roscoff), (e) aid to certain national institutions carrying on work of international significance, (See Special Resolution on Nutritional Science Field Teams), (f) aid to collections of growing plants with a view to their better international cooperative use.

7. To assist the dissemination of essential research equipment and material exchanges, notably by operating a Scientific Apparatus Information Bureau, and by taking measures to overcome difficulties arising out of currency restrictions.

8. To assist (in conjunction with other appropriate Sections of UNESCO) the development and circulation of scientific cinema films, for research, teaching, and popularisation purposes, not only by keeping records, but by arranging for the provision of titles and soundtracks in many languages.

9. To assist the travel of scientists themselves across national boundaries (a) by financial assistance along selected lines, (b) by exploring the possibilities of 'letters of credence' or 'cartes d'identite', (c) by encouraging the formation of 'foyers des savants' in the principal cities, (d) by facilitating the transport of scientific instruments and documents carried by scientists across frontiers when travelling.

10. To explor the possibilities of the foundation of new international scientific laboratories and observatories (as requested by letter from the UN Economic and Social Council, signed Trygve Lie, Oct. 1946). Among these might be institutes of (a) astronomy, (b) nutritional science, (c) meteorology, (d) applied mathematics (computing machines), (e) tropical life and resources (Amazon Basin), (f) health (specific diseases such as tuberculosis and cancer, (g) tropical diseases field research station (h) oceanography and fisheries of Indian Ocean (in South India or Ceylon), (i) ornithology (bird migration):
furthermore to investigate the feasibility of smaller projects such as international stockrooms for
(a) pure substances not commercially obtainable,
(b) new materials (plastics, glasses, alloys, etc.)
(c) radioactive isotopes, (d) pure line strains of laboratory animals.
Note: In the planning of each project, advice to be sought from the relevant international scientific unions or other similar international bodies or agencies.

11. To take the necessary steps to begin the compliation of a world register of scientific institutions and scientists.

12. To

12. To collect up-to-date information on what the individual nations are doing with respect to the sending and reception of scientific personnel, to take responsibility (in conjunction with other Sections of UNESCO) for the completion of the UNRRA Fellowship program (if this devolves upon UNESCO), to administer any Fellowships which may be given to UNESCO by special benefactions such as that of the American Chemical Society, and to institute a certain number of Fellowships.

13. To cooperate with, and advise when required, all the other elements in the UN structure - the Economic and Social Council, the other Councils, and the other specialised agencies (FAO, ILO, WHO, UNADA (if and when set up), PICAO, IRO, ITO, etc.) by joint committees, etc.

14. To aid the work, in every way possible, of the smaller, more specialised, international organisations, such as the IBWM, the ITB, the ISO, the ICZN, the IMO, the ICES, the IHO, etc., etc. (See Special Resolution on Grants-in-aid for administrative expenses).

15. To do whatevery may be possible to inform the public of all countries on new scientific discoveries and their possible bearing on international and social relations, by, e.g. the publication of pamphlets; aid to, and correlation of, science news services, etc.

Note: In carrying out this directive, the scientific secretariat to cooperate with, and where possible work through, other Sections of UNESCO, and other agencies, both international and national.

16. To give whatev r aid may be feasible to science museums, and to consider the stimulation or preparation of travelling science exhibitions, travel panels (of lecturers), etc., etc.

SOCIAL SCIENCES, PHILOSOPHY AND HUMANISTIC STUDIES

1. At the outset of its deliberations the Sub-Commission decided to recommend to the Programme Commission of the General Conference that philosophy and humanistic studies be separated from the social sciences and placed in a separate category. There was broad agreement, however, on the fundamental unity of the various disciplines.

Part I - SOCIAL SCIENCES

Regarding the proposals presented by the Preparatory Commission for the social sciences, there was general approval of the principles, but some divergence of views on the feasibility of attempting extensive programs in certain projects during the first year of the Organisation, and an emphasis upon the need for more extensive exploration by competent experts of the feasibility of certain other proposals from the point of view of scientific method.

2. In considering the program for the social sciences outlined in the Preparatory Commission's report, the Sub-Commission approved projects which fall naturally into six main groups.

Group I - Organisation of and Service to the Social Sciences.

It was recommended under this head that UNESCO should:

1. Collaborate with and promote voluntary international organisations in the various social sciences;

2. Prepare a world inventory of research resources in the social sciences, primarily to assist the operations of UNESCO.

3. Explore, in consultation with experts, the feasibility of an yearbook which would be an appraisal of the year's work in the various social sciences with special reference to their international aspect;

4. Explore the problem of providing abstracts and bibliographies covering those social sciences for which no such service at present exists.

Group II - Home and Community Planning.

The Sub-Commission recommended in regard to the proposed setting up of an international centre to serve as a clearing house for experiments in Home and Community Planning, that UNESCO should:

Consult with

1. Consult with the Economic and Social Council and see whether work by UNESCO in this field would be useful;

2. Engage consultants, make investigations and report to the 1947 session of the General Conference;

3. Invite national work on this question through the National Commissions;

4. Defer decision on the principle of establishing the new center until after the 1947 session of the General Conference.

Group III - International Study Centers.

The recommendation adopted under this head was to the following effect:

The Sub-Commission approves the principle of international study centers, and takes note of the report on the establishment of a center in international relations presented to it.

It recommends that the following action be taken during 1947:

1. The drawing up of definite proposals before the next session of the General Conference:

2. The organization of three short-period courses as an experimental measure.

Group IV - International Organization and Technique

The Sub-Commission recommended in favour of the setting up of a small group of experts to study and report on methods of international organization.

Group V - A Study of Tensions Crucial to Peace.

The Sub-Commission distinguished what may be described as a broad field of tension centering around three inter-connected groups of world problems; those relating to nationalism and internationalism; those relating to population; those relating to technological progress. It considered these three groups of problems to be closely bound up with questions of education, science and culture and to be crucially important in the establishment of peace and security.

In dealing with this field of tension the Sub-Commission considered that the whole armament of the social sciences should be brought into operation, in particular political science, economics, sociology, anthropology, human geography, and psychology; that UNESCO should have large recourse to scholars, experts and administrators active in these fields, and should examine, devise and develop instruments and methods for the investigation of these matters, always with the direct object of practical action. To this end it should have regular recourse to the National Commissions whenever appropriate. These are long term projects to be initiated in 1947 and continued over a period of years. They are:

Nationalism and Internationalism

NATIONALISM AND INTERNATIONALISM: UNESCO should interest itself in the study of the elements which constitute "nationalism" in all countries and their bearing upon close international cooperation.

Three main objectives should be aimed at:

1. To bring to light the distinctive character of the various national cultures and national ideals.

2. To help in stimulating the sympathy and respect of the nations for each others ideals and aspirations and appreciation of national problems.

3. To study and recommend for action possible measures which can bring the nations into closer cooperation, while maintaining fullest respect for their cultures and ideals.

POPULATION PROBLEMS

The United Nations Economic and Social Council has set up a Demographic Commission. In the work of this commission UNESCO will necessarily be called upon to deal with questions of education, science and culture in relation to population problems.

The project would involve the identification and analysis of: those areas in which there has been excessive population increase or decrease; migration to or away from areas with the consequent impact of new cultural and environmental factors; pensions created among racial or cultural groups within national groups and independent areas; the cultural status of displaced populations; the cultural effects of restricting or stimulating the large scale movement of peoples; the problems arising from conflicting customs, standards, values and ideologies of populations in contact and competition under new territorial economic and political circumstances.

SOCIAL AND INTERNATIONAL PROBLEMS INVOLVED IN MODERN TECHNOLOGICAL DEVELOPMENTS.

UNESCO should interest itself in the study of the effects of modern technological developments upon social life and institutions generally, and more particularly upon the manner in which such developments might lead to the production of tensions, both national and international, and exercise thereby an adverse effect upon international understanding and cooperation.

Background and Object. An enquiry was begun by the International Institute of Intellectual Cooperation upon the problem of mechanisation, and 27 documents are already available for study. The scope and purpose of this enquiry should be enlarged so as to include new technological developments and at the same time made more precise and directed towards the formulation of practical recommendations. The relationships between education and technological developments call for especial attention.

One of the instruments UNESCO might usefully employ in the study of this field of tension is the public opinion survey. UNESCO will need to examine the scope and scientific value of such surveys, including their possible application to international affairs.

Group VI - International Law. UNESCO will draw up in 1947, with the aid of experts, a scheme of comparative studies of the juridical systems of the different countries and of international law, with the object of promoting international law and bringing these studies before the general public.

3. The above proposals constitute the specific recommendations by the Sub-Commission as to work in the social sciences which UNESCO should undertake in 1947. It was assumed that a number of general recommendations regarding work which UNESCO might usefully undertake or facilitate (such as the exchange of personnel and materials, arrangements for translations, etc.) apply to all sections of UNESCO.

4. As a result of its deliberations the Sub-Commission decided to defer two projects: (1) a tentative study of the means available for preparing a social and economic history of the second world war and (2) an analysis of Nazi psycho-political techniques. In the meantime UNESCO should act as a clearing-house of work being done in the different countries towards collecting publishing and commenting upon material relating to the second world war, including the social and psychological problems of nazism and fascism.

The Sub-Commission did not directly examine those projects listed in the Preparatory Commission's report as suitable to be undertaken subsequent to 1947; but favourable reference was made to certain of them during the debate. The projects in question included particularly (1) glossaries of technical terms - the preparation of international reference books setting out the various meanings of the technical terms used in the social sciences; and (2) popular publications - designed to bring the social sciences, more especially in their international aspects, to wider public attention.

5. In order to establish priorities for the guidance of the Program and Budget Committees a sub-committee was appointed by the Chairman on the authority of the Sub-Commission consisting of the representatives of six national delegations, the rapporteurs and the chairman to decide upon priorities for the projects agreed upon by the Sub-Commission for submission to the Program Committee of the General Conference. The following countries were selected: South Africa, the U.S., the U.K., France, Czechoslovakia, Belgium and China.

This special Sub-Committee considered all proposals and agreed unanimously on the following recommendations to the Program Committee:

(1) Group I, items 1 and 2, which are concerned with collaboration with and the promotion of international organisations, and the assembling of essential research resources for the operation of UNESCO's program are regarded as basic and essential, and thus are placed in a special category.

(2) Groups V, III and II are conceived as closely inter-related projects, centering around tensions crucial to peace, involving on the one hand the incorporation of community interests through the home and community planning proposals and, on the other, essential educational features which features which utilise the principle of international study centers. This group of projects is given Priority I.

(3) Groups IV and VI, dealing with the study of methods of international organization and the study of international law, and items 3 and 4 of Group I, which are explorations by the Secretariat in regard to the preparation of a yearbook, abstracts and bibliographies, are given Priority II.

It is the opinion of the Sub-Commission, however, that all projects agreed upon for 1947 are regarded as being of importance. These projects not given priority for 1947 have already been deferred or eliminated.

PART II - PHILOSOPHY AND HUMANISTIC STUDIES

I PHILOSOPHY

The Sub-Commission having studied the Reports of the Preparatory Commission and supplementary Documents submitted by the Secretariat, wish to express their general approval of the principles and plans of action expressed therein. But, as the Sub-Commission had to refer on several points to the text of Chapter VI of the Document-Programme, and not to the skeleton list of the projects, here is a complete list of formulae approved by the Sub-Commission.

A. CORRESPONDENCE:

The Secretariat should centralise the correspondence which will be exchanged between Universities, Philosophical Societies and Philosophers.

B. BIBLIOGRAPHY AND CARD-INDEX:

The Secretariat should help the International Institute of Philosophy to publish an International Bibliography of Philosophy, being understood that the drafting-committee should be truly representative of every tendency and every country, and that this Bibliography should be accurate and comprehensive. It is recommended that the drafting-committees should secure the help of the National Commissions in all countries.

It is understood that a card-index of references to articles in Philosophical reviews throughout the world will be created at the international Institure of Philosophy, and that UNESCO will assist the Institute in performing this task.

C. UNESCO DISCUSSIONS:

The Secretariat should study the desirability and practicability of international contacts among scholars and thinkers of all kinds in the Social Sciences, Philosophy and Humanities, and, in particular, of international meetings of experts in the various fields which bear directly on the ends of UNESCO; the Secretariat will report the results of its study at the next General Conference; further, it is authorized to arrange some meetings which clearly serve the ends of UNESCO during 1947.

D. RIGHTS OF MAN:

The Secretariat

The Secretariat should organise, in relation with the United Nations Commission on the Rights of Man, an International Conference in order to clarify the principles on which might be founded a modern declaration of the Rights of Man.

E. TRANSLATIONS:

The work of translation of philosophical works should be referred to the National Commissions for action in 1947, and not be undertaken by UNESCO itself in 1947. But the Secretariat will prepare a coordinated scheme for translation, with a view to action by UNESCO after 1947.

F. PROLONGED CONTACTS:

This project is delayed, as its realisation depends on the creation of a UNESCO Home for Scholars.

G. TEACHING FOR PEACE:

The Sub- Commission noticed, that this project is already included under project "A" of the Sub-Commission on Education, which is concerned with education in international understanding; the Sub-Commission feel that the contribution of philosophy to this enquiry should be made in three ways:

(a) direct advice of experts consulted by the Secretariat in carrying out Education Project "A";

(b) ideas and suggestions discussed at the three short courses thich are to be held in 1947;

(c) as a result of the conferences or meetings of thinkers of all kinds which have been agreed to (under paragraph "C. UNESCO DISCUSSIONS").

II. HUMANISTIC STUDIES

II. HUMANISTIC STUDIES

The Sub-Commission, having studied the reports of the Preparatory Commission and supplementary documents submitted by the Secretariat, expressed the desire to put up a small committee for the drafting of a more precise working programme. The report from the small committee and a motion made by the delegation for the United States served as basis for the discussion. The Sub-Commission approved the general ideas expressed in the motion of the United States, but desired to add a certain number of propositions taken from the working programme set up by the small committee which have a bearing on points of urgent need. The following list gives the final form of the proposition which the Sub-Commission wishes to put before the Programme Commission.

1. (a) The Secretariat should during 1947 carefully study the basic principles of the action to be taken in the humanistic studies, and define those principles both with regard to their academic implications and to their implications in so far as the principles of UNESCO are concerned.

   (b) The Secretariat should during 1947 set up special commissions or fact-finding boards with the aim of recommending more concrete proposals for further consideration and implementation.

2. In conjunction with the Permanent International Committee of Linguists (P.I.C.L.) the Secretariat must enquire into the possibility of creating a documentation centre for linguistic questions of outstanding international interest, namely linguistic statistics, the preparation of linguistic maps in fields so far unexplored, indexes showing the adoption of new national languages and alphabets, and a study of the importance of a world language for the publication of learned works.

3. The Secretariat will prepare an agreement with the International Academic Union parallel to the agreement already drawn up with the International Council of Scientific Unions; the International Academic Union should be asked to study the possibility of carrying on with the big scientific works in the field of humanistic studies hitherto prepared and published in Germany.

4. The Secretariat will undertake an enquiry into the means recommended for the reprinting of classical texts on the lines of the Teubner editions of Greek and Latin authors.

5. The Secretariat will, in collaboration with the National Commissions, make an enquiry into the place occupied by studies of the past and into the classical tradition in teaching in the different parts of the world.

6. The Secretariat should, in collaboration with the National Commissions, consider the possibility of UNESCO itself disseminating booklets which emphasize the general importance of the study of the past in the various zones of human culture and the part played by scientific research in this field.

ARTS AND LETTERS

A.- The Sub-Commission of Creative Arts proposes the following services, including all the arts, for execution in 1947:

1. UNESCO should study the role of education in Creative Arts at all levels, including that in professional schools. It should also regard as urgent the organisation of information services in the Creative Arts, and should recommend for the near future a study of conditions affecting the creative artists.

   N.B.- In this connection the Sub-Commission adopted the following resolution:

   (1) "that the freedom of the creative artist to accomplish his proper purpose as an artist in any nation is a matter of concern to the peoples of all nations, and

   (2) "that UNESCO, acting for and on behalf of the peoples of all nations, will take such measures as are open to it under its Constitution to protect and defend the freedom of the artist wherever it is put in danger."

2. UNESCO should encourage the world-wide circulation of the products of creative artists in both original and reproduced form. This activity should be carried on in conjunction with museums, musical societies, and other groups which organise national or international exhibitions or productions of art.

   N.B.- UNESCO should immediately study the best means of promoting the movement of art exhibitions from country to country and in this connection study the obstacles thereto, such as transport charges, customs duties, and transport difficulties with a view to reducing such difficulties. To this end, UNESCO should keep in touch with national organisations arranging such exhibitions, in order to enable the latter to cross frontiers. Also UNESCO should collect and disseminate information on music and dance festivals and encourage international festivals of this character.

3. UNESCO should investigate and devise means of experimenting with modern techniques in the teaching of Creative Arts. This would include, for the visual arts, new methods of reproduction and interpretation including color reproductions, motion pictures, three-dimensional photography, etc.

4. UNESCO should help artists obtain the tools, methods and materials needed in the creation of their art.

   N.B.- The Sub-Commission recommends that UNESCO should study and encourage the improvement of musical instruments, records and musical publications, and their diffusion.

B.- UNESCO should

B.- UNESCO should in due course study and record folklore, collate and, where necessary, study the methods of preserving native art and culture.

1. The following recommendation was approved:

UNESCO should cooperate with the agencies now working to preserve the arts and culture of non-industrialised countries and sectors from extinction or debasement through contact with industrial civilisation.

The above resolutions covering the Creative Arts in general include all the projects assigned to visual arts, music and dance.

In addition there are listed below the specific services adopted by the Sub-Commission on Creative Arts for execution by Literature and Theater:

A.- Literature

(1) Translation

Creation of a UNESCO translation office, with the following functions so far as literature is concerned:

a) To encourage a bibliography of translations such as the Index Translationum begun by the International Institute of Intellectual Cooperation.

b) To compile a list of first-class translators.

c) To compile and to keep up to date a list of works suitable for translation. In selecting these works, UNESCO should consult the National Commissions and such other agencies and eminent personalities as may be deemed qualified. UNESCO reserves the right to submit its own suggestions to the agencies or individuals consulted, but shall not in any circumstances assume responsibility independent of such consultations for the selection of work for translation.

d) To study the means for improving the relations between authors, translators and publishers.

(2) Publications

a) Creation within UNESCO of an International Literary Pool whose function will be to supply magazines and newspapers with especially pertinent material for publication. This service will be channeled through the ordinary Mass Communication and Public Information Services of UNESCO.

b) Recommendation: Although

b) Recommendation: Although UNESCO should not normally itself publish literary workd it is recommended that UNESCO encourage and if necessary assist certain publications which have been considered worthy.

N.B.- In this respect it is suggested that UNESCO study the possibilities for establishing (a) a chronological index of world literary activity, and (b) an International Literary Yearbook.

(3) Anthology.

By exception to the general policy on publications the following resolution was accepted:

"That UNESCO should encourage and, if necessary, undertake in 1947, the publication of an Anthology of Suffering and Resistance."

B.- The Theatre.

(1) It was resolved to recommend that the Theatre, including Ballet and Opera, should be placed on an equal footing with the other Creative Arts of the Division.

N.B.- It was the sense of the Sub-Commission that the Film should be included and recognised amongst the Creative Arts and that UNESCO initiate an investigation of the contemporary influences which tend to improve or impair the quality of the films. This proposal was not however adopted as a resolution.

(2) It was resolved to call an international meeting of theatre experts for the purpose of founding an International Theatre Institute, which would be independent of UNESCO and supported by private or national branches or centres.

The following proposals, listing priority activities for Creative Arts have been adopted by the Sub-Commission of Creative Arts, and shall be observed by the Secretariat in the execution of the above resolutions and recommendations:

(1) Information and document services will be organised immediately in Creative Arts. These information services shall be coordinated with the related sections of UNESCO with a view to an economy of personnel.

(2) In the Central Exchange which, it is expected, will be set up by UNESCO, Creative Arts (Visual Arts, Music, Literature, Theatre,) will seek to:

a) encourage and arrange for the direct exchange of students, teachers and creative artists and take practical steps for the purpose:

b) encourage and facilitate

b) encourage and facilitate visits of students, teachers and artists to other countries;

c) publicize schools or institutes, of an international character, in the arts, including those offering short-term and summer instruction as well as longer courses;

d) encourage international festivals in the arts;

e) encourage the exchange of exhibitions and of musical and theatrical performances;

f) encourage international organisations in the holding of conferences bringing creative artists together.

(3) UNESCO shall collaborate with and assist international organisations in the arts. Where such organisations do not exist, as in many of the Visual Arts and the Theatre, UNESCO should encourage efforts to establish them, provided they are on a satisfactory basis and appear to have good chances of success.

(4) A Committee should be set up in collaboration with Mass Communication for the purpose of preparing recommendations to Member States with regard to:

a) a reduction of postage rates on books, manuscripts, reproductions of painting and other art objects which are sent by mail;

b) the simplification of customs formalities and a reduction of duties on cultural material;

c) possible immunity from customs examinations and duties for books, films, records and other cultural material sent out by UNESCO.

d) the interest taken by Arts and Letters in everything concerning the improvement of the present practice in regard to copyright.

(5) A similar Committee should be charged with the task of approaching air, sea and rail companies in order to obtain:

a) a reduction of transport charges on shipments of books, paintings, stage scenery and accessories and other material in connection with exhibitions or activities arranged by UNESCO;

b) a reduction in fares for students, teachers and creative artists travelling to other countries under exchange projects sponsored by UNESCO.

UNESCO GENERAL CONFERENCE
Paris
Report No. II.

January 1, 1947. The first meeting of the General Conference of UNESCO concluded on Tuesday, December 10, 1946.

At the final plenary session the Conference elected Julian Huxley to be Director General; adopted reports from Commissions on Educational Reconstruction, Program, Legal and External Relations, and Administration and Finance; voted a budget of six million dollars for the year 1947; and accepted an invitation to hold the next annual meeting in Mexico City.

The final report on Program, supplementing the reports of six sub-commissions, emphasized a few major projects. Among projects listed were world-wide campaign against illiteracy, revision of text books and related teaching material to promote international understanding; scientific projects to raise the level of living in tropical areas; constructive use of the radio, film and press; a study of the feasibility of an international radio network; and fundamental studies of tensions that conduce to war. The report was drafted by Archibald MacLeish, of the American Delegation.

The Conference agreed that UNESCO should stress assistance to war-devastated countries during the coming year, although it should not be a relief organization. A commission on reconstruction will coordinate the work of private bodies, and disseminate information about needs.

The report on administration urged the Director General to avoid the segmentation of his staff, and recommended the use of "task forces" and special consultants so far as practicable. Detailed planning of the administrative organization is entrusted to the Director General and the Executive Board.

All commissions and subcommissions of the Conference recommended that the Secretariat aid where possible and collaborate and cooperate with the specialized agencies of the United Nations and with recognized voluntary international institutions, and stimulate and encourage the activities of voluntary national organizations and National Commissions.

and

In three weeks of meetings, the Conference completed a large agenda. It had to determine the main lines of organization and program, and bring UNESCO into official relationship with the United Nations. No issues of substance developed. Although a comprehensive program was adopted, all recognized that UNESCO is a "fledgling organization" which can make only a modest start in its first year. But one member of the American Delegation said, UNESCO has promise of becoming > "the stimulating and coordinating agency for all activities of the United Nations in the illimitable and overlapping fields of education and communication. UNESCO has vast possibilities as a circulatory system tying the members of the world body together-and keeping down the blood pressure".

Following are summaries of the Reports on Educational Reconstruction and on Program:

COMMISSION ON RECONSTRUCTION AND REHABILITATION

The Commission recommended that a special Committee on Reconstruction, Rehabilitation and Equalization be created. Raising funds, procuring educational materials and equipment, and developing training programs for educational personnel were mentioned as its specific objectives. Countries receiving funds and materials will turn them over to a national authority for distribution. Only projects of immediate importance, requiring prompt action, will be financed directly by the UNESCO budget while funds received from other sources will be placed in a separate category and administered by the special committee.

The activities approved by the Commission were:

(1) UNESCO will serve as the central agency in an extensive fund-raising campaign. It will formulate relief proposals, secure contributions, make arrangements to distribute supplies, and stimulate the National Commissions and voluntary organizations to cooperate in these activities.

This

This section of the international secretariat is to supply pamphlets, reports, photographs, posters, graphs, films, newsletters, statistical data and histories to aid in the campaign to raise funds. It should call conferences of relief agencies and if necessary facilitate the travel of qualified representatives of voluntary relief organizations and maintain UNESCO representatives in the field.

(2) For needy areas UNESCO will publish materials having a direct value to schools and institutions, seek fellowships for qualified leaders in these areas and arrange for specialists to conduct educational seminars and workshops in war-torn sectors. It may underwrite the cost of a few "pilot" projects. For the summer of 1947 it will promote youth service camps in cooperation with student organizations.

(3) UNESCO will set up immediately a limited reserve fund or revolving fund to purchase surplus war property, especially scientific apparatus, and pay for transporting goods in emergencies.

Resolutions were passed to cooperate with the World Health Organization and with the UN Economic and Social Council in continuing the UNRRA work for children and the UNRRA fellowship training program. Close relations between children and youth in donor and receiving countries were proposed. The governments of devastated countries will send concrete information on their country's most urgent needs and report activities of their international voluntary organizations, and donor countries will report on the progress of their contribution to UNESCO.

THE PROGRAM COMMISSION reported its summary findings by subcommittees as follows:

Education

(1) For education in international understanding a study is to be made of the present activities along these lines in primary and secondary schools and colleges in consultation with a panel of experts; current training in institutions of higher learning will be surveyed; and a seminar will be established for teachers under thirty-five years of age.

Other immediate activities are to be the publication of a year book, formation of a committee on educational statistics, establishment of a clearing house for the international exchange of persons and assistance to international relations clubs.

(2) In

(2) In its long-term work for international understanding the Secretariat, aided by a panel of experts, will begin in 1947 to help establish minimum fundamental education for all persons throughout the world and start the collection of data on adult education from member states. To improve teaching textbooks and teaching materials for international understanding, the Secretariat will establish a clearing house for revising textbooks, help formulate a code of ethics, call a world conference, and encourage bilateral agreements between member states. The Secretariat will also seek to improve the status of the teaching profession generally.

A committee of experts in health education, in cooperation with the World Health Organization, Food and Agriculture Organization, International Labor Organization, etc., will be appointed. The plight of handicapped children in war devastated countries will be studied; youth service camps in these areas were endorsed because of their educational merits. The problem of re-education in former enemy countries, the circulation of an international education newsletter and the designation of January 1 as World Peace Day are referred to the Secretariat for further consideration. Action is also postponed on the education of youth along general technical and professional lines.

Mass Communications

UNESCO will appoint three commissions to study the needs of countries in which war has caused the loss or shortage of personnel, equipment or raw materials and report within six months on immediate measures for improvement.

The Secretariat will facilitate through fellowships the pooling of experience by an international exchange of instructors and trainees. It will cooperate with the Freedom of Information subcommission under the UN Commission of Human Rights in the preparation of a report on the obstacles to the free flow of information and ideas.

A committee of experts is to be appointed to study proposals for a world-wide radio network. It will have a program committee and study the possibility of collecting materials for the use of those national or international radio facilities which become available to UNESCO. The press and films will be surveyed to determine the extent, range and trend of production and distribution and the nature and degree of public usage. Telecommunications and postal services are to be investigated to show how their coverage can be extended, and how the cost of services to the press and radio by cable, wireless, and airmail can be reduced.

UNESCO will also establish a committee to study and formulate recommendations on the responsibilities of UNESCO in the copyright field. It will request the National Commissions to send by March 1, 1947, their observations on copyright matters and may cooperate with the Belgian Government on the proposed copyright conference during 1947 if the committee so recommends.

UNESCO will collect ideas of international significance and cooperate with experts in selecting a major theme of world interest for films, radio programs and press features. It will either organize or stimulate the organization of an international forum of press and radio.

The Secretariat will invite member and non-member states to sign a convention facilitating the international circulation of visual and auditory materials, and their importation without duty or quantitative restrictions. It will stimulate the production generally of international periodicals and draw attention of the press to accurate sources of information. It will also assist in the formation of an international film council and encourage national visual councils or institutes.

UNESCO will assist in drawing the attention of film producers to what is required in films for educational, scientific and cultural purposes.

NATURAL SCIENCE

The Amazon study of tropical areas and the nutritional science field project for India, China, and the Amazon will be given the highest priority. The Secretariat has been instructed to meet the needs of devasted areas for scientific apparatus and equipment, where possible through purchases of war surpluses.

Field offices, to assist local scientists in raising living standards of non-industrialized peoples, will be set up, starting in China, India, the Middle East and Latin America. UNESCO will cooperate with the International Council of Scientific Unions and the creation of International Advisory Engineering and Medical Councils will be encouraged.

Specific projects include the improvement of scientific literature; preparation for a World Congress to consider rationalization of scientific publication and abstracting; the promotion of photolithographs, reproductions, microfilms and photostat services; and the establishment of uniform scientific terminology.

Grants

Grants-in-aid and the assignment of experts to national institutions, the operation of a scientific apparatus information bureau, and the circulation of scientific films for research, teaching and popularization are other activities proposed.

The Secretariat will explore the possibilities for establishing new international scientific laboratories, observatories, and stock rooms for pure substances, new materials, radio-active isotopes, etc. It will begin the compilation of a world register of scientific institutions and scientists, and take the responsibility for the completion of the UNRRA Fellowship Program. And as a continuing service the Secretariat will inform the public in all countries of new scientivic documents and will outline their bearings on international and social relations.

SOCIAL SCIENCE, PHILOSOPHY AND HUMANITIES

In the field of the Social Sciences, UNESCO will prepare a world inventory of research resources and explore the feasibility of publishing a Year Book, abstracts and bibliographies.

Home and Community planning will be approached in consultation with the Economic and Social Council and in collaboration with the National Commissions. International Study Centers are approved and a small group of experts will study and report on methods of international organization. A study of the tensions crucial to peace, in their relationship to nationalism, internationalism, population and technological progress will be initiated in 1947. The study of national judicial systems and international law to acquaint the general public with the rules of law will be explored.

In philosophy the Subcommittee recommends the centralization of correspondence exchanged between universities, philosophical societies and philosophers; help to the International Institute of Philosophy in publishing an international bibliography of philosophy and in developing a card index of articles in philosophical reviews. In cooperation with the UN Commission of the Rights of Man the Secretariat will organize an international conference to decide upon principles basic to a modern declaration of the rights of man.

In humanistic studies the Secretariat will explore basic principles of action and set up special commissions to recommend concrete proposals. In conjunction with a permanent committee of linguists the Secretariat will consider creating a documentation center for linguistic questions. It will prepare an agreement with The International Union of Academics for the continuation of humanistic

humanistic studies hitherto prepared and published in Germany. The Secretariat will also investigate means for reprinting classical texts and inquire into the place that studies of the past occupy in present-day education.

THE CREATIVE ARTS

UNESCO should study the role to The Creative Arts in education at all levels including professional schools. Information services, central exchange for artistic products and persons, world-wide circulation of products in reproduction as well as in original form, international festivals and conferences, experimentation with new techniques in teaching creative arts will be organized. The Secretariat should help artists to obtain tools, methods and materials, and should initiate the recording of folklore and the study of the preservation of native arts and culture. The Conference resolved that"UNESCO ,,. will take such measures as are open to it under its Constitution to protect and defend the freedom of the Artist wherever it is put in danger."

In the field of literature the Secretariat will set up a translation office, encourage a bibliography of translations, list works suitable for translation, maintain an active file of translations and create an international literary pool to supply magazines and newspapers with material for publication. UNESCO will stimulate, or undertake itself if necessary, the publication of an anthology of suffering and resistance.

The Theater, including the ballet and opera, should be placed on equal footing with other creative arts and UNESCO will call an international meeting of theater experts to found an International Theatrical Institution independent of UNESCO and supported by private national branches and centers. A committee will be named in in collaboration with mass communication to recommend to member states a reduction in postal rates, transport charges, students' fares and other services which would encourage the work and exchange of creative arts and artists.

Libraries and Museums

The rehabilitation of libraries, museums and archives is the first immediate consideration of this Subcommission of UNESCO.

The Secretariat will stimulate scientific, cultural and educational activities for adults and children in public libraries and museums throughout the world. It will help in the protection, rehabilitation and restoration of sites, museums, collections, documents and objects affected by the war; to these ends it will set up an inventory and create funds for outside contribution.

The

The Secretariat will encourage free access to all museums, sites and collections, and will establish an international clearing house for publications and arrange for the distribution of existing stockpiles of books in German, Czechoslovakia and England. It will also fill in serious gaps in public collections and encourage the creation of national lending library in each country to be part of an international lending system serviced by UNESCO.

A working center is to be established to coordinate international bibliographical services, encourage or undertake publication of bibliographies of union catalogues, indexes, abstracts, and encourage uniform terminology. Additional projects will include the exchange of personnel, the continuation of the work of the International Museums Office of the International Institute of Intellectural Cooperation, the study of library and museum techniques, the study of current publishing problems, and the encouragement of an international organization of professional archivists.

Finally, the establishment of a library for the UNESCO Secretariat has been recommended and referred to the Executive Board for the necessary increase in budget funds.

BUDGET

A budget of six million dollars was adopted for 1947. There was considerable debate on this figure in The Plenary Sessions. David Hardman of the British Delegation proposed an increase of a million and a half dollars saying "we should be betraying our trust if, at the very outset of UNESCO's career a move were made to reduce its financial resources to a point below what we believe necessary to put into execution its approved program."

William Benton of the American Delegation replied that this higher figure ignored the recommendation made by the Conference for streamlining the program and that full use must be made of temporary employees, working groups and the staff loaned by governments and universities. He added that UNESCO would win support most effectively by an economical and prudent program in the first year.

France then proposed that the figure be increased $550,000 with this amount to be spent exclusively on relief and rehabilitation. Mr. Benton warned against creating the false impression that UNESCO was handling direct relief and pointed out that American private sources had donated much larger sums than UNESCO could possibly obtain.

In

In the discussion of the revolving fund Mr. Benton stated he could not commit the United States Congress, and other delegates made similar comments in regard to their governments. The Chairman of the Session ended the discussion by saying that all votes on the Budget were subject to this reservation.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

FOR THE PRESS

January 7, 1947
No. 11

ADDRESS BY THE HONORABLE WILLIAM BENTON, ASSISTANT SECRETARY OF STATE, BEFORE THE CHICAGO COUNCIL OF FOREIGN RELATIONS, CHICAGO, ILLINOIS, AT 1:00 P.M., C.S.T. (2:00 P.M., E.S.T.) THURSDAY, JANUARY 9, 1947

REPORT ON UNESCO

The last time I attended a meeting of the Chicago Council of Foreign Relations I witnessed a most dramatic ovation to one of Chicago's most distinguished citizens. The closing line of the speech at that luncheon was Stephen Decatur's famous cry, "My country -- may it always be in the right -- but my country, right or wrong!" The audience rose to its feet and applauded. It applauded at length, and with unrestrained admiration for the character of the speaker. The speaker was General Robert E. Wood. The time was 1941.

Does anyone doubt that the tradition of the United States still stands behind that quotation? Does anyone doubt that it applies with equal force in the traditions of England, of France, and indeed of all the countries of the world: "My country, may it always be in the right -- but My country, right or wrong"?

We have none of us learned to say, with a fraction of the same fervor, "my world". Nor have we tried. Can we so learn, or can our children, or theirs? Do we want to try to learn? UNESCO -- the United Nations Educational Scientific and Cultural Organization, about which I am going to speak to you today -- is dedicated to fostering the idea of "my world, my human race" in the minds and hearts of men everywhere. If this idea is to take root and grow, UNESCO is the one political organization that is most likely to help it grow.

I shall have to begin by conceding that, at the first general conference of UNESCO in Paris last month, from which I have just returned, the American delegation did not find a conference dedicated wholeheartedly to education, science and culture. The Conference was in part a political conference. That fact is of great importance to the American people. By "political conference" I do not mean merely that the delegates played politics as they would on a university campus, or at the Christmas meeting of a learned society. I mean that, behind many of the assembled scholars, scientists, educators, and administrators of cultural agencies, stood their governments seeking to advance and protect specific national interests.

There was, however, far less jockeying for national advantage than you would find at most intergovernmental conferences. In part, the jockeying merely took the mild form of competition for prestige. But, in the larger view, we of the American Delegation learned once more that power in today's world is not merely economic power and military might. Power also lies in the field of ideas. As older empires lose economic and military power, and as new ones emerge, they are eager to gain strength on this new frontier -- the frontier of the mind.

We learned in Paris the great importance that the statesmen and politicians of many countries attach to the proposed activities of UNESCO. The problem within the United States is to see to it that we Americans now understand how vital these are to us as well.

Potentially, UNESCO is a force of the first magnitude. It can contribute mightily to a world will towards peace. It can thus be a major force in the security program of the United States through the furtherance of the broad objectives of American foreign policy -- peace and prosperity among all peoples of the world.

Did the fact that this first conference was also a political conference mean that it failed? Not at all. Anne O'Hare McCormick of the New York Times, one of the American delegates, described it as a most successful political conference. The politics of national interest merely show that the idea of one world, of "my world", is still a long way off; that the task of UNESCO is indeed a very great task, for the long pull and not for the short.

UNESCO obviously is not going to bring about, in a few years, the moral and intellectual revolution that is required by the age ahead of us. But it is equally clear that it can now move confidently toward a more modest goal; to help dispel, in some degree, the unwarranted fears, suspicions and hatreds that hang like a fog over the world today.

No unresolved disagreements bedevilled the sessions. The closest approach to one was raised by the representative of Yugoslavia, Mr. Ribnikar. Mr. Ribnikar inquired whether UNESCO proposed to develop a philosophy of its own, which would exclude or even combat the philosophy of dialectical materialism and which it would seek to impose on all peoples.

In my opening speech to the conference, the day after Mr. Ribnikar first spoke, I said, "UNESCO does not believe and cannot believe that peace is to be obtained through the intellectual and cultural subjugation of the world by any single political philosophy or through the conversion of the world to any single religious faith. UNESCO is founded on the belief that neither the forced unification of the world of the spirit, nor the forced standardization of the world of the mind can give men peace, but only a world democracy of mind as well as spirit. Cultural democracy implies cultural integrity, as true political democracy implies the freedom of the person and his personal integrity and self-respect. The cultural democracy which UNESCO proposes is a democracy of mind and spirit in which every culture shall be free to live and develop in itself and in the great community of common culture. Free men do not fear ideas; free men are not afraid of thought; free men are eager to confront the differences and rich varieties that life presents, and to determine for themselves the things they take as true. This, from the beginning, has been the path of freedom."

Mr.

Mr. Ribnikar's question may have a bearing upon the decision of the Soviet Union to join UNESCO. Russia was the only major power which was not officially represented at the conference. While there is great and useful work for UNESCO to do through its present roster of members, it cannot realize its full potentialities unless and until the Soviet Union constructively joins in the work. The fact that the Communist press throughout the world absolutely ignored UNESCO -- even the Communist press of Paris -- is interpreted by many to mean that the Soviet Union is taking no steps to prejudice its later joining in UNESCO.

Can UNESCO succeed? I want to contrast several remarks I heard in the first days. One was by J. B. Priestley, the novelist, who was a British delegate. "This Conference", he said, "which is trying to lay the foundations of international understanding, is the most underrated conference in all history". Another was a remark that circulated among the French journalists covering the Conference: "L'UNESCO c'est du fromage qui s'est monte sur un nuage" -- which, literally translated, means "UNESCO is a cheese riding on a cloud." In French political slang, I'm told the cheese means something like our phrase, "pork barrel" -- a pork barrel riding on a cloud. Another French commentary, similar in its cynicism, was "UNESCO is a band of little valiant men, and so much music lover".

My own view, of course, is that of Mr. Priestly. Otherwise I would not be here talking about UNESCO. I amend Priestley's comment in one way: UNESCO, in its potentialities, is the most underrated organization in history.

I have never heard anyone question the importance of UNESCO's goal. The obvious question -- the recurrent, pervasive and latently demoralizing question is -- can UNESCO actually make any significant progress, within the significant future, toward its goal: Is it, in fact, now riding on a cloud?

The skeptics can truthfully say, UNESCO has no real power. It has no authority to intervene in the cultural or educational life of any nation, Its budget is a pittance compared with its task. It must do most of its work through other organizations. Its responsibilites are as wide and intangible as the human mind and spirit. It cannot measure or prove its results.

But there are compelling reasons for believing that UNESCO can succeed. To me these reasons are cogent enough to make UNESCO a good gamble -- something of a long-shot, perhaps, but good enough to warrant playing the gamble to the absolute limit. By "succeed" I do not mean that UNESCO may hang on as a worthy, rather useful and certainly harmless refuge for intellectuals and artists -- as indeed it may. By succeed I mean that, in the issue between war and peace, it can weight the balance for peace.

The first of my reasons is that, like the other parts of the United Nations it must succeed or we are all of us in dire straits indeed. Hard headed men everywhere know this. The forty-three governments that sent representatives to Paris are most of them fairly hard-boiled. Many of them can ill afford to spend money for luxuries. They came to Paris to work out a program that, a decade ago, would have indeed seemed, in the politician's view, a ride on a cloud. Today it may be a matter of life or death.

Second, there

Second, there is abroad in the world, among ordinary people, a deep, if vague yearning for the ends UNESCO is designed to serve. The ordinary people of the earth want to understand each other, and to understand the best of each other. They know that such understanding will minimize the risks of war. The unspoken hopes of millions are thus centered on UNESCO's goals, even though today UNESCO is virtually unknown. But it is dedicated to the service of ordinary people everywhere and, as it secures leaders that understand this, UNESCO will derive vitality from the people.

Third, the world now has at its disposal, for the first time in history, instruments of communication, and of education, that make possible the development of what Archibald MacLeish calls a planetary culture. It is no longer unrealistic to talk about eradicating illiteracy everywhere, or about raising the educational level of all. It is no longer visionary to establish the goal for most of the world's population of a full, prompt and continuous account of world developments. The newest and most spectacular of these instruments are radio, motion pictures, and fast transportation. These are the tools UNESCO can work with -- tools potentially as promising for good as the new weapons of war are potent for destruction, if we have but the sense to use them.

Fourth -- and to this point I shall address the last half of this talk -- a good start, a sound start was made by UNESCO at Paris. After the opening plenary sessions the Conference was divided into three major commissions. One was on administrative and legal questions, with thich I shall not belabor you though they were constructively resolved and are crucial for the long pull. A second was devoted to the problem of relief and rehabilitation of the educational, scientific and cultural facilities of war-devastated areas. Of this I shall say only that the plight of these areas is a matter of deep concern to UNESCO. Although UNESCO itself cannot become an operating relief agency, $400,000 was voted to prepare a report on the needs and how they can be met, and to stimulate public and private agencies to help meet them.

The third commission, of greatest interest to such an audience as this, was that which dealt with the long-range program of UNESCO. This was further divided into six sub-commissions -- one for education; one for libraries and museums; one for social sciences, philosophy and humanistic studies; one for the natural sciences; one for the creative arts; and one for the mass media of communication.

There never had been any shortage of ideas for UNESCO. Proposals had come in by the bagful for a year -- many of them excellent proposals. We heard from the proponents of a world language, a world university, a new calendar. The proposals ranged all the way from the establishment of a bird sanctuary on Heligoland to a frontal attach on rebuilding both the educational and communications facilities of the world.

So the first task of the Conference was to agree upon a principle of priorities. The decision taken helped to bring UNESCO down out of the cloud. It was this: that projects should be few in number; that every project must be tested by its feasibility; that every proposal must further be tested by the question, will this contribute directly and significantly to the cause of peace through understanding?

Out of

Out of the six sub-commissions on program came recommendations, later adopted by the general conference, in support of over one hundred projects. The number was in my opinion far too large. I shall be happily surprised if really substantial progress is made on 10 per cent of them during 1947.

Certain recommendations were common to all the sub-commissions reports. For example, each developed plans for the exchange of students and specialists, for the convening of international meetings and for the creation, as needed, of new international associations of specialists. Such exchanges, if they are undertaken on a really large scale, can clearly contribute to peace through understanding.

A second general type of recommendation was directed toward increasing the freedom and the volume of international communication. These recommendations took many forms, and dealt with studies of censorship, customs and postal and freight rates on books and scientific materials, copyrights, new methods of reproduction, standardization of library cataloguing, international lending of books, and so forth.

Perhaps the most ambitious single project was one that came out of the education sub-commission - a world-wide attack on the problem of illiteracy and the establishment of minimum standards of education everywhere. This is a revolutionary undertaking, but it lies at the heart of UNESCO's long-range effort. If UNESCO can contribute substantially to its solution, it will have justified its existence through this effort alone. Well over half the world's population is illiterate. Can the world achieve peace through understanding in the absence of the simplest tools of understanding, the ability to read and write? Illiterate men are pawns in a power struggle. They are also victims of an inequality so grave as to constitute a threat to peace. UNESCO will create a staff of its own, supplemented by experts from many nations to recommend programs for combatting illiteracy; to develop educational materials; and to determine how best to use books, pictures, films and radio. Dr. George Stoddard, President of the University of Illinois, took leadership in the development of this major proposal, as he did in so many ways in Paris.

Further, Mrs. Louise Wright, Dean Richard McKeon, Dr. Carl Milam and other Chicagoans made notable contributions to the development of UNESCO's program.

A recommendation made by Dr. Charles Johnson, President of Fisk University, became the top priority project of the social scientists. Under it UNESCO will undertake a study of the psychological and social tensions that lead to war. When the tensions that produce unrest, suspicion and hatred among classes, races and peoples have been identified and diagnosed we shall know better how to attack UNESCO's central problem of promoting peace through understanding.

An example from the sub-commission on the natural sciences is the proposed International Institute of the Amazon. This proposes to bring together scientists from many nations, and from many fields of science, to study the problems of food, disease and natural resources of a tropical area. The tropical areas of the world have been characterized by malnutrition and backwardness. An international attack upon this problem may open up new possibilities for the development of the tropics in such a way as to reduce future international tensions.

The mass media proposals were of especial interest. Before the Paris meeting we had heard that some of the other nations — particularly some of the smaller nations — feared what

what they called "American cultural imperialism". It was charged that, by a combination of our financial strength, out highly developed communications industry — and our policy of opposing all barriers throughout the world to the free flow of ideas and information -- we aimed to flood the world with American ideas, American standards of taste and — to use an ugly word — American propaganda. We were told that, for this reason, American's proposals for the use of the mass media would find a cool reception.

We discovered that this fear of "American cultural imperialism" is not a fear of American books. Our book exports are, unfortunately, negligible. It is not a fear of American art or music. Neither is it a fear of the American press associations, which get plenty of competition, or of American radio, which can be heard in most countries only by shortwave. What it boils down to is largely the fear of Hollywood. The very technical genius of Hollywood, which makes its pictures sought after and beloved by the masses of the peoples of the world, terrifies the scholars and intellectuals and politicians in these countries when they hear their children speaking English with an American accent, using American slang, and discussing love, divorce and murder in Hollywood epigrams. The great world-wide impact of Hollywood is but little understood here in the United States, and it is greatly feared abroad.

The American delegation arrived in Paris determined to press for maximum use of the mass media of communication — motion pictures, radio and the press - not as instruments of entertainment, but in their potential role as magnificent and unprecedented new instruments for the pursuit of peace. We were delighted to find that, far from being cool to the development of the mass media in this role, other nations began to take the lead on proposals which we had been prepared to advance.

In the subcommission on mass media, under the chairmanship of a Belgian and the vice-chairmanship of a Dane, the British, the French, the Canddians and others came forward vigorously with proposals that coincided closely with our own.

The small nations found us gladly acknowledging that other peoples have ideas, and cultural achievements, that deserve mass dissemination, even in America. The ancient Greeks couldn't film or broadcast their plays, we conceded; but they could write them. The other nations found us eager to cooperate in a scheme by which mass communications techniques might be broadened by inviting technicians of backward countries to work and study in the more advanced countries.

UNESCO will undertake a major effort to reduce the barriers that now obstruct the free flow of communications among peoples. We know from bitter experience that even highly literate peoples, when they are cut off from a full, honest and continuous account of developments among other peoples, can be propagandized and bullied into aggressive belligerency. UNESCO is to survey the restrictions on the flow of information and ideas across international boundaries, and the suppression and distortion of information and ideas by any influence.

In

In cooperation with the United Nations, UNESCO will explore the possibility of creating a world-wide broadcasting network, under international auspices. Such a network might bring to ordinary people everywhere, and in many languages, an account of history, the achievements, the problems, the hopes and the aspirations, the music and the literature of other peoples.

I shall conclude my comments on UNESCO's program with a special word about the natural sciences. It is clear that science, and scientific ways of thinking, have a major, a crucial, role in education for international understanding. Cooperative projects, involving the collaboration of scientists of many nations, are helpful by the very fact of collaboration, even though the projects may have no direct bearing on peace or on the will to peace among people generally. But at some point the yardstick must be invoked. Does UNESCO, for example, have any direct concern with research on cancer? I fear that many of the scientists at Paris, who hoped that UNESCO might immediately emerge as the chief agency for coordinating international scientific activities including scientific research as such, came away feeling that the budget allotted for science was inadequate to such a purpose; and that another organization, specifically designed to the end of advancing international scientific research as such, might be needed. If there is a single field of UNESCO in which the world is turning to the United States for leadership, it is science and technology. UNESCO should increasingly stress this field with the passage of the years.

UNESCO's operating budget for the first year — $6,000,000 — is minuscule compared with the task and the opportunity. That is about the cost of two submarines. It is about half the budget of the University of Chicago in a normal year. The American delegation opposed a somewhat larger budget, not because of any lack of faith in UNESCO, or failure to understand the magnitude of its task. We opposed a larger budget because the cost of the various international organizations that have come into being during the last two years has mounted to the point where many of the smaller nations — particularly those impoverished and devastated by the war — simply cannot afford to pay their share. It would be a disaster if they were forced to withdraw. Further, it will take time properly to organize UNESCO's staff and coordinate its program.

The American delegation at Paris insisted that the 1947 budget must not be taken as a standard for future years. When the nations have passed through what Senator Vandenberg calls "the present subsistence period"; when UNESCO has built its staff and discovered by experience what it can and what it cannot do. I see no limit, except the clear cut promise of results, upon either its efforts or its budget.

I shall close on a note of hope and caution. The Conference that took place may well have been, in Mr. Priestley's words, the most underrated conference in all history. For UNESCO can become one the most useful instruments ever devised by man.

But it can fulfill its potentialities only under favorable conditions. It cannot succeed unless the pressing political and economic problems that now beset

beset the world are resolved in such a way as to give UNESCO time to grow. It cannot succeed in the absence of outstanding leadership, adequate funds and public support. It cannot succeed if the expectation of quick results brings disillusionment.

Yet no experiment in international cooperation ever held less danger or more promise for the future peace and well being of mankind. UNESCO is like a break in an overcast sky. It is a patch of light — if I may reverse a familiar expression — now no bigger than a man's hand. We must all unite in the hope that it is destined to grow — to grow until the clear light of truth and understanding breaks through to all peoples.

Jaime Torres Bodet Elected Director - General

WHEN the President of the Beirut Conference, M. Hamid Bey Frangie, Lebanese Minister of Education and Foreign Affairs, rapped the gavel on the evening of December 11, 1948, he entrusted Unesco to another Foreign Minister and Minister of Education, Dr. Jaime Torres Bodet of Mexico.

The new Director-General, who was elected by the delegates to the Third Session of Unesco's General Conference on November 26, succeded Dr. Julian Huxley whose term of office as first head of the Organization had ended. The Conference also elected seven new members of the Executive Board, which, in turn, voted Sir Sarvepalli Radhakrishnan (India) its Chairman, and Dr. C. Parra-Perez (Venezuela) and M. Roger Seydoux (France) Vice-Chairmen for 1949.

Immediately following the election of the new Director-General, M. Frangie cabled to Dr. Torres Bodet in Mexico, on behalf of the Conference, inviting him to come to Beirut, to participate in the closing days of the Session.

On December 10, the newly-elected Director-General made his appearance before the delegates to the Third Session. In his inaugural address he assured his listeners "that I shall dedicate myself unreservedly to Unesco's service" and stressed that Unesco's most urgent duty was to defend the moral and intellectual rights of man. (The full text of Dr. Torres Bodet's address will be found on the centre page of this issue).

For three and one half weeks, from November 17 to December 11, the Third Session worked methodically in elaborating the new programme during morning, afternoon and often evening meetings of Plenary Sessions, Commissions and Sub-Commissions. In a similar fashion, questions concerning Unesco's budget, administration and external relations were the subject of careful, detailed examination and study.

At the end of their deliberations, the delegates agreed not only on specific, practical activities for the year 1949, but on a

"Human Rights Day" Urged By Unesco Head

THE celebration of December 10th as "Human Rights Day" in all schools has been recommended to Unesco Member States by Dr. Jaime Torres Bodet, Director General.

In a message sent on December 30th, Dr. Torres Bodet recalls that at the close of its Third Session at Beirut, on December 11th, 1948, the General Conference of Unesco greeted with enthusiasm the International Declaration of Human Rights which had been adopted the day before in Paris by the General Assembly of the United Nations.

At the same time, the General Conference instructed the Director-General to take all necessary steps to publicize this document of historical significance and to encourage its study and use by Unesco in all its activities.

In pursuance of these instructions, the Director-General has

"Human Rights Day" Urged By Unesco Head

THE celebration of December 10th as "Human Rights Day" in all schools has been recommended to Unesco Member States by Dr. Jaime Torres Bodet, Director General.

In a message sent on December 30th, Dr. Torres Bodet recalls that at the close of its Third Session at Beirut, on December 11th, 1948, the General Conference of Unesco greeted with enthusiasm the International Declaration of Human Rights which had been adopted the day before in Paris by the General Assembly of the United Nations.

At the same time, the General Conference instructed the Director-General to take all necessary steps to publicize this document of historical significance and to encourage its study and use by Unesco in all its activities.

In pursuance of these instructions, the Director-General has invited Member States of the Organization, to support Unesco and the United Nations in their joint efforts to make the Declaration of Human Rights as widely known as possible.

In his message, the Director-General says:

"The world yearns for an age of peace and justice which shall give to all the opportunity to develop to the fullest their creative faculties in the cause of right and progress. Peace and justice require above everything else the strengthening of that intellectual and moral solidarity, without which, in the words of Unesco's Constitution, the political and economic arrangements of Governments alone could not secure the lasting and sincere support of the peoples of the world. But for that solidarity to be the expression of a true harmony of minds and not a mere passive coincidence of wills, there is one fundamental condition, namely, respect for the human being with his essential integrity and with all this manifold diversity.

To Unesco the International Declaration of Human Rights affords support and encouragement. Recognition of the principles therein proclaimed and their dissemination through education will help to strengthen the faith of every human being in the dignity of his own experience, and to fortify the urge to brotherhood which bids civilization by common action."

The Director-General further suggests that, in order to imprint upon the imaginations and hearts of youth the memory of that historic moment when the value of human personality was universally proclaimed the Tenth of December of every year should henceforth be devoted, in the programme of all schools, to render homage to the principles of freedom and the dignity of man.

Mrs. Roosevelt Links U.S. And U.N. Rights Declaration

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt in a special statement, on December 15, paid tribute to the newly-adopted U.N. Declaration of Human Rights as a "milestone" in the progress of people everywhere.

The statement was made on the anniversary of the Bill of Rights drafted 157 years ago as the first 10 amendments to the U.S. Constitution. Citing the common goals of the Bill of Rights and the U.N. Declaration, Mrs. Roosevelt called for a joint celebration in the United States this year, honoring both documents.

Duty-Free Film Agreement Up For World Ratification

A draft agreement providing for the duty-free importation of educational and scientific films was submitted to the governments of Unesco Member States, early in January 1949.

The agreement which will become operative after acceptance by ten states, is the first international agreement drawn up by Unesco.

In addition to films the agreement applies to sound recording and other audio-visual material of an educational, scientific and cultural character, when it is so certified by the exporting country. This material includes film strips and microfilm, glass slides, models, wall charts, maps and posters.

New agreement planned for books and newspapers

Besides abolishing customs duties, the agreement also does away with quota retsrictions on the types of material covered. As a protection to commercial interests within the importing country, use of the material may be restricted to non-profit-making purposes.

The draft agreement has been described as an important step in Unesco's campaign to lower technical, economic and political barriers to the free flow of information.

Another agreement, approved in principle at Beirut, is being drafted to deal with free importation of books, periodicals and newspapers.

"COURIER" NOW REPRINTED IN U.S.

We take pleasure in notifying our readers in the United States that, beginning with the present issue, the Unesco Courier will be reprinted in New York every month. In addition, the Columbia University Press, has been designated as the official agent in the United States for the sale and distribution of the Unesco Courier as well as other Unesco publications.

Subscriptions to the Unesco Courier may now be obtained by writing to:

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 83d CONGRESS, FIRST SESSION

U. N. and World Freedom

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

OF

HON. HERBERT H. LEHMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, March 6, 1953

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the Appendix of the RECORD an address which I made before the American Association for the United Nations at the Shoreham Hotel, Washington, D. C., on March 3.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AMERICANS MUST UNDERSTAND U. N.

I am very proud of my continuing relationship with this organization. I have always been devoted to its purposes. Its leaders are men of deep dedication and great distinction. The caliber of this gathering in Washington is proof enough of the worth and character of this association.

I have lately thought that this organization might well be called the Association for the Advancement of America and the Preservation of Mankind. I am convinced that unless the aims and goals of this organization, and of others devoted to like purpose, are achieved, America, as we know it, and mankind, in its present state, will not endure. I am convinced that until and unless the American people understand clearly the fact that the United Nations, with all its shortcomings, offers still the only machinery for achieving peace, security, order, and justice in the world we will make no consistent or permanent progress toward our goals.

We may well succeed in effectuating the European defense pacts; we may successfully engage in new flights of psychological warfare; our Armed Forces may be victorious on land, on sea, and in the air. But still we will not have achieved a world of peace, justice, and security until the prestige and authority of the United Nations are firmly established, first of all, in the hearts and minds of freedom-loving people.

I need not recite the dangers which confront America and mankind today. The atom bomb and the hydrogen bomb are simple facts of life. Wholesale destruction of entire populations is now within the limits of military potential. Every day new and deadlier weapons are being invented—and produced. How much further do we need go in this direction, day by day, before we realize that we are rushing headlong down a dead-end street, with fewer and fewer possible turnoff points?

And today our greatest danger lies in our growing resignation to that danger. We live in deadly peril, but we are learning to accept it and to act as though it were a terrible annoyance to be rid of, rather than a burning challenge to be met.

U. N. REMAINS HOPE FOR SURVIVAL

I believe that the United Nations is one of the answers to the problem of survival. But many of our own people do not believe it. Many of our officials scoff at it. Some pay only lip service to it. Some are ready to sabotage and discard it.

I think this circumstance stems from a complete lack of understanding of the world we live in, the problems we face, and of the United Nations itself.

I need not remind those assembled here that the United Nations is only 8 years old, an infant originally conceived by inspiration, but born in a world atmosphere of illusion—the illusion that victory in World War II had solved most of our world problems, and that those remaining unsolved would be attended to by the United Nations, in a quiet, unobtrusive, and inexpensive way.

What a rude awakening we have had. But this awakening has served to breed not a new awareness and determination, but a new weariness and disillusion. Against this spirit we must combine with all our powers and energy. To yield to it or to compromise with it is to be overwhelmed.

It must not be forgotten that the United Nations Charter was conceived as a covenant for peace—for strengthening, preserving, and maintaining the peace. The United Nations Organization was developed to carry out the good works of peace. Given the breathing space that was generally anticipated at that time, in 1945, the authority of the United Nations Organization was expected to grow and become robust in the ripeness of time.

Instead the United Nations was thrown almost immediately into a succession of world-shaking crises, any one of which could well have resulted in another world war. Chisis in Iran, crisis in Greece, in Indonesia, in Berlin, in Palestine, in Kashmir, and finally in Korea—the United Nations took them all on, and, in one measure or another, met those crises, and emerged intact, stronger with accomplishment, but bearing the scars of conflict.

The world organization for peace was flexible enough to become an instrument for carrying on a local war—a local war designed to preserve the world from total war.

A great American general of far eastern fame could not understand how military operations could be conducted with any object other than complete military victory. How little he understood the new world order, and the United Nations. Contrary to the understanding of that American general, the object of the military operations in Korea was and is to halt aggression, not to incite new aggression; to preserve the peace, not to wage total war. General MacArthur did not and does not understand that if total war comes, the United Nations will have failed.

PURPOSE OF KOREAN ACTION

The major purpose of the United Nations is to prevent another total world war. Insofar as the successive world crises of the past 8 years have been met without world war, the United Nations has brilliantly succeeded in its tasks.

In Korea the immediate object of the United Nations could only be the limited object, first of meeting Communist aggression and of restoring the territorial integrity of the South Korean Republic and then of bringing hostilities to the speediest possible end, without inciting a major war. The first object has been achieved.

The second object has thus far been frustrated. Hostilities in Korea still continue. But those hostilities have not broadened out into total, catastrophic world war, despite the impetuous demands and reckless recommendations of some in this country who would plunge us into the "wrong war, at the wrong place, at the wrong time, and with the wrong enemy."

It can certainly be shown that among the greatest influences operating to save us from such a tragic course has been the United Nations. This is an achievement, but one which, by itself, can scarcely appease our anguish at the continuing casualties our forces suffer in Korea. How long must this go on? What great good do these hard and tragic sacrifices serve?

These questions will not be answered until we fully understand that the object of the United ations is peace, and not victory in war. In the long range, the United Nations knows that peace is not secured by war. Peace is secured by a solution of those basic problems, among men and nations, which lead to war. Large-scale war—indeed any war—only aggravates those problems. Total war, even if it did not destroy mankind, itself, would multiply those problems beyond appraisal or description.

Thus the United Nations and its individual members fight limited actions in Korea, in Indochina, in Malaya, in Burma, and in the Philippines to gain time and opportunity to solve the larger, deeper problems.

What are the problems to which I have referred? Are they all centered in the Soviet Union? Would they all be solved solely by the collapse of the power of the Kremlin?

I think the answer to these questions is "No." The Kremlin is, of course, our main and immediate danger. Its enslavement of hundreds of millions of persons, its persecutions, its aggressions, and brutalities certainly are at this time the main challenge to the peace and security of the world. But even if we can imagine the Politburo wiped out and the power of the Soviet Army broken still the basic problem would not be completely and finally solved.

We must remember that the Soviet design for chaos and conquest is built primarily on conditions of ferment, unrest, and dissatisfaction in vast sectors of the world.

The Soviet Union is the smoking crater of a huge volcano. We may drop an atomic bomb in it and precipitate the explosion of it with all its accompanying violence and destruction. But still we will have done nothing about the boiling mass which seethes and rages underneath the crust of all the earth.

That boiling, seething mass of unrest is the problem we confront. And the United Nations must move with every resource to relieve and mitigate it.

HUMAN RIGHTS OUR BASIC PROBLEM

I think of this basic problem in terms of human rights, of which the Soviet regime has been the chief violator. In recent years, the aspiration for human rights—economic, social, and political—has become universal. Hundreds of millions of human beings have awakened to an irresistible urge to share with all other people in the enjoyment of what we call human rights. These people will not be denied. They are deeply stirred by the naked contrast between power and privilege for some, and privation and poverty for others.

In great and farflung areas of the earth, this urge for human rights manifests itself in many forms—in anticolonialism, supernationalism, and antiwesternism. This force, often confused and perplexed, may spend itself in self-defeating hates and prejudices, as in the Middle East. Sometimes it seethes in the form of racial tensions, as in South Africa.

But in whatever form, this basic force will not be halted, regardless of the course of conflict between the Soviet Union and the United States. The surge for human rights will roll on, and we must be prepared either to help give it sense and direction, or be overwhelmed by it.

We must exercise our world leadership in behalf of human rights. Human rights must be our banner in world affairs. Under that banner, and within the framework of the United Nations, we can prevail.

We must acknowledge the right of every individual to freedom, to justice and dignity; to equality of economic and social opportunity, to an equal voice in government—in short to a positive stake in world security, peace, and order.

We must set this goal forth as our goal for all men. As we value our own freedom, we must help others to learn that freedom and human rights and economic progress and opportunity are one and inseparable.

In this way, we can meet the isolationist and xenophobic force which now shows itself in many quarters of the globe. We can thus rally the force for human rights in the camp of freedom, and offset the possibility that this force may find common cause with the unprincipled forces of Communist tyranny and oppression.

This is the task of the United Nations, as well as of the United States. Within the framework of the United Nations, and exercising our legitimate leadership in that organization, we can succeed.

But we cannot pursue this course if we lose faith in the United Nations, or if we show contempt for it, by seeking to use the United Nations when it suits us, and to act unilaterally, in disregard of the Charter, when it better fits our temporary purpose.

HOPE OF MILLIONS

In the innocence of ignorance, we may feel strong and powerful enough to dismiss the United Nations on the grounds that it is only a debating society, and useless for our purposes of struggle with the Soviet Union. But we must remember that to many millions of people throughout the world, the United Nations is a mighty structure, within whose design and purpose lies the last great hope for world peace and security. These people will not accept the sacrifice of the United Nations on the altar of any struggle. They see in the United Nations the only possible means of preventing the eruption of that struggle into total, cataclysmic war.

I am glad to associate myself with that view. I think I speak also for most of those assembled here and, I believe, for the majority of the people of our country.

We must act on this basis. The Congress must be made more deeply aware of this truth. The new administration must be made aware of it.

We dare not, for instance, sanction legislation such as the proposed Bricker resolution for an amendment to our Constitution, which not only breathes distrust of the United Nations but even of our own Senate by taking away from the Senate the power and discretion to judge the validity of all treaties and agreements that may be negotiated, both those arrived at within the United Nations and outside it.

Our leadership must be based on a firm determination to maintain free world unity—a unity based on agreement and not on intimidation—the unity of common consent to concerted action and not the unity of fear to dissent.

Despite all the confusion and uncertainty, the trouble and anguish of our present situation, we must take comfort in the knowledge that the common purpose of all mankind, however divided in streams and currents of conflicting scope and direction, floods surely down to a common sea.

"In front the sun climbs slow, how slowly,
But westward look, the land is bright."

Let this be our inspiration, our source of strength and courage in these dark and desperate days, and those which still lie ahead. With hope and faith in ourselves and in all free men, let us proceed together, with firm confidence and resolution, to the tasks of peace.

Secretary-General's Review of United Nations Progress

INTRODUCTION TO EIGHTH ANNUAL REPORT FOR THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY

Every year the Secretary-General presents a report on the work of the United Nations to the General Assembly. Here is the text of the introduction by Secretary-General Dag Hammarskjold to the eighth annual report; prepared for the eighth regular session of Assembly which is scheduled to open on September 15.

I SUBMIT herewith the eighth annual report of the Secretary-General to Member States on the work of the United Nations for the period 1 July 1952 to 30 June 1953.

During all but the last two and a half months of the period the responsibilities of the office of Secretary-General in the work of the Organization were exercised by my distinguished predecessor, the first Secretary-General, Mr. Trygve Lie.

In the chapters that follow, the governments of Member States will find a comprehensive review of their efforts, during the past year, to make progress, through the United Nations, towards constructive solutions of problems of common concern to them all. This record, like those that have preceded it, is a reminder that the pursuit of peace and progress cannot end in a few years in either victory or defeat. The pursuit of peace and progress, with its trials and its errors, its successes and its set-backs, can never be relaxed and never abandoned.

An annual survey such as this inevitably presents in some respects an artificially fragmented picture. The short-term aspects of the problems with which the governments are faced tend to dominate the long-range view. The inter-relationship of the many and diverse elements and trends in the world situation with which they are grappling tends to be obscured.

CONTINUING PROCESS The work of the United Nations should always be viewed as a continuing process over a long period of time in which there is constant change and development. It is difficult to measure the significance of results in the perspective of any single year. Often the unspectacular or the unnoticed may prove to be a significant forward step on the long road towards peace in a world of organized co-operation and of more equal partnership among the nations.

The efforts of the governments to control and moderate those conflicts that constitute an immediate danger to world peace—and above all the "East-West" conflict—must command first attention in day-to-day decisions. However, side by side with those conflicts, or underlying them, two fundamental trends in human society are apparent which must determine the long-term direction of our efforts. One of the trends is directed towards wider social justice and equality for individuals. The other is directed towards equality and justice between nations, politically but also in the economic and social sense.

The United Nations is a positive response by the world community to the fundamental needs of our time. Its record should be judged against this background. Its efforts are significant in so far as they show the growing maturity of the Organization as an instrument by means of which the nations can solve conflicts threatening the natural evolution of the world community. They are significant in so far as they represent successful steps by that community in the direction indicated by the underlying trends in social and international development. This perspective should help to put the Organization in its proper light as an expression of the will of the peoples to achieve co-operation in a guided development towards social and international justice as a basis of social and international peace. It should also provide a safer guidance for our judgment of the significance of various aspects of United Nations activities than the one offered by day-to-day events.

The work of an instrument such as the one the Members are trying to develop in the United Nations must be based on certain fundamental principles. There are reasons to draw attention to two of these at this point. What I have in mind are those principles which gave their most distinctive features to efforts of the world community to create effective instruments for peace prior to the establishment of the United Nations. On the one hand, no organized international development can take place unless it is founded on a respect for international law and an acceptance of the obligations which that law imposes. On the other hand, although on a somewhat different level, the place in such a development of a truly international civil service, free from all national pressures and influences, should be recognized, not only in words but in deeds. Neither of the two principles has yet been given the significance which it should have in the policy of the governments of Member States in relation to the United Nations.

INTERNATIONAL LAW We must recognize that the nations have been for the most part slow to submit their juridical disputes to the International Court of Justice and thus to build up a body of decisions respected by the international community. It is also disturbing that the movement to extend and codify international law on crimes against the peace and against humanity, which was so strong at the end of the war and in the first days of the United Nations, has diminished in momentum. It is true that covenants and treaties on many matters are being drafted and submitted for ratification. But ratifications are slow. The growth of international law and jurisdiction is essential, not only as a way to safeguard the nations whose interest may be directly involved, but also as a means to give a solid basis to our efforts to achieve and maintain world peace. In international law expression has been given to ideals which are the result of a long and often painful development of human society. In the conflicts among the international and national forces to which I have referred, these ideals are sometimes questioned or imperilled. In this way the conflicts acquire an ideological significance sometimes going beyond their importance in other respects. The defence of international law is a contribution to the effort to guide the general development in such a way that the basic ideals of freedom and justice, which inspire and support our life, are not lost or obscured. Upheld in international life, their victory in national life also will be brought closer.

THE SECRETARIATS As for the secretariats—I refer here to the staffs not only of the United Nations itself but of the Specialized Agencies as well—the concept of a truly international civil service and of the independent authority in this respect of the Secretary-General and the Directors General is not yet fully understood and accepted. There are, here, mutual obligations. On the one hand, members of the secretariats must accept the international discipline that requires them to abstain from any political activity outside the scope of their duties and from any other activity which might throw doubt on their status as trusted and dedicated servants of the United Nations as a whole. On the other hand, on this basis the international civil service should be left free from national pressure of any sort. Only if this is so will the secretariats be able to render the service necessary to world organization. The United Nations itself cannot be fully effective in its appointed functions except under these conditions.

I hope that the governments will find occasion, in the months and years ahead, to give greater attention to the importance for world peace of extending the scope of international law, of building up respect for its disciplines and of resorting more willingly to the International Court. I hope also that they will reaffirm in their policies the respect they have pledged in the Charter for the independent position of the Secretariat of the United Nations and the recognition there given to the essential role of an international civil service in an irrevocably interdependent world. As Secretary-General, I shall uphold the policies concerning conduct of members of the Secretariat which are a condition for this independence.

With these principles as a background, previous efforts for world peace were directed towards objectives which have received even fuller recognition in the present effort expressed in the United Nations. It is recognized that an international instrument for peace and justice must seek to work out a system of mediation, conciliation and collective security. There is the further general recognition of the vital importance for sound development of the world community of orderly progress of the nations towards a state of full economic development, self-government and independence. And, finally, international co-operation is recognized as an essential instrument for a guided development towards greater social justice within the nations.

DECISIVE FACTORS I have already indicated my belief that our time is one of two historic movements of change and progress—one involving equal rights for nations, the other equal rights for individuals. There is a tendency to regard social justice and equality of political and economic rights among nations—or what may be called international equality—as being on the whole technical and special problems subordinated to the more urgent one of collective security. This attitude is understandable and correct, but only in a short-term perspective. International equality and justice are pre-requisites of the domestic social development of all the peoples of the world and, together, they are the decisive factors if we are to build a world of peace and freedom. No system of collective security can be built with sufficient strength unless the underlying pressures are reduced—and those pressures can be mastered only to the extent that we succeed in meeting the demands for international justice or internal social justice.

An analogy with the life of a nation may serve as illustration. No police force can be of sufficient strength to maintain internal security, at least without excessive costs, both financial and social, unless the government meets its basic responsibility to guide the economic and social development of the nation. Similarly, the efforts of the United Nations to assist under-developed countries and its efforts to promote the observance of human rights should be recognized as contributions to world peace which are just as basic as its efforts in the field of collective security.

The significance of the economic and social approaches to the problems of world peace and freedom in the very dynamic period in which we are living does not in any way reduce the significance of the United Nations as an instrument for direct reconciliation and for preventing aggression. In both respects the potentialities of the United Nations have so far been only partly explored.

CONSTRUCTIVE WILL As an instrument for conciliation the United Nations provides a forum which should serve the Members less for the voicing of complaints and more for the presentation of proposals furthering the common end. The Organization can grow in influence only in so far as the peoples of the world feel that what is brought out in its conference rooms represents an expression of the constructive will of the Member nations to put the common international interest before national demands, and in so far as they are given reasons for confidence that the machinery of international co-operation represented by the United Nations is an adequate means of reaching sound compromises, based on the Charter, between the interests involved. The United Nations as an instrument for preventing aggression will gain strength in proportion to its achievements as an instrument for reconciliation. Its authority in these respects will depend also on the solution of those underlying economic and social problems that are behind the pressures leading to international conflicts.

The principle of universality is linked with all these efforts and is inherent in the very concept of the Organization. The United Nations exists because a shrinking world, in which no nation or group of nations can live any more unto itself alone, has made world organization necessary for the purposes expressed in the Charter. Enlightened national policies, constructive bi-lateral and regional arrangements—political and economic—all have an essential place in contributing towards greater security from war and in promoting economic and social progress, provided they are pursued as parts of a greater whole in which the interdependence of all regions of the world is recognized. But, as the United Nations Charter recognizes, the governments can no longer succeed in promoting and protecting the peace, security and well-being of their peoples by national and regional efforts alone. I hope that the United Nations will be able to move more rapidly towards true universality of membership. Certainly, if the Organization is to reach its maximum usefulness and fulfil its purposes, every nation in the world which meets the obligations set forth in Article 4 of the Charter should be properly represented in it.

KOREA AND THE UNITED NATIONS At the time of writing, there is new hope for the early conclusion of an armistice in Korea, after many previous disappointments. Such an event would be of great significance for world peace. It would, first of all, be a victory for the principle of collective security. It would confirm the failure of the attempt to unify Korea by armed aggression in violation of the Charter and restore to the Republic of Korea the territory over which it exercised control before the fighting began. It would make possible the resumption of efforts to achieve by the peaceful means that are alone permitted by the Charter the United Nations objective of a united, free and democratic Korea. It would improve the prospects for fruitful negotiation on other issues.

The Members of the United Nations have also recognized that the international community has a responsibility to aid Korea, as a victim of armed aggression, in the restoration and reconstruction of its ravaged land. It seems to me of high importance that this responsibility should be carried out honourably, vigorously and generously by the United Nations and with the widest possible participation of its Members. The Korean people, who have suffered so grievously, deserve and should receive this help from the United Nations. But it is also important for the Organization to demonstrate, for the future, that it will not only uphold security with collective force when necessary, but will join in brotherly aid to bind up the wounds of battle, and to restore to the victims of war hope and opportunity for a decent life.

I am confident that the governments of Members will explore in other areas where tensions exist all possibilities for a further relaxation of those tensions and for progress towards settlement. I hope that the peoples will understand that these processes are usually slow and that it may be necessary to bear with fortitude and patience a succession of painful disappointments, extending sometimes over a period of years, before acceptable compromises are reached on strongly contested questions involving basic national policies and interests.

The present divisions of our world often appear unbridgeable and the obstacles to ultimate agreement unsurmountable. But the landscape of international affairs is not immutable. It is constantly shifting and moving, subject to all the influences at work in our world, in which new opportunities develop and the hope for ultimate solutions can never be abandoned.

The United Nations system places at the disposal of the Member nations a wider diversity of influences and institutions favourable to peaceful settlement than has existed in the past. Its open debates give public opinion the opportunity to test the merits of the respective national positions on the issues before the Organization. In spite of what superficially and in a short perspective may often seem to be indications to the contrary, the debates generally tend in the long run to reduce the differences between these positions.

The United Nations provides not only for ascertaining the consensus of world opinion on such issues, but also a more formal machinery for negotiation, mediation and conciliation developed on a basis of sovereign equality. As I have already indicated, I believe that we have only begun to explore the full potentialities of the United Nations in these respects, especially the most fruitful combinations of public discussion on the one hand and private negotiation and mediation on the other. But the opportunities are here, to be tested and used.

ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT Of the multitude of United Nations programs in the economic and social field in which the governments of Members have joined their efforts for their common benefit, none is more significant or less costly in the building of a better world community than the sharing of skills now universally known as technical assistance.

After many preliminary difficulties of organization and administration, the Expanded Program of Technical Assistance of the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies is now in full operation. The broad international character of the program is eliciting a very positive response from governments in all parts of the world and especially in the under-developed areas.

The United Nations approach to technical assistance enhances the mutual aid aspects of the program. Not only do all participating Member countries share in the responsibilities of over-all direction and control, whether they give or receive aid, but the less developed countries receiving assistance also give aid in those special skills that are found to be of value to other under-developed nations. Thus, the United Nations program of technical assistance is assuming more and more the aspect of a truly co-operative enterprise of mutual aid in the sharing of skills in which nations from all parts of the world and in every stage of economic and social development have something to contribute as well as to receive.

It would be a most unfortunate and unnecessary set-back to international co-operation if the growth of this constructive program should now be arrested by a lack of sufficient funds. While I fully appreciate the heavy financial burdens of Members, I feel confident they will wish to review the goals which should be established. In the light of the high priority which the governments have themselves placed on technical assistance in the whole field of economic and social co-operation and of a realistic appraisal of the present growth and future prospects of so constructive, practical and promising a program, the sights should be set higher and we should seek to reach as soon as possible a level of contributions that will more nearly meet the demonstrated needs.

The related problem of increasing the flow of public and private capital for financing economic development will once again—and rightly so—occupy an important place on the agenda of the next session of the General Assembly. Governments have long recognized the central place of this problem in their common efforts for peace and progress through the United Nations. The search for peaceful settlements, for collective security and for ultimate disarmament, as I have already pointed out, has to be based upon an orderly and steady advance towards higher living standards for all peoples. These standards, in turn, will be unattainable unless world productivity and world trade expand at a pace that more than matches the increase in population.

INSUFFICIENT EFFORTS Science and technology have given mankind new power to destroy itself. But together with this, we know that the opportunity for economic and social progress for all men now lies within our power to an extent that previous generations have not known.

Yet, at the present rate of economic development, the gap between living standards in the most industrially developed countries, where a minority of the peoples of the world live, and the less developed areas, where a majority of the human race still struggles with poverty, continues to grow wider instead of narrower. Indeed, in many under-developed areas the rate of economic progress barely keeps pace with or, in some instances, even falls short of the population growth.

Clearly, the efforts that have so far been made by the governments, both inside and outside the United Nations, to increase the flow of private and public capital for economic development are not sufficient.

Proposals for the establishment of a special United Nations fund for economic development to make long-term low interest loans and grants-in-aid and of an international finance corporation to mobilize both private and governmental capital resources for self-liquidating projects are now before the United Nations. But the problem is not primarily one of machinery, of the establishment of new international institutions, important and necessary as these may be. It is primarily a question of national policies and the climate of opinion as these are expressed both by governments and business communities in both capital-exporting and importing countries.

Many political, economic and social factors bear upon the problem. The present allocation of so large a proportion of resources to the production of armaments in the capital-exporting countries is only the most apparent of these factors. But the complexity and difficulties of the problem do not diminish the fundamental national interest of all countries in finding effective remedies. The firmest foundation for a peaceful and stable world order is one of steadily expanding world production, trade and consumption where inequalities of weath and living standards among different parts of the world are diminishing while the general level is rising.

The United Nations system at once offers safeguards and imposes obligations that can be used greatly to increase the flow of public and private capital for economic development. From the point of view of the underdeveloped countries the provision of capital through United Nations agencies is in itself a guarantee of its non-political character. From the point of view of the capital-exporting countries, the use of United Nations agencies as the vehicle for both private and public loans offers for the investor a safeguard that is backed by the moral weight of the whole community of nations.

The absorptive capacity of the under-developed countries for wise and productive investment in economic development projects is already great and could be considerably increased by a combination of national and international measures. Annual investments many times greater than those at present being made would be economically sound and are essential if the necessary progress is to be achieved. We are far from this objective now. Yet the stakes are high—high in terms of the future well-being of every nation and of all peoples.

SOCIAL ADVANCEMENT Last year, the United Nations issued its first report on the world social situation; the report demonstrated above all the need for more effective international co-operation towards social progress and the need for integrating efforts in this direction more closely with those for economic development. This year, concerted programs for practical international action in the social field have been planned which should command the widest possible support and participation of the governments of Member States. The problem of mobilizing available resources and further improving co-ordination in this whole area of activity of the United Nations and the Specialized Agencies is one in which the governments and the administrative heads of the agencies are all concerned. Policy in the planning and execution of the programs rests, of course, in the hands of the governments. In so far as administrative responsibilities are concerned, I look forward to working in the closest collaboration with the Directors General of the Specialized Agencies towards the most efficient possible use of the resources placed at the disposal of the United Nations family of institutions.

Whereas the programs for international action in the social field are aimed on a practical level primarily at the basic, long-range objectives to which I have referred, it is evident that the Members of the United Nations must continue at the same time to deal with certain immediate problems. These include the relief and reintegration of the Palestine refugees and appropriate international assistance to all those other refugees who are under the protection of the United Nations High Commissioner; assistance through United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund, as in past years, to needy and orphaned children in war-torn and under-developed areas; and the problem of the repatriation of the prisoners remaining from the Second World War as well as that of prisoners-of-war in Korea.

In connection with the work of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees and of UNICEF, it will be opportune to recall that the General Assembly will, at its coming session, be reviewing the activities of these bodies with a view to determining their future. There can be no doubt that both bodies have come to fill a practical, useful and needed place in the field of international action for social progress, and I am confident that Members will consider sympathetically the question of continuing them so that they may pursue their work for the victims of war and social conflict.

The development of social justice is closely connected with the problem of human rights. Such international legal instruments as the proposed covenants on human rights are parts of a concerted effort that is in fact proceeding on a much wider basis. Fundamentally, the rate of progress will be determined by the degree to which the developing social conscience of the peoples of the world is able to find expression not only in national legislation and in international treaties, but in the climate of opinion in the various regions of the world. The Universal Declaration of Human Rights should set a standard for achievement that will guide opinion in this field, which is so essential to the ultimate success of the United Nations.

ANNOTATED PROVISIONAL AGENDA OF THE GENERAL ASSEMBLY
EIGHTH REGULAR SESSION

The eighth regular session of the General Assembly of the United Nations is scheduled to open on 15 September 1953 in the Permanent Headquarters of the UN, New York.

The provisional agenda (Document A/2416) containing 58 items was issued on 17 July 1953. The supplementary list, containing 13 items was issued on 25 August (Doc. A/2443).

"Additional items of an important and urgent character," says Rule 15 of the Assembly's rules of procedure, "proposed for inclusion in the agenda less than 30 days before the opening of a regular session or during a regular session, may be placed on the agenda, if the General Assembly so decides by a majority of the Members present and voting. No additional item may be considered unless seven days have elapsed since it was placed on the agenda, unless the General Assembly, by a two-thirds majority of the Members present and voting, decides otherwise, and until a Committee has reported upon the question concerned."

At the beginning of a session, the General Committee (which consists of the President, the seven Vice-Presidents, and the Chairmen of the Main Committees) considers the provisional agenda, the supplementary list, and any requests for the inclusion of additional items, and reports to the Assembly. On the basis of this report, the agenda is adopted, and the various items allocated to appropriate Committees.

Items are listed below in the order in which they appear in the provisional agenda and the supplementary list. This is not necessarily the order in which they will appear on the agenda as adopted by the Assembly. The notes in parentheses are given as background information.

ITEMS ON THE PROVISIONAL AGENDA

1. Opening of the session by the Chairman of the delegation of Canada.

[NOTE: The Chairman of the Delegation from which the President of the previous session was elected presides until the Assembly elects a President for the new session. Lester B. Pearson, Canadian Minister for External Affairs was President of the seventh regular session.]

(more)

2. Minute of silent prayer or meditation.

[NOTE: According to Rule 64 of the Assembly's rules of procedure, "immediately after the opening of the first plenary meeting and immediately preceding the closing of the final plenary meeting of each session of the General Assembly, the President shall invite the representatives to observe one minute of silence dedicated to prayer or meditation."]

3. Appointment of a Credentials Committee.

[NOTE: This Committee consists of nine members appointed on the proposal of the Temporary President. It examines the credentials of representatives and reports to the Assembly.]

4. Election of the President.

[NOTE: The President is elected by secret ballot and by simple majority. There are no nominations. Past Presidents of the Assembly were: Paul-Henri Spaak of Belgium (first regular session); Oswaldo Aranha of Brazil (first special session and second regular session); Jose Arce of Argentina (second special session); Herbert V. Evatt of Australia (third regular session); Carlos P. Romulo of the Philippines (fourth regular session); Nasrollah Entezam of Iran (fifth regular session); Luis Padilla Nervo of Mexico (sixth regular session); Lester B. Pearson of Canada (seventh regular session.]

5. Constitution of the Main Committees and election of officers.

[NOTE: There are six Main Committees, generally known by their numbers: the First (Political and Security) Committee; the Second (Economic and Financial) Committee; the Third (Social, Humanitarian and Cultural) Committee; the Fourth (Trusteeship, including Non-Self-Governing Territories) Committee; the Fifth (Administrative and Budgetary) Committee; and the Sixth (Legal) Committee.

All 60 member nations are represented on the Main Committees to which are referred items falling within their fields of competence. The Assembly, acting directly in plenary meeting, deals with those items, which, for any reason, are not referred to a Committee. The Main Committees discuss proposals in detail, and report to the General Assembly with their recommendations, on which the Assembly, sitting in plenary meeting, takes final action. A two-thirds majority vote of those present and voting is required in plenary meetings for resolutions on important questions, but voting in the Committees is by simple majority, except to re-open discussion on a question, for which a two-thirds majority vote is needed.

Since many agenda items are primarily of a political character, the Assembly often finds it necessary to appoint an additional ad hoc committee, generally known as the Ad Hoc Political Committee. At the last session it was agreed that the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Political Committee should participate with a vote in the proceedings of the General Committee. A similar recommendation is contained in a report to this session by a special committee set up to consider measures to limit the duration of regular Assembly sessions. (See Item #56.)

In constitutingthe Main Committees, the Assembly holds brief successive meetings, as each Committee, to elect the Committee Chairmen. Other officers of the Committees are elected at their following meetings.]

6. Election of Vice-Presidents.

[NOTE: Seven Vice-Presidents are elected by secret ballot after the Main Committees have elected their Chairmen. The President of the Assembly, the Vice-Presidents and the Chairmen of the Main Committees constitute the General (or Steering) Committee. In electing the Vice-Presidents, the Assembly pays regard to insuring the representative character of the General Committee. Election of Vice-Presidents is by simple majority. Member countries are elected, not individuals. The heads of the delegations of the countries elected serve as Vice-Presidents.]

7. Notification by the Secretary-General under Article 12, paragraph 2, of the Charter.

[NOTE: This Article of the Charter requires that the Secretary-General, with the consent of the Security Council, shall notify the General Assembly at each session of any matters relative to the maintenance of international peace and security which are being dealt with by the Security Council.]

8. Adoption of the agenda.

[NOTE: All the items submitted for inclusion on the agenda are considered by the General Committee which reports to the Assembly with its recommendations. The Assembly adopts the agenda by a majority of members present and voting.]

(more)

9. Opening of the General Debate.

[NOTE: At the beginning of each session of the Assembly there is a general debate in which the heads of delegations usually express the views of their countries on problems of common concern to the Membership of the United Nations.]

10. Report of the Secretary-General on the work of the Organization.

[NOTE: The Charter requires the Secretary-General to report annually to the Assembly on the work of the Organization as a whole. His present report (Doc. A/2404) covers the period 1 July 1952 to 30 June 1953. Every aspect of United Nations activity is dealt with under six broad headings -- political and security questions, economic and social developments, questions concerning trusteeship and non-self-governing territories, legal questions, development of public understanding and administrative and budgetary questions.]

11. Report of the Security Council.

[NOTE: The report (Doc. A/2437 covers the twelve months 16 July 1952 to 15 July 1953. The Charter requires the Council to submit such annual reports which include an account of the measures decided on or taken by the Council to maintain international peace and security. As in other years, the report is a summary of resolutions approved or rejected and an account of the broad lines of debate. This year's report was approved by the Council at a closed meeting held on 12 August 1953.]

12. Report of the Economic and Social Council.

[NOTE: Each year the Assembly examines the work of the Economic and Social Council and its subsidiary organs on the basis of the Council's annual report. The Council's report this year covers theperiod from 2 August 1952 to 5 August 1953, during which time the Council held two sessions. The annual report, Doc. A/2430, will be issued shortly. Resolutions arising from the 16th session held in Geneva 30 June to 5 August 1953 are included in the Supplementary List (see below). Roundups of the 15th and 16th sessions of the Council are contained in Press Release ECOSOC/1149 and Geneva Press Release ECOSOC 657, which are available at the Press Documents Counter.]

13. Report of the Trusteeship Council.

[NOTE: The report covers the Council's twelfth session held 16 June to 21 July 1953 at UN Headquarters. Owing to a new schedule for the examination of the annual reports of administering authorities on trust territories, the Council this year held only one session and the report deals with its review of only five instead of all eleven trust territories. The territories examined were Somaliland (administered by Italy), the Pacific Islands -- Marshalls, Marianas and Carolines (administered by the United States), Nauru and New Guinea (administered by Australia) and Western Samoa (administered New Zealand). The report also deals with the Council's review of the reports of its 1953 visiting mission to the above-mentioned four trust territories in the Pacific, and of the 1952 visiting mission to West Africa which covered the two Togolands and the two Cameroons (administered by Britain and France respectively). In addition, the report describes in each case the action taken by the Council in respect to petitions -- numbering some 400 -- from the various trust territories, the Ewe and Togoland unification problem (see special report under item 31), as well as several other questions referred to it by the Assembly: rural economic development in trust territories, participation of the indigenous inhabitants in the government of the territories and in the work of the Council, educational advancement of the territories and administrative unions affecting trust territories.]

14. Election of three non-permanent members of the Security Council.

[NOTE: The Security Council consists of five permanent members (China, France, United Kingdom, United States and USSR) plus six non-permanent members elected by the General Assembly for two-year terms. The terms of Chile, Greece and Pakistan expire at the end of 1953. Election is by two-thirds majority in secret ballot. Retiring members are not eligible for immediate re-election.

The three other non-permanent members now on the Council who will continue till the end of 1954 are Colombia, Denmark and Lebanon.

So far the following non-permanent members have served on the Council:

Argentina (1948-49)
Australia (1946-47)
Belgium (1947-48)
Brazil (1946-47, 1951-52)
Canada (1948-49)
Chile (1952-53)
Colombia (1947-48, 1953-54)
Cuba (1949-50)
Denmark (1953-54)
Ecuador (1950-51)
Egypt (1946, 1949-50)
Greece (1952-53)
India (1950-51)
Lebanon (1953-54)
Mexico (1946)
Netherlands (1946, 1951-52)
Norway (1949-50)
Pakistan (1952-53)
Poland (1946-47)
Syria (1947-48)
Turkey (1951-52)
Ukrainian S.S.R. (1948-49)
Yugoslavia (1950-51)

(more)

15. Election of six members of the Economic and Social Council.

[NOTE: Six of the 18 members of the Economic and Social Council retire each year after serving three years on the Council. Election is by secret ballot and a two-thirds majority is required. Retiring members are eligible for immediate re-election.

The present members of the Council are: Argentina, Australia, Belgium, China, Cuba, Egypt, France, India, Philippines, Poland, Sweden, Turkey, USSR, United Kingdom, United States, Uruguay, Venezuela, Yugoslavia.

The six whose terms of office expire at the end of this year are: Philippines, Poland, Sweden, USSR, United Kingdom and Uruguay.]

16. Election of two members of the Trusteeship Council.

[NOTE: The Trusteeship Council consists of UN members administering trust territories, permanent members of the Security Council which do not administer trust territories, and as many other non-administering countries, elected by the Assembly for three-year terms, as are required to insure on the Council an equal number of countries which administer trust territories and of those which do not.

The present members of the Council: Australia, Belgium, France, New Zealand, United Kingdom, United States (administering countries); China, USSR (non-administering permanent members of the Security Council); Dominican Republic, El Salvador, Syria, Thailand.

Elected members of the Council are eligible for immediate re-election when their terms expire. Election is by secret ballot; a two-thirds majority is required.

The two members whose terms expire at the end of 1953 are: Dominican Republic and Thailand.]

17. Election of the members of the International Law Commission (resolutions 174 (II) of 21 November 1947 and 486 (V) of 12 December 1950)

[NOTE: The International Law Commission was established by the General Assembly's resolution of 21 November 1947 but it was not until 3 November 1948 that the Assembly elected 15 members of the Commission for a three year term. By its resolution of 12 December 1950 the Assembly extended the members' term for two further years.

The Commission's terms of reference are to promote the progressive development of international law and its codification. The present members who serve in their individual capacity, are:

18. The Korean question

(a) Report of the United Nations Commission for the Unification and Rehabilitation of Korea (resolution 376 V of 7 October 1950)

[NOTE: UNCURK was established by the Assembly resolution of 7 October 1950. It consists of Australia, Chile, Netherlands, Pakistan, Philippines, Thailand and Turkey. One of its functions is to represent the United Nations in helping to establish a unified, independent and democratic government of all Korea.

UNCURK's report to the 8th Assembly session has not yet been issued.

In accordance with a resolution adopted by the General Assembly on 18 April 1953, the Seventh Regular Assembly which had recessed on 23 April was called back by the President on the day that he was notified by the UN Command of the signing of the Korean Armistice at Panmunjom on 27 July 1953 (Korean time).

The Seventh Session reconvened on 17 August to discuss arrangements for the special Political Conference recommended in Article 60 of the Armistice Agreement. The Assembly adjourned on 28 August after adopting a resolution recommending that "the side contributing forces under the Unified Command in Korea shall have as participants in the Conference those among the member states contributing armed forces pursuant to the call of the United Nations which desire to be represented, together with the Republic of Korea." The resolution further recommended that the United States Government should arrange with the other side for the Political Conference to be held not later than 28 October 1953, at a place and on a date satisfactory to both sides. The vote on the resolution was 43 in favor, 5 against and 10 abstentions. The Assembly also recommended participation of the Soviet Union in the Political Conference, "provided the other side desires it."]

(b) Report of the United Nations Agent General for Korean Reconstruction (resolution 410 A (V) of 1 December 1950)

/NOTE: UNKRA was established by Assembly resolution of 1 December 1950. The first Agent General was J. Donald Kingsley who was appointed on 7 December 1951 and who was succeeded by John B. Coulter on 12 May 1953. The Agent General is assisted by an Advisory Committee consisting of Canada, India, United Kingdom, United States and Uruguay. UNKRA's operations are financed by voluntary contributions from UN member governments.

At its seventh session, the General Assembly on 11 March 1953 adopted a resolution noting with approval that the Agent General had undertaken, in co-operation with the Government of the Republic of Korea and the UN Command, and in consultation with UNCURK, a program of relief and rehabilitation projects for the period ending June 1953. The resolution went on to express appreciation of the contributions made by governments, specialized agencies and non-governmental organizations and requested governments which had made pledges to UNKRA to make prompt payment of those pledges and called for continuing assistance to meet the need of the Korean people for relief and rehabilitation.

Agent General John B. Coulter has subsequently reported that outside aid in the amount of one billion dollars will be required to restore Korea's economy to its pre-war level.

On 26 August, the Advisory Committee to UNKRA approved the Agency's $130 million program of long-range rehabilitation of Korea for the year ending 30 June 1954. This is essentially an extention of the $70 million program undertaken by UNKRA last year.

(The Agent General's report to the Eighth Session of the Assembly will be issued shortly.)/

19. Report of the Director of the United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East (resolutions 302 (IV) of 8 December 1949 and 614 (VII) of 6 November 1952)

/NOTE: The General Assembly, at its sixth regular session in Paris, approved a three-year $250,000,000 relief and reintegration program for Palestine refugees, without prejudice to the refugees' other rights to repatriation or compensation: At its seventh session, the Assembly recognized, in a resolution adopted on 6 November 1952, that the immediate realization of

of reduction of relief expenditure envisaged in the three-year program had not proved possible and that therefore increased relief expenditures were required with resultant reduction in the reintegration funds. The resolution authorizes UNWRA to increase the relief budget to $23,000,000 for the fiscal year ending 30 June 1953 and to adopt a relief budget of $18,000,000 for the fiscal year ending 30 June 1954.

The operations of UNWRA are financed by voluntary contributions by UN members. In its report to the seventh General Assembly, UNWRA stated it had 880,000 refugees on its rolls scattered over more than 100,000 square miles in Egypt, Lebanon, Syria and Jordan.

The Director of the Agency is assisted by an Advisory Commission consisting of France, Turkey, the United Kingdom and the United States. The Director's report to the coming Assembly has not yet been issued.]

20. Treatment of people of Indian origin in the Union of South Africa: report of the United Nations Good Offices Commission (resolution 615 (VII) of 5 December 1952)

[NOTE: The Assembly, which had had this question before it since 1946, noted at its last session that the Union of South Africa had expressed its inability to accept a resolution adopted by the Assembly in January 1952 regarding resumption of negotiations with the Governments of India and Pakistan, and also noted that the South African Government had continued to enforce the Group Areas Act in contravention of Assembly recommendations. By the same resolution of 5 December 1952, the Assembly established a Good Offices Commission of three members to be named by the President to assist in negotiations between South Africa on the one hand and India and Pakistan on the other "in order that a satisfactory solution of the question in accordance with the Purposes and Principles of the Charter, and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights be achieved." The resolution also called for suspension of enforcement of the Group Areas Act pending conclusion of negotiations between the three governments.

The President named Cuba, Syria and Yugoslavia to comprise the Good Offices Commission. On 23 March 1953 the Commission informed the three governments concerned that it was its sincere hope that it could be of some help in the matter and asked that they inform it of any suggestions they might have on the manner in which it could render assistance.

In a communication to the UN Secretary-General dated 13 May 1953, the Permanent Representative of the Union of South Africa to the United Nations stated that his Government regarded the Assembly resolution of 5 December 1952 as unconstitutional and therefore regretted it could grant no recognition to the Commission appointed under that resolution.

21. The question of race conflict in South Africa resulting from the policies of apartheid of the Government of the Union of South Africa: report of the Commission appointed to study the racial question in the Union of South Africa (resolution 616A (VII) of 5 December 1952)

[NOTE: By the resolution referred to, the General Assembly at its last session established a Commission of three members to study the racial situation in the Union of South Africa and to report its conclusions to the 8th regular session. The South African Government was invited to extend its full co-operation to the Commission. The preamble to the resolution referred to the fact that one of the purposes of the UN was to achieve international co-operation in promoting respect for human rights and fundamental freedoms for all and recalled previous Assembly resolutions urging cessation of religious and so-called racial persecution and holding that a policy of racial segregation was based on doctrines of racial discrimination.

The three members originally designated by the Assembly to serve on the Commission were Hernan Santa Cruz, Ralph Bunche and Jaime Torres Bodet. As the two latter were unable to serve, the Assembly later decided that the Commission should consist of Hernan Santa Cruz, Henri Langier and Dantes Bellegarde.

The Commission began its meetings in Geneva on 11 May 1953 and has heard statements from witnesses. Its report to the coming Assembly will be issued later.]

22. Admission of new Members: report of the Special Committee (resolution 620A (VII) of 21 December 1952)

[NOTE: The 19-member Special Committee on the Admission of New Members was established by the General Assembly in its resolution of 21 December 1952 and instructed to make a detailed study of the question of the admission of States to membership in the United Nations, examining the proposals and suggestions which had been made in the General Assembly and its Committees or which might be submitted to the Special Committee by any Members of the United Nations, such study to be conducted in the light of the relevant provisions of the Charter of the United Nations, the discussions in the General Assembly and its Committees, the debates in the Security Council, the advisory opinions of the International Court of Justice, the other antecedents of the question and the principles of international law. The Special Committee was to report on its work and conclusions to the Eighth Session of the General Assembly.

The Special Committee's report (Doc. A/2400) noted that none of the courses proposed had proved generally acceptable. In light of the view of many members that the Special Committee should limit itself to giving a comprehensive account of its deliberations, the Special Committee agreed that no vote would be taken on the various proposals and suggestions and that no specific recommendations would be submitted to the Assembly.]

23. Regulation, limitation and balanced reduction of all armed forces and all armaments: report of the Disarmament Commission (resolution 704 (VII) of 8 April 1953)

[NOTE: The resolution of the last session which is referred to was adopted by a vote of 52 in favor, 5 against, and 3 abstentions. It declared that the aims of a system of world-wide disarmament is to prevent war and release the world's human and economic resources for the purposes of peace; it took note of the report of the Disarmament Commission and requested it to continue its work for the development by the United Nations of comprehensive and co-ordinated plans providing for: (a) the regulation, limitation and balanced reduction of all armed forces and armaments; (b) the elimination and prohibition of all major weapons, including bacteriological, adaptable to man's distruction; (c) the effective international control of atomic energy to ensure the prohibition of atomic weapons and the use of atomic energy for peaceful purposes only; the whole program to be carried out under effective international control in such a way that no State would have course to fear that its security was endangered. Finally, the resolution requested the Disarmament Commission to report to the Assembly and to the Security Council not later than 1 September 1953.

The Commission met on 20 August and unanimously approved a report stating the hope "that recent international events will create a more propitious atmosphere for the reconsideration of the disarmament question, whose capital importance in conjunction with other questions affecting the maintenance of peace is recognized by all." The Commission said it expected to continue its work and planned to present a report to the Ninth Session of the General Assembly and to the Security Council. (Docs. A/2444 and S/3087/Rev.1)

24. Question of impartial investigation of charges of use by United Nations forces of bacterial warfare (resolution 706 (VII) of 23 April 1953)

[NOTE: The resolution of 23 April 1953 noted that accusations had been made by certain governments and authorities charging use of bacteriological warfare by UN forces and that the Unified Command had repeatedly denied such charges; it noted also that the Unified Command had requested an impartial investigation and that the Central People's Government of the People's Republic of China and the North Korean authorities had refused to accept an offer by the International Committee of the Red Cross to carry out an investigation, and that a US proposal for an investigation by the International Committee of the Red Cross had been defeated in the Security Council because of the negative vote of the USSR. The resolution went on to state that the Assembly, desiring to serve the interests of truth, resolved that a Commission consisting of Brazil, Egypt, Pakistan, Sweden and Uruguay should investigate the charges after the President of the Assembly had received an indication from all governments and authorities concerned of their acceptance of said investigation. The President was asked to transmit the resolution to the governments and authorities requesting them to indicate their acceptance of the investigation.

The resolution was duly transmitted in accordance with the Assembly's decision. By communications dated 27 April, 13 and 18 May respectively, the United States, the Republic of Korea and Japan made known their acceptance of the proposed investigation. To date, no reply has been received from North Korea or the People's Republic of China. The proposed Commission has, in consequence, not functioned.]

25. Complaint by the Union of Burma regarding aggression against it by the Government of the Republic of China: report of the Government of the Union of Burma (resolution 707 (VII) of 23 April 1953)

[NOTE: This question was considered at the last session of the Assembly on the request of the Government of Burma in a cablegram dated 25 March 1953. As a result of the ensuing discussion, the Assembly, on 23 April, adopted by 59 votes in favor with 1 abstention (China) a resolution which declared that the presence, hostile activities and depredations of foreign forces in the territory of Burma constituted a violation of the territory and sovereignty of Burma. The presence of these forces was condemned and the resolution declared they must be disarmed and either agree to internment or leave Burma forthwith. All states were requested to respect the territorial integrity and political independence of Burma. The resolution recommended that negotiations then in progress through the good offices of certain member states should be pursued in order to put an end to this serious situation by means of the immediate disarmament and withdrawal of the foreign forces from Burma or by means of their disarmament and internment. All states were urged to aid Burma, in its request, to facilitate by peaceful means the evacuation of these forces; to refrain from giving any assistance to them which might enable them to remain in Burma or continue their hostile acts against that country.

The final clause of the resolution invited Burma to report on the situation to the 8th General Assembly session.]

26. Economic development of under-developed countries:
(a) Question of establishing a special fund for grants-in-aid and for low-interest long term loans: report of the Economic and Social Council (resolution 622 A (VII) of 21 December 1952)

/NOTE: The report of the Economic and Social Council on this question is submitted in accordance with a request of the Assembly as part of its consideration of the general question of the financing of economic development of under-developed countries.

At its sixth session the Assembly had asked the Council to submit a detailed plan for the establishment and organization of, as soon as circumstances permitted, a special fund for grants-in-aid and for low-interest long term loans to help under-developed countries, at their request, to accelerate their economic development and to finance basic, non-self-liquidating projects.

The Council decided to establish a committee of experts, to be appointed by the Secretary-General, to prepare a plan. This committee early this year produced a unanimous report (Doc. E/2381, summarized in Press Release EC/1218) on the operations of a Special UN Fund on Economic Development (SUNFED) which would come into being only when at least 30 countries had pledged the equivalent of not less than $250,000,000 for its initial period of operation. The Fund should be a separate administration but within the framework of and in close relationship to the United Nations. In its early phase, it was recommended, guiding factors in allocating resources among governments should be (1) merits of individual applications submitted; (2) projects promoting the purposes of the UN or special objectives given high priority by UN organs; (3) projects capable of yielding early results; and (4) maintenance of a reasonable geographical balance in allocations.

This report was considered by the ECOSOC which at its last (16th) session held in Geneva 30 June to 5 August 1953, adopted a resolution which recommended that governments should consider joining in the following draft declaration at the coming Assembly session: --

"We, the Member governments of the United Nations, in order to promote higher standards of living and conditions of economic and social progress and development, stand ready to ask our peoples, when sufficient progress has been made in internationally supervised world-wide disarmament, to devote a portion of the savings achieved through such disarmament to an international fund, within the framework of the United Nations, to assist development and reconstruction in under-developed countries."

(more)

The Council also expressed great appreciation to the expert committee for its report on the special fund which it transmitted to the Assembly together with records of the Council's discussion.

It recommended that the Assembly consider what other preparatory steps might usefully be taken toward the establishment, when circumstances permit, of an international fund to aid development and reconstruction in under-developed countries.

[The Council's vote on this resolution was 15 in favor, none against, 2 abstentions (Poland and the USSR) and 1 absent.]

(b) Status of the proposal for the establishment of an international finance corporation: report of the Economic and Social Council (resolution 622 B (VII) of 21 December 1952)

[NOTE: Last year's Assembly resolution, which is referred to, among other matters (1) noted with satisfaction a preliminary report prepared by the International Bank on a proposed international finance corporation (Doc.E/2215); (2) recalled that in June 1952 the Economic and Social Council requested the International Bank to continue its studies and to seek the views of its member governments on the desirability of establishing such a corporation and to inform the Council during 1953 on the results of this further examination; (3) looked forward to early completion of their tasks on this question by the Bank and ECOSOC; (4) requested the Secretary-General to provide the Bank with the records of the seventh Assembly's discussion on the subject; and (5) requested ECOSOC to report to the coming Assembly session on progress made.

Before the last session of the ECOSOC was an interim report of the International Bank which indicated that the time was not yet ripe for setting up the finance corporation. Reporting on its consultations with various governments, national organizations and business groups, the Bank drew attention to the fact that "while maintaining their interest in the proposal, countries on whom the corporation would necessarily have to depend for the greater part of its funds have not as yet indicated that they are ready to commit themselves to subscribe to its capital."

The Council's discussion centered on the feasibility of establishing such a corporation. In a vote of 16 in favor, none against and with 2 abstentions (Poland, USSR) the Council eventually adopted a resolution commending the International Bank for its useful contribution to the study of an international finance corporation and invited it to present the results of its further studies as soon as possible and to report progress to the Council's next session.

For fuller information on the Council's discussions both of the proposed Special UN Fund for Economic Development and the international finance corporation see the "UN Bulletin" for 15 August.]

27. Expanded Program of Technical Assistance for the economic development of underdeveloped countries: report of the Economic and Social Council (resolution 621 (VII) of 21 December 1952).

[NOTE: Financial difficulties facing the expanded program of technical assistance occupied a large part of the Council's attention at its last session in Geneva. The program is financed by voluntary contributions from Governments and the Executive Chairman of the Technical Assistance Board told the Council that unless contributions were increased for 1954 it would be necessary to cut down projects in course of application and to abstain from launching new ones, although requests for aid from governments were increasing.

The Council's decisions, which will come before the Assembly, included the following:

(1) It unanimously urged states taking part in the expanded program to continue giving it their full support, financial and otherwise, so as to ensure the essential development of the program and to help it meet the growing needs of underdeveloped countries. Governments were urged to contribute the maximum possible for meeting program needs in 1954, contributions in any case to be no less than the amounts earmarked for assistance activities approved by the TAB for 1953.

(2) To enable the UN and specialized agencies taking part in the expanded program to plan their 1954 projects before next 1 January, the Council asked the UN Committee which negotiates with Governments for extra-budgetary funds to meet as soon as possible after 5 August. It also asked that the next pledging conference at which governments announce their contributions to the program, be held as early as possible during the coming Assembly session.

(3) By 16 votes to 0 with 2 abstentions, the Council asked the Assembly to approve the following financial arrangements for 1954:

(i) Seventy-five per cent of the funds pledged for 1954 to be available for immediate allocation to the participating organizations after programs for various countries have been approved by the TAB;

(ii) The rest of the available funds, including the carry-over from previous years, to be kept in reserve for meeting essential minimum expenses of TAB and resident technical assistance representatives and for further allocations to participating organizations as TAB may deem necessary;

(iii) In view of the present level of operational expenditures, the need for economy to be taken fully into account when establishing essential administrative expenses for the entire program.

(4) The Council unanimously asked its Technical Assistance Committee (TAC) to submit any recommendations it may have on the financial procedures for the program's operation.

(5) The Council was of the unanimous opinion that for the orderly development of projects it would be useful to have assured financial support for more than one-year periods, as has been the case so far; accordingly it asked countries in a position to do so to take steps, within their constitutional limitations, to ensure long term financial support.

(6) The TAB was asked to report on the results of proposals to improve the co-ordination of technical assistance in recipient countries.

(7) The Council asked the Assembly to approve a revised program of technical assistance in public administration.

Separate agenda items arising from its last session of ECOSOC and relating to technical assistance will be found in the Supplementary List, items # 2, 3, 4, 5, given at the end of this release.]

28. Work of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees:
(a) Report of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (resolution 428 (V) of 14 December 1950)

[NOTE: The UN High Commissioner for Refugees acts under the authority of the General Assembly to give international protection to refugees as defined in the Statute of his office which was adopted by the Assembly on 14 December 1950. Dr. G. J. van Heuven Goedhart of the Netherlands was elected High Commissioner for Refugees for a three-year term from 1 January 1951. In 1951, the Economic and Social Council established an advisory committee whose opinion may be requested by the High Commissioner. It consists of representatives of Australia, Austria, Belgium, Brazil, Denmark, the Federal Republic of Germany, France, Israel, Italy, Switzerland, Turkey, United Kingdom, United States, the Vatican and Venezuela.

The annual report of the High Commissioner (Doc. A/2394) was considered by the last ECOSOC session which is transmitting it to the General Assembly with a resolution, adopted by 16 votes in favor to 2 against (Poland, USSR) which recommends that the Office of the High Commissioner be continued for a further five years. The resolution praises the valuable work performed by the Commissioner "in providing international protection for refugees and promoting permanent solutions" for their problems. It draws the Assembly's attention to the importance of making provision for the arrangements of the Office to be reviewed at least one year before the expiry of the period which the Assembly will determine.

(more)

Addressing the Council, the High Commissioner pointed out that the target for voluntary contributions to the UN Refugee Emergency Fund had been set at $3,000,000 but that so far only $1,000,000 has been obtained. From the Ford Foundation Grant, the High Commissioner reported, his Office has allocated as of 15 June 1953 the sum of $2,250,000 for long-range assimilation and resettlement projects to be carried out by voluntary agencies.]

[NOTE: This has not yet been issued.]

(c) Question of the continuation of the Office of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees (resolutions 319 (V) of 3 December 1949 and 428 (V) of 14 December 1950

[NOTE: The Office of High Commissioner was originally established for three years beginning 1 January 1951. As stated in the note to item 28 (a) above, the ECOSOC is recommending extension of the period for five more years.]

29. Continuation on a permanent basis of the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund (resolution 417 (V) of 1 December 1950)

[NOTE: Under the terms of the Assembly's 1950 resolution, the work of UNICEF would be terminated at the end of 1953. This coming session will have before it a unanimous recommendation from the ECOSOC that the work of UNICEF be continued indefinitely under the title of United Nations Children's Fund, although the symbol UNICEF would be retained. The work of the Fund would be subject to periodic review by the Council and the Assembly.

In the Council discussion on UNICEF, delegates warmly praised its work which in six years has assisted millions of children and mothers in 70 countries and territories.

30. Transfer to the United Nations of the functions undertaken by the League of Nations under the International Slavery Convention of 1926. Draft Protocol prepared by the Secretary-General: item proposed by the Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC resolution 475 (XV) of 27 April 1953)

[NOTE: A memorandum from the Secretary-General to the General Assembly on this item is contained in Doc. A/2435. It recalls the ECOSOC resolution of 27 April 1953 adopted after the Council had considered a report on "Slavery, the Slave Trade, and other Forms of Servitude" (E/2357). The Council's resolution, inter alia, recommends that the Assembly invite States Parties to the 1926 Convention to agree to transfer functions undertaken by the League of Nations under the Convention to the United Nations. It also requested the Secretary-General to draft a protocol for this purpose and to communicate it to States Parties to the Convention and to the General Assembly. The draft protocol is given in Doc. A/2435.]

(more)

31. The Ewe and Togoland unification problem: special report of the Trusteeship Council (resolution 652 (VII) of 20 December 1952.)

[NOTE: The Ewe question, first brought before the United Nations in 1947, has been considered by the Trusteeship Council at almost every session since. The Ewes, a tribe of about one million people, are at present divided between British- and French-administered Togoland and the neighboring Colony of the Gold Coast. Through their spokesmen and organized groups they have petitioned the Trusteeship Council for unification of their people under a single administration. Various proposals advanced by the two Administering Authorities, Britain and France, have failed to secure agreement.

When the question came again before the Assembly at its seventh session, tribal spokesmen for different local parties once more presented their views. The Assembly also took account of a special report of the Trusteeship Council (Doc. A/2289) which gave general endorsement to the findings of its visiting mission which made a first-hand study of the problem that year (Doc. T/1034). The Assembly also heard the observations of the two Administering Authorities.

In its resolution of 20 December 1952, the Assembly urged the two Administering Authorities concerned and the peoples involved to "exert every effort to achieve a prompt, constructive and equitable settlement of the problem, taking fully into account the freely expressed wishes of the people concerned." It recommended that Britain and France should carry on full and extensive consultations with the principal political parties in the two territories and make every effort to bring about the re-establishment of the Joint Council for Togoland Affairs -- a proposal first advanced by the Administering Authorities and later endorsed with some modifications by the Trusteeship Council in 1951 -- "on a basis which will enlist the cooperation of all major segments of the population so that it may be an effective and representative organ for the consideration of the common problems of the two territories." The resolution also urged all of the principal parties in the two Togolands to make every effort to assist constructively in these consultations. It further recommended that the Joint Council be given sufficiently broad advisory responsibilities to enable it to function on all matters of common concern -- political, economic, social and educational, "including the question of the unification of the two territories," and that its members be selected "by direct elections on the basis of universal adult suffrage exercised by secret ballot." The Assembly resolution further asked for a special report from the Trusteeship Council on all steps taken by the administering authorities pursuant to the Council resolution and the Assembly resolution on the Ewe question, including "a full account of all factors affecting the unification question." In accordance with this request, the Trusteeship Council prepared at its twelfth session a special report (Doc. A/2424) which will be placed before the Assembly at its coming session.]

32. Information from Non-self-Governing Territories transmitted under Article 73 e of the Charter: reports of the Secretary-General and of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories

(a) Information on educational conditions.

[NOTE: The Assembly, at its fourth session, invited the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories to give each year special attention to one of the three functional fields mentioned in Article 73 e of the Charter. Accordingly, the Committee examined educational conditions in 1950, economic conditions in 1951 and social conditions in 1952. This year, the Committee, which began its session on 18 August, will make a further study of educational developments, with particular reference to the question of equality of opportunity for all racial, religious and cultural groups in dependent territories. The Committee had before it studies prepared by the Secretariat on this and other major aspects of education in non-self-governing territories, as well as studies prepared by the specialized agencies. The Committee will submit a separate report on educational conditions in the territories as part of its general report to the eighth General Assembly.]

(b) Information on other conditions

[NOTE: When the Assembly recommended that the Committee should devote special attention each year to a given field within its province, it also asked that this should be "without prejudice to the annual consideration of all the functional fields enumerated in Article 73 e of the Charter," which are economic, social and educational.]

(more)

(c) Transmission of Information

[NOTE: On 16 December 1952, the General Assembly adopted a resolution recommending that Members administering non-self-governing territories should include voluntarily in the information transmitted by them under Article 73 e of the Charter details regarding the extent to which the right of peoples and nations to self-determination is exercised by the peoples of those territories. The Assembly also decided to place the resolution on this year's agenda of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories.]

(d) Participation of Non-Self-Governing Territories in the work of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories: recommendations of the Committee (resolution 647 (VII) of 10 December 1952).

[NOTE: Closer links between the indigenous peoples of Non-Self-Governing Territories and the Committee were envisaged in a proposal adopted by the General Assembly at its sixth session. This invited the Committee to consider the possibility of associating the territories "more closely in its work" and to report on the results of its study to the seventh Assembly session. The Assembly examined the report at the last session and adopted on 10 December 1952 a resolution which considered it desirable that qualified indigenous representatives from non-self-governing territories be associated in the work of the Committee and invited the Administering Members to make such participation possible. The resolution also invited the Administering Members to transmit copies of the Committee's reports on economic, social and educational conditions, together with the relevant Assembly resolutions, to the executive and legislative branches of the territories. Last, it invited the Committee "to study further" the question of the direct participation, in its discussions on economic, social and educational conditions, of representatives of those territories the inhabitants of which have attained a wide measure of responsibility for economic, social and educational policies, "and to include recommendations on this question in its report to the General Assembly at its eighth session."]

33. Factors which should be taken into account in deciding whether a territory is or is not a territory whose peoples have not yet attained a full measure of self-government: report of the Ad Hoc Committee on Factors (Non-Self-Governing Territories) (resolution 648 (VII) of 10 December 1952).

[NOTE: What considerations should be taken into account in deciding whether a territory has or has not attained a full measure of self-government? This question, which has been debated by the Assembly's Fourth Committee at several sessions, has a bearing on one of the obligations which Member states administering non-self-governing territories have accepted under Chapter XI of the Charter: to transmit each year to the Secretary-General information on economic, social and educational conditions in their respective territories. At the seventh session, the General Assembly provisionally approved a list of factors, prepared by an ad hoc committee, which might serve as a guide, both for itself and for UN members, in deciding whether or not a territory has reached full measure of self-government. By the same resolution, the Assembly also set up a ten-member committee, consisting of Australia, Belgium, Burma, Cuba, Guatemala, Iraq, Netherlands, United Kingdom, United States and Venezuela, to continue the work of the previous committee. It was asked to carry out "a more thorough study" of the factors and to take into account the views of member governments on the subject, which the resolution requested should be submitted by 1 May 1953. The new Committee met 17-30 July, and approved a slightly modified list of factors divided under three headings. The first part lists factors indicative of the attainment of independence; the second, factors indicative of the attainment of other systems of self-government in continuing association with the metropolitan country or in other forms; and the third, factors indicative of the free association of a territory with the metropolitan or other country as an integral part of that country.]

34. Cessation of the transmission of information under Article 73 e of the Charter: reports of the Ad Hoc Committee on Factors (non-self-governing territories) and of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories.

(a) Netherlands Antilles and Surinam (resolution 650 (VII) of 20 December 1952)

[NOTE: When the Assembly set up the Ad Hoc Committee on Factors, it also instructed the Committee to study and report on the documents submitted by the Government of the Netherlands when it informed the Secretary-General that it would no longer transmit information on the Netherlands Antilles and Surinam since these areas were, in its opinion, no longer non-self-governing within the meaning of Chapter XI of the Charter. The documents in question were supplied in compliance with an Assembly resolution requiring Members considering it unnecessary to continue to transmit information on a particular territory because of a change in the territory's status to send full information on the change to the Secretary-General, including the constitution, legislative act or executive order providing for the territory's government in its relation to the metropolitan government. The Ad Hoc Committee, after examining the question, decided to refer the matter to the eight Assembly without recommendation.]

(more)

(b) Puerto Rico (resolution 448 (V) of 12 December 1950).

[NOTE: By letter dated 20 March 1953, the United States Mission to the United Nations, referring to General Assembly resolution 222 (III) of 3 November 1948, informed the Secretary-General of the decision of the United States Government to cease to transmit information on Puerto Rico under Article 73 e of the Charter, in view of the fact that a change had taken place in the constitutional status of the Territory when a new constitution establishing the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico went into force in July 1952. The communication, together with the texts of the Constitution of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, the explanatory memorandum by the United States Government and a letter from the Governor of Puerto Rico to the President of the United States, was placed before the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories. In accordance with General Assembly resolution 448 (V) of 12 December 1950, the Committee will incorporate in its report to the eighth Assembly the results of its consideration of the communications transmitted by the United States Government concerning Puerto Rico.]

35. Election of two members of the Committee on Information from Non-Self-Governing Territories (resolution 646 (VII) of 10 December 1952.

[NOTE: The Committee consists of the eight Member States transmitting information under Article 73 e of the Charter relating to dependent territories under their administration, and an equal number of non-administering Members elected by the General Assembly's Fourth Committee. The Committee at present is composed of: Australia, Belgium, Denmark, France, the Netherlands, New Zealand, the United Kingdom and the United States (Members transmitting information) and Brazil, China, Cuba, Ecuador, India, Indonesia,

(more)

Iraq and Pakistan (Members elected). The terms of Cuba and Pakistan will expire at the end of 1953 and the Fourth Committee, on behalf of the Assembly, will elect two members to replace them.]

36. Question of South West Africa: report of the Ad Hoc Committee on South West Africa (resolution 651 (VII) of 20 December 1952).

[NOTE: The General Assembly, at its sixth session, adopted a resolution which made a "solemn appeal" to the Government of the Union of South Africa to "reconsider its position" with respect to the question of South West Africa and urged it to resume negotiations with an ad hoc committee, set up under the same resolution, for an agreement on implementing the advisory opinion of the International Court of Justice on the question:--the opinion that the Union Government continues to have international obligations with respect to the former-mandated territory. The Assembly resolution also urged the Union to submit reports on its administration of the territory and to transmit petitions to the United Nations from communities or sections of the population. It further declared that the United Nations cannot recognize as valid any measures taken unilaterally by the Union Government which would modify the international status of South West Africa. As an interim measure, the resolution authorized the ad hoc committee to examine any report on the administration of the territory, petitions or other matters "as far as possible in accordance with the procedure of the former Mandates System."

The ad hoc committee, composed of Norway, Syria, Thailand, United States and Uruguay, held a series of meetings during 1952 with the Union Government's representatives. In its report to the Seventh Assembly session (Doc. A/2261 and Press Release GA/918), the committee reported that agreement in principle on several points had been reached with the Union representatives; however basic divergencies towards a solution of the question still remained.

The Assembly, on 20 December 1952, adopted a resolution by which it decided to postpone consideration of the question until the eighth session. In the meantime, it requested the ad hoc committee, previously set up, to continue negotiations on the same basis as before. The Committee will report to the Assembly at the coming session.]

37. Financial reports and accounts, and reports of the Board of Auditors:

(a) United Nations, for the financial year ended 31 December 1952.

[NOTE: The report (Doc. A/2392) shows that obligations incurred for 1952 amounted to $50,270,173 compared with total appropriations of $50,547,660. The obligations incurred were less than income credited for the year, represented by Members' contributions and miscellaneous income earned, by $298,366. The balance on surplus account at 31 December 1952 was $1,313,853. Of this amount $260,797 was transferred to the Working Capital Fund in 1953; $340,380 was credited to Members' contributions for 1953 and $712,676 is the balance available for credit to Members against 1954 contributions.]

(b) United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund, for the financial year ended 31 December 1952

[NOTE: This report will be issued as Doc. A/2396.]

(c) United Nations Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees in the Near East, for the financial year ended 30 June 1953

[NOTE: This report has not yet been issued.]

(d) United Nations Korean Reconstruction Agency, for the financial year ended 31 June 1953

[NOTE: This report will be issued later.]

38. Supplementary estimates for the financial year 1953.

[NOTE: A report will be submitted during the Assembly session.]

39. Budget estimates for the financial year 1954.

[NOTE: The estimated gross budget (Doc. A/2383, summarized in Press Release GA/988/Rev.1) prepared by the Secretary-General totals $48,123,400. Income is estimated at $6,463,200, leaving a net budget of $41,660,200. The 1954 estimate is $429,300 less than the approved net budget for 1953 which was approved at a figure of $42,089,500.

The Secretary-General's estimates have been reviewed by the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions which has submitted a report (Doc. A/2403, summarized in Press Release GA/991) recommending an overall reduction of $843,800 in the estimates proposed by the Secretary-General. These reductions would bring the gross budget figure down to $47,279,600.]

40. Appointments to fill vacancies in the membership of subsidiary bodies of the General Assembly:

(a) Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions

[Note: Three of the nine members of this Committee retire each year. They are eligible for reappointment. The present members are: Thanassis Aghnides (Greece), Chairman; Rafik Asha (Syria); Carlos Blanco (Cuba); Eduardo Carrizosa (Colombia); I.V. Chechetkin (USSR); Arthur H. Clough (UK); Andre Ganem (France); William O. Hall (US); and Braj Kumar Nehru (India).

The terms of Mr. Asha, Mr. Ganem and Mr. Nehru expire at the end of 1953.]

(b) Committee on Contributions

[Note: This is a ten-member Committee. Members retire by rotation and are eligible for reappointment. The present members are: Maria Z.N. Witteveen (Netherlands), Chairman; S.M. Burke (Pakistan); Rene Charron (France); Arthur H.Clough (UK); Arthur Samuel Lall (India); Adolfo Nass (Venezuela); Jiri Nosek (Czechoslovakia); Stuart A. Rice (US); Josue Saenz (Mexico); and G.F. Saksin (USSR).

The terms of office of Miss Witteveen, Mr. Clough and Mr. Nass expire at the end of 1953.]

(c) Board of Auditors

[Note: The Board consists of three members. At each regular session, the Assembly appoints an auditor to take office from July 1 of the following year for a three-year term. The election this year will be to fill the vacancy created by the expiry on June 30, 1954 of the term of office of the Auditor-General of Colombia.]

(d) Investments Committee

[Note: The present members of the Investments Committee are: Ivar Rooth, Managing Director of the International Monetary Fund; Jacques Rueff, Honorary Governor of the Bank of France; and Leslie Rounds, First Vice-President of the Federal Reserve Bank of New York. Expiry of the three-year term of Mr. Rueff creates the vacancy on the Investments Committee to be filled.]

40. (cont'd)

(e) United Nations Administrative Tribunal

[Note: The Tribunal is composed of seven members appointed by the Assembly for three-year terms. The present members are: Madame Paul Bastid (France); Lord Crook (UK); Bror Arvid Sture Petren (Sweden); Vladimir Outrata Czechoslovakia); Homero Viteri-Lafronte (Equador); Omar Loutfi (Egypt); and Djalal Abdoh (Iran).

The terms of Lord Crook and Mr. Vladimir Outrata expire at the end of 1953.]

41. Headquarters of the United Nations: report of the Secretary-General (resolution 663 (VII) of 25 November 1952)

[Note: An interim report by the Secretary-General (not yet issued) will contain information on progress during the past year of construction and landscaping of the Permanent Headquarters and adjacent areas.]

42. Scale of assessments for the apportionment of the expenses of the United Nations: report of the Committee on Contributions (resolution 665 (VII) of 5 December 1952)

[Note: The costs of the UN are borne by all Members. Each regular Assembly session determines, on the basis of a report from its Committee on Contributions, the scale of assessments—expressed in percentages of the cost—for all the Members. The report of the Committee on Contributions to the coming Assembly has not yet been issued. However, last year the Assembly decided that "as from 1 January 1954 the assessment of the largest contributor shall not exceed one-third of total assessments against Members." The effect of this will be to reduce the assessment of the United States from 35.12 per cent in 1953 to 33-1/3 per cent for 1954.]

43. Review of audit procedures of the United Nations and the specialized agencies: reports of the Secretary-General and of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (resolution 672 B (VII) of 20 December 1952).

/NOTE: The reports referred to in this agenda item have not yet been issued. They were requested by a resolution of the last Assembly which noted the increased activities of the UN and the specialized agencies and the related increase in their financial responsibilities and which stated that the present system for the audit of their accounts might not be the most suitable and efficient to meet the increased requirements. The Administrative Committee on Coordination of the UN and specialized agencies was invited to review present procedures and recommend any changes it considered desirable. The Advisory Committee was requested to report to the Assembly on any such recommendations./

44. Report of the Negotiating Committee for Extra-Budgetary Funds (resolution 693 (VII) of 25 October 1952).

/NOTE: Certain of the activities of the UN and the specialized agencies are financed by voluntary contributions of Member governments. Such activities include: UN International Children's Emergency Fund, the Expanded Program of Technical Assistance, the UN Korean Reconstruction Agency, and the UN Relief and Works Agency for Palestine Refugees. To assist in obtaining funds for these special programs not provided for in the regular budget of the United Nations, the Assembly requested the President to appoint a Negotiating Committee for Extra-Budgetary Funds. The President accordingly appointed a Negotiating Committee composed of Australia, Canada, Colombia, France, Haiti, Lebanon, Pakistan, United Kingdom and United States.

This Committee's report has not yet been issued./

45. Administrative and budgetary coordination between the United Nations and the specialized agencies: reports of the Secretary-General and of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions.

/NOTE: These reports will be issued later./

46. Audit reports relating to expenditure by specialized agencies of technical assistance funds allocated from the Special Account (resolution 519 A (VI) of 12 January 1952).

/NOTE: By resolution 519 A (VI), the Assembly approved financial arrangements agreed to by the Economic and Social Council for the allocation of funds contributed for the Expanded Program of Technical Assistance. Under these arrangements $10,000,000 of contributions received for the second financial period were allocated on an agreed basis to the various participating organizations. The balance was placed in a Special Account for allocation by the Technical Assistance Board.

The audit reports called for by this agenda item relate to expenditure by specialized agencies of funds from this Special Account. The reports will be issued later.]

47. United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund:

(a) Annual report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board for the year ended 31 December 1952.

[NOTE: This report (Doc. A/2421) shows that the total value of the Fund at the end of 1952 amounted to $29,153,966. The excess of income over expenditure for the year was $7,830,526. Income from investments amounted to $683,988. The total value of benefits paid during the year was $726,733, of which withdrawal benefits amounted to $634,744.]

(b) Acceptance by the specialized agencies of the jurisdiction of the United Nations Administrative Tribunal in matters involving applications alleging non-observance of Pension Fund regulations: report of the Secretary-General (resolution 678 (VII) of 21 December 1952).

[NOTE: At its last session, in taking note of the annual report of the UN Joint Staff Pension Board, the General Assembly recommended that the governing organs of specialized agencies which are members of the Fund, accept the jurisdiction of the UN Administrative Tribunal in matters involving applications alleging non-observance of Pension Fund regulations. The Secretary-General was asked to report to the eighth Assembly session on action taken on this recommendation. His report will be issued later.]

(c) Amendments to the regulations for the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Fund: report of the United Nations Joint Staff Pension Board (resolution 680 (VII) of 21 December 1952).

[NOTE: In approving amendments and additions to the Pension Fund regulations, the Assembly last year referred back to the Pension Fund Board for further consideration of proposals relating to Article XI ("Summary dismissal for serious misconduct") and Article XVI ("Contributions on account of participants"). The Assembly also referred to the Pension Fund Board for consideration of a proposal that administrative expenses of the Fund be charged to the Fund instead of being met, as at present, out of the general budget of the UN.

(more)

The report of the UN Joint Staff Pension Board (Doc. A/2422) submits revised texts for Articles XI and XVI. On the question of administrative costs, the Board reports its intention to reconsider the proposal, that these should be charged to the Fund, after the next actuarial valuation of the Fund has been received. The Board is of the opinion that it would be premature to decide this question on the basis of the valuation at December 1951.]

48. Organization of the Secretariat: reports of the Secretary-General and of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (resolution 681 A (VII) of 21 December 1952).

[NOTE: The last session of the General Assembly, after discussing a report by the First Secretary-General (Doc. A/2214) on organization of the Secretariat, decided that the problems or reorganization required further study and requested the Secretary-General to prepare a full report on the problems of reorganization including the relationship between the Departments of Economic and Affairs and of Social Affairs and the Technical Assistance Administration. This report of the Secretary-General with the recommendations of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions, was to be circulated to Members four weeks before the opening of the eighth regular session.

Dag Hammarskjold succeeded Trygve Lie as Secretary-General on 7 April 1953. His report on the organization of the Secretariat will be issued shortly.]

49. Report of the Committee on Special Administrative Questions (resolution 681 B(VII) of 21 December 1952.)

[NOTE: Last year, the General Assembly set up a committee consisting of Australia, Belgium, Brazil, Chile, China, Dominican Republic, Greece, Iraq, Norway, Pakistan and Poland to consider certain paragraphs of a memorandum of the first Secretary-General on UN administration (Doc. A/2214) which dealt with possible administrative changes affecting the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions and the Administrative Tribunal. When the Committee met, it had before it a memorandum by the new Secretary-General stating:

(1) He found himself unable to maintain the suggestion, made in the original memorandum, that membership of the Advisory Committee should disqualify a person from service on the Assembly's Fifth Committee, and that membership of the Administrative Tribunal should disqualify a person from service as a governmental representative on legislative committees of the Assembly.

(more)

(2) He had no suggestions to make on the rules of procedure of the Assembly regarding the Advisory Committee.

(3) He believed it premature to consider amendments to the statute of the Administrative Tribunal and neither he nor the President of the Tribunal had any major or urgent suggestions to make.

The Committee's report to the Assembly notes that no proposal has been submitted by the Secretary-General or by Member governments on the matters referred to it and the Committee therefore makes no recommendation at this stage to the Assembly,but decides to allow Members and the Secretary-General time for further study.]

50. Staff Regulations of the United Nations. Question of a probationary period: reports of the Secretary-General and of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (resolution 682 (VII) of 21 December 1952).

[NOTE: The Assembly resolution of last December requested the Secretary-General to submit through the Advisory Committee, a "final proposal" on the question of a probationary period for UN staff members. The Secretary-General's report on this question will be issued later.]

51. Personnel policy: reports of the Secretary-General and of the Advisory Committee on Administrative and Budgetary Questions (resolution 708 (VII) of 1 April 1953).

[NOTE: After considerable debate on UN personnel policy which included reference to the problem of alleged subversive activities by staff members, the Assembly at its last session adopted a resolution which expressed confidence that the Secretary-General would conduct his personnel policy with the provisions of Articles 100 and 101 of the Charter in mind and which requested him to submit to this coming session, a report on the progress made in the conduct and development of personnel policy. This report has not yet been issued.]

52. Question of a change in the opening date of regular sessions of the General Assembly: report of the Secretary-General (resolution 692 (VII) of 18 December 1952).

[NOTE: Under its present rules, regular sessions of the General Assembly begin on the third Tuesday in September. In his report to the eighth session, the Secretary-General points out (Doc. A/2436) that the Assembly found it necessary to postpone the second part of its first session and the opening of its sixth and seventh sessions. In addition, the third and fifth sessions which opened at the normal time, continued into the following year after adjournments. The report goes on to suggest that an opening date in the first half of the year, such as 20 April, would reduce the risk of postponements followed by disruption of the Assembly's work

A change in the opening date of the Assembly would involve adjustments in the pattern of sessions of other bodies such as the Economic and Social Council, the report points out. Opening the Assembly in April would also have financial implications such as its effect on the budget, contributions of Members and the Working Capital Fund.

The Secretary-General's report examines what would be the position (1) if the opening date were changed while the financial year were left unchanged; (2) if both the opening date and the financial year were changed. It stresses that a change in the financial year could not be decided until agreement had been obtained from a sufficiently large group of Members whose contributions represent a major part of the annual assessment as to the time of payment of their contributions.]

53. Report of the International Law Commission on the work of its fifth session.

[NOTE: The fifth session of the International Law Commission was held in Geneva from 1 June to 14 August of this year. Its agenda included the following items: arbitral procedure; regime of the high seas; regime of the territorial sea; law of treaties; nationality including statelessness; draft code of offences against the peace and security of mankind; request of the General Assembly concerning the codification of the topic "Diplomatic intercourse and immunities."

The report of the Commission's fifth session will be issued as Doc. A/CN.4/76.]

54. Measures to limit the duration of regular sessions of the General Assembly: report of the Special Committee (resolution 689 A (VII) of 21 December 1952).

[NOTE: The Special Committee appointed by the last session and consisting of Afghanistan, Australia, Chile, China, Czechoslovakia, El Salvador, France, Iran, Netherlands, Norway, Philippines, USSR, United Kingdom, United States and Uruguay, has submitted a report (Doc. A/2402). This states that "the best interest of the General Assembly, not the length of the sessions as such, must remain the over-riding consideration in any study of measures designed to limit the duration of the regular sessions." Difficulties related to the duration of the regular sessions should not be resolved at the expense either of the effectiveness of the General Assembly or of the right of any representative freely to explain his government's attitude on the problems before the Assembly. "It is felt," says the report, "that the Assembly, through the co-operation of its members, can initiate or strengthen certain practices so as to expedite and simplify the conduct of business."

The report then reviews Assembly practice with regard to such matters as: the agenda; reports of Councils; debate in Committees; limitation of debate; points of order; consideration of items in plenary meetings without reference to Committees; times of opening and closing meetings; etc. It recommends that an outline of its various suggestions should be included in a consolidated annex to the rules of procedure.

It makes a specific recommendation that the Chairman of the Ad Hoc Political Committee should participate in the General Committee with the right to vote. It also proposes an amendment to Rules 73 and 113 on procedure to limit the time allowed to each speaker and the number of times each representative may speak on any question.]

55. Question of the continuation of the functions of the United Nations Tribunal in Libya: item proposed by the Secretary-General.

[NOTE: By its resolution on "Economic and Financial Provisions Relating to Libya" which was adopted during the fifth regular session on 15 December 1950, the General Assembly set up a United Nations Tribunal in Libya composed of three persons selected by the Secretary-General, with the task of

(1) giving, upon request, to the Administering Powers, the Libyan Government and the Italian Government, such instruction as might be required to give effect to the economic and financial provisions set out elsewhere in the resolution; and

(2) deciding all disputes arising between the authorities concerning the interpretation and application of those provisions.

Members of the Tribunal are: Dr. Vicente Sanchez Gavito (Mexico), Hugo Georg Ludvig Wickstrom (Sweden) and Faiz Yorukoglu (Turkey).

A memorandum on the continuation of the Tribunal will be submitted to the Assembly by the Secretary-General.]

56. The Tunisian Question: item proposed by Afghanistan, Burma, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Liberia, Pakistan, the Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Thailand and Yemen.

[NOTE: In the explanatory memorandum accompanying their request for the inclusion of this item on the Assembly agenda, the 15 sponsoring nations declare that "the French Government has taken no effective measures to implement the clear recommendations" of the Assembly's resolution of 17 December 1952. This expressed confidence that the Government of France would "endeavor to further the effective development of free institutions of the Tunisian people;" hoped that the parties would continue negotiations on an urgent basis with a view to bringing about self-government for Tunisians; and appealed to the parties concerned to conduct their relations and settle their disputes in accordance with the spirit of the Charter and to refrain from any acts or measures likely to aggravate the present tension.

The 15-nation memorandum (Doc. A/2405 Add.1) asserts that the French Government "...has created and continues to maintain a permanent state of unsettlement which if allowed to continue may dangerously threaten international peace and security." The document concludes: "In view of these circumstances, the Tunisian question is again brought to the attention of the General Assembly so that the Assembly may consider steps necessary to prevent a further deterioration of the situation and make recommendations for its peaceful settlement."]

57. The question of Morocco: item proposed by Afghanistan, Burma, Egypt, India, Indonesia, Iran, Iraq, Lebanon, Liberia, Pakistan, the Philippines, Saudi Arabia, Syria, Thailand and Yemen.

[NOTE: The explanatory memorandum submitted jointly by the 15 nations sponsoring this item (Doc. A/2406/Add.1) declares that in spite of the Assembly's recommendation, contained in a resolution adopted on 19 December 1952 and similar in terms to the one dealing with Tunisia (see note to item No. 56 above), "France has not taken any steps to further the fundamental liberties and to develop the free political institutions of the people of Morocco. In fact, the policies pursued by France since the adoption of the Assembly resolution have only helped to aggravate the serious situation that existed in Morocco." The United Nations, the memorandum states, cannot afford to ignore the situation "without risking serious consequences." The signatories express the hope that the Assembly will again consider the question of Morocco "with a view to recommending to the French Government necessary steps to be taken to remedy the situation and to bring about peace in that part of the world."]

58. Publications of documents concerning the drafting and application of the Charter: item proposed by Argentina.

[NOTE: The explanatory memorandum submitted by Argentina on this item (Doc. A/2415) points out that some provisions of the Charter have sometimes given rise to varying interpretations and this has made it necessary to refer to the preparatory work. But this is difficult, the memorandum continues, because part of the official documents of the San Francisco Conference are not, in practice, available for consultation; the voluminous documentation needs a complete index and even when all the San Francisco documents on a certain subject are available, it is a very lengthy task to trace the history of the drafting of a given passage.

The Argentine Government proposes that the Secretary-General be given the means to prepare and publish (a) a systematic compilation of the San Francisco documents not yet published; (b) a complete index of all the San Francisco documents; (c) a systematic and comprehensive study of the legislative history of the Charter; and (d) a repertory of the practice followed by the main organs of the UN on given subjects.]

EIGHTH GENERAL ASSEMBLY
ANNOTATED AGENDA

SUPPLEMENTARY LIST

Press Release GA/1010
4 September 1953

1. Election of a member of the International Court of Justice to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Judge Sergei Aleksandrovich Golunsky.

[NOTE: One of the 15 members of the International Court of Justice, Judge Sergei Aleksandrovich Golunsky of the USSR, has submitted his resignation owing to ill health. Judge Golunsky had been elected on 6 December 1951 for a term to expire on 5 February 1961. An election to fill the vacancy for the remainder of his term of office is to take place, by decision of the Security Council taken on 12 August 1953, during the eighth regular session of the Assembly. To be elected, candidates have to obtain an absolute majority in both the Security Council and General Assembly meeting separately. The Secretary-General has invited nominations from the competent national groups in the Permanent Court of Arbitration, to be submitted by 10 October 1953 (Doc. A/2439). A memorandum containing a list of all persons nominated will be issued later by the Secretary-General.]

2. Question of assistance to Libya: item proposed by the Economic and Social Council: ECOSOC resolution 493 (XVI) of 3 August 1953.

[NOTE: By this resolution (Doc. E/Resolution (XVI)/21), the Economic and Social Council recommends the General Assembly to invite all governments which are in a position to do so to provide financial and technical assistance to Libya to assist its economic development; that if and when further means become available for assisting in the financing of development of underdeveloped areas, to recommend due consideration be given by the UN and specialized agencies to specific development needs of Libya; and to request the Secretary-General and the specialized agencies concerned to continue to waive local costs and to give favorable consideration to requests of Libya for technical assistance.]

3. Technical Assistance in Public Administration: item proposed by the Economic and Social Council: ECOSOC resolution 492 B (XVI) of 4 August 1953.

[NOTE: The Council's resolution (Doc. E/RESOLUTION (XVI)/28) recommends the General Assembly to approve a revised United Nations program in public administration comprising: (a) provision, at the request of governments, of technical assistance related to public administration including training for public service through advisory services of experts, fellowships and scholarships, training institutes, seminars, etc., provision of technical publications and the collection, analysis and exchange of technical information in the field of public administration.

The resolution would also authorize the Secretary-General to include in the UN budget the funds for carrying out an effective program based on the provision of these services and, in addition, to finance such activities from the expanded program of technical assistance where they are related to the economic development of under-developed countries.]

4. Technical assistance in promoting and safeguarding the rights of women: item proposed by the Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC resolution 504 J II (XVI) of 23 July 1953)

[NOTE: This ECOSOC resolution is one of a number adopted by the Council at its last session in connection with the report of the Commission on the Status of Women. The resolution would authorize the Secretary-General, subject to approval by the General Assembly, to render at the request of Member states "services which do not fall within the scope of existing technical assistance programs, in order to assist these states in promoting and safeguarding the rights of women."]

5. Technical assistance in the fields of prevention of discrimination and protection of minorities: item proposed by the Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC resolution 502 G (XVI) of 3 August 1953).

[NOTE: This resolution, one of a number adopted by ECOSOC in connection with the report of the Commission on Human Rights (Doc. E/RESOLUTION (XVI)/24) recommend the Assembly to authorize the Secretary-General to render, at the request of Member states, expert technical advice and other services in order to assist those states "in the eradication of prejudice or discrimination or in the protection of minorities." The resolution also recommends that such services should include, but need not be reduced to, technical expert advice in the drafting of legislation and the establishment of administrative and judicial machinery.]

6. Invitation to non-member States to become Parties to the Convention on the Political Rights of Women: item proposed by the Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC resolution 504 E (XVI) of 23 July 1953)

[NOTE: The Convention on the Political Rights of Women was approved by the General Assembly on 20 December 1952. Under the resolution submitted by ECOSOC for Assembly approval, (Doc. E/RESOLUTION (XVI)/16) the Assembly would invite signature and ratification or accession by non-member states which are or become members of one or more of the specialized agencies of the United Nations or become parties to the Statute of the International Court of Justice. The resolution would also request states which are parties to the Convention to report every two years on the measures taken by them to implement the provisions of the Convention on the Political Rights of Women.]

(More)

7. Development of political rights of women in territories where these rights are not fully enjoyed: item proposed by the Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC resolution 504 F (XVI) of 23 July 1953)

[NOTE: This ECOSOC resolution (Doc. E/RESOLUTION (XVI)/16) was another of those adopted during the 16th session of the Council on the basis of the report of the Commission on the Status of Women. It invites the General Assembly and the Trusteeship Council, in collaboration with the governments of all states which administer territories where women do not enjoy full political rights, to take all necessary measures leading to the development of political rights of women in such territories, in particular by means of education. It also invites the Secretary-General to report to the Commission on the Status of Women on steps taken to implement this resolution.]

8. Program of concerted practical action in the social field of the United Nations and the specialized agencies: item proposed by the Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC resolution 496 (XVI) of 31 July 1953)

[NOTE: In the preamble to this ECOSOC resolution (Doc. E/RESOLUTION (XVI)/18) the Council calls the Assembly's attention to the fact that progress has been made in dealing with the age-old problems of ignorance, poverty and disease, but that in spite of all efforts, the need is so great that resources available are still inadequate.

The resolution expresses agreement with the views of the UN Secretary-General and the Directors-General of the specialized agencies that in the program of activities in the social field now being undertaken there is need for "reorientation, further concentration of effort, wider geographical coverage, improvement of methods and techniques, additional resources and for achieving full governmental and popular co-operation."

Special attention to the exploration for broader sources for international financing of social and economic development is urged, as well as special attention to the needs of under-developed areas.

The resolution then sets out general principles to be applied in matters of assistance to governments and lists eight kinds of projects on which a concerted program of practical action in the social field should concentrate. As an immediate objective, the resolution considers that particular attention should be given to the following methods for assisting governments: (a) promotion and implementation of community development projects; (b) rapid development of training programs for professional and technical personnel and auxiliary and community workers; (c) develment and strengthening of national and local organizations for administering social programs.]

9. Appeal to States to accelerate their notifications or adherences to the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, and measures designed to ensure the widest possible diffusion of the nature, contents and purposes of the Convention: item proposed by the Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC resolution 502 E (XVI) of 3 August 1953

/NOTE: The Convention on Genocide was unanimously adopted by the General Assembly on 9 December 1948. It came into force 90 days after 20 countries hah ratified or acceded to it; this was on 12 January 1951.

The ECOSOC resolution which comes before the Assembly (Doc. E/RESOLUTION (XVI)/24) requests the Assembly to reiterate its appeal to states to accelerate their ratifications or adherence to the Convention, and to undertake all measures to give the widest possible diffusion of the nature, contents and purposes of the Convention. The Assembly is asked, in particular, to make known the list of states having voted for, signed, ratified or adhered to the Convention./

10. Narcotic Drugs

(a) Assumption by organs of the United Nations of functions and responsibilities assigned to them under the terms of the Protocol for limiting and regulating the cultivation of the poppy plant, the production of, international and wholesale trade in, and use of opium, 1953, and of the financial burdens resulting therefrom: item proposed by the Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC resolution 505 I (XVI) of 28 July 1953

/NOTE: The United Nations Opium Conference, which met at United Nations Headquarters 11 May to 18 June 1953, adopted a protocol for limiting and regulating the cultivation of the poppy plant, the production of, international and wholesale trade in, and use of opium. The Protocol which was opened for signature on 23 June 1953, specified that estimates of opium production and requirements and opium statistics should be submitted to the Permanent Central Opium Board, and that the Board and the Drug Supervisory Body should exercise a control over opium throughout the world similar to that which they exercise over manufactured drugs in accordance with the Conventions of 1925 and 1931.

The ECOSOC, by its resolution (Doc. E/RESOLUTION (XVI)/17), recommends the Assembly to approve the assumption of functions and responsibilities assigned to UN organs by the Protocol and to include it among the multilateral treaties relating to the control of narcotic drugs for the purpose of assessing non-Member states, parties to such treaties, for their share of the expenses borne by the UN in the international control of narcotics./

(b) Question of the remuneration of members of the Permanent Central Opium Board and the Drug Supervisory Body: item proposed by the Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC resolution 505 F III (XVI) of 28 July 1953)

[NOTE: The Central Opium Board consisting of eight experts and originally created under the 1925 Convention, and the Drug Supervisory Body, consisting of four experts and originally created under the 1931 Convention, now operate as subsidiary bodies of the Economic and Social Council.

At its last session the Council adopted a resolution in which it recognized both the importance and increasing amount of the work of these two bodies and in which it agreed that the time had come when the whole question of the remuneration of the members of these bodies should be reviewed. The Council recommends the Assembly to give the question favorable consideration "with a view to appropriate budgetary provisions being made."]

11. Evidence of existence of forced labor: item proposed by the United States of America.

[Note: Under the joint auspices of the United Nations and the International Labor Organization an Ad Hoc Committee on Forced Labor was established consisting of Sir Ramaswami Mudaliar (India), Paal Berg (Norway) and Enrique Garcia Sayan (Peru). The Committee began its work in 1951 and submitted its final report (Doc. E/2431, summarized in Press Release ILO/712) on 22 June 1953.

The Committee's report was to have been discussed at the 16th session of the Economic and Social Council, but this item was among a number which the Council decided to defer.

Requesting inclusion of the item "Evidence of Existence of Forced Labor" in the agenda of the General Assembly, the United States, in a memorandum (Doc. A/2438), refers to the report of the Ad Hoc Committee and quotes its concluding paragraph that its inquiry "has revealed the existence of facts relating to systems of forced labor of so grave a nature that they seriously threaten fundamental human rights and jeopardize the freedom and status of workers in contravention of the obligations and provisions of the Charter of the United Nations."

The United States memorandum also refers to the Committee's findings that forced labor for political purposes exists in four countries, and that in other countries, existing laws and regulations can be applied so as to create conditions of forced labor; also that forced labor for economic purposes exists in seven countries and that in a number of other countries such conditions might exist.

The United States, continues the memorandum "believes that consideration of these grave conditions of forced labor cannot be further postponed by the United Nations." It also urges that the Assembly, at its eighth regular session, record "the seriousness with which it regards the situation and its determination that forced labor should be abolished...."]

12. Preparatory work with regard to the possible holding of a General Conference of the Members of the United Nations in accordance with Article 109 of the Charter: item proposed by the Netherlands.

[Note: Article 109 provides that a General Conference of the Members of the UN to review the present Charter may be held at a date and place to be fixed by a two-thirds vote of the General Assembly and by a vote of any seven members of the Security Council. If such a conference has not been held before the tenth annual session of the General Assembly, the proposal to call such a conference shall be placed on the agenda of the tenth session.

In proposing this item on the preparatory work for a possible general conference, the Netherlands Government in an explanatory memorandum (Doc. A/2442) says it had Article 109 in mind and considers that "examination by the tenth annual session of the question of a General Conference could be facilitated by preparatory work to be undertaken by the Secretary-General and by individual Member States." It suggests that the preparatory work could include (a) the preparation by the Secretary-General of the study proposed by the Argentine Government (see item no. 58 of the Provisional Agenda on page of this release) and (b) an invitation to Member States to submit prior to the tenth annual session their preliminary views on possible revision of the Charter and tentative proposals and suggestions.]

13. Measures for the peaceful solution of the problem of prisoners of war: item proposed by the Secretary-General.

[Note: The memorandum of the Secretary-General on this item has not yet been issued.

An Ad Hoc Commission on Prisoners of War was set up by the Assembly at its fifth regular session. Members of this Commission are: Countess Bernadotte, Jose Gustavo Guerrero and Judge Aung Khine. The Commission opened its fourth session in Geneva on 24 August.]

Ecuador, Egypt, Guatemala, Philippines and Uruguay: draft resolution

The General Assembly,

Recalling its resolutions 421 F (V) and 547 (VI),

Considering that the individual is the party primarily interested in the respect of human rights and the first to be affected by failure to respect the said rights,

Considering that the most elementary rule of justice requires that the victim be given the right to appeal either directly or through an intermediary against any injury,

Requests the Commission on Human Rights to include, in the draft International Covenants on Human Rights, provisions recognizing the right of petition of every natural person, every duly constituted group of individuals and every non-governmental organization.

FOUR BIG ISSUES FACING THE U. N.

By THOMAS J. HAMILTON
Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES

UNITED NATIONS, N. Y., Sept. 12—Although overshadowed by the proposed Far Eastern political conference, the 1953 session of the General Assembly will confront the Eisenhower Administration with a major test of its capacity to regain the leadership of the non-Communist members of the United Nations.

The Assembly, which will convene Tuesday, and the conference, which is supposed to start a month later, will both have to deal with two of the outstanding problems: Korea and Chinese representation in the United Nations.

In addition, the Assembly will be confronted with two others: an Asian-African attack on the colonial powers, and the complex issues created by Congressional attacks on the loyalty of some United States employes of the organization.

A few days ago the United States was not able to prevent the supporters of Indian participation in the Far Eastern conference from getting a simple majority, and only by strenuous diplomatic activity did it muster enough Latin-American votes to block the two-thirds majority required for an Assembly invitation.

A New Development

This was a troublesome development, for never in the history of the United Nations has the United States been on the losing side in a two-thirds vote, and only once before has it been in any kind of minority on a major political issue.

A repetition of this setback can probably be avoided at the coming session. But it will still be necessary to re-establish a common front with our principal allies—the nations of Western Europe and the British Commonwealth. And it would certainly be useful if we could also improve relations with the Asian and African countries who, with two exceptions, favored inviting India to the conference despite all the arguments we could muster.

In an attempt to conciliate India and her supporters, the United States has agreed to vote for Mme. Vijaya Lakshmi Pandit, sister of Prime Minister Jawaharlal Nehru of India, for president of the Assembly.

But the effect of this gesture may be small in view of the simultaneous decision to support Turkey for a seat on the Security Council, which, in the opinion of most of the Asian and African countries, belongs to a member of the Soviet bloc.

In any event, the disposition of jobs is much less important than the decision on the four principal political issues. These issues, and the expected line-ups on them, are as follows:

I—KOREA

Since the General Assembly has already designated the participants at the conference from the United Nations side, it will not have to take up the Korean question again until after the conference unless Communist China and North Korea try to bring about the participation of Indian and other Asian or African "neutrals." Nobody here knows how hard the Communists would insist on such a demand, but it is generally anticipated that the Soviet Union will try to force another debate in the Assembly on the composition of the conference.

The United States position is

Korea, China, Colonial Questions, Loyalty Come to the Fore

"Endless unfinished business."

that the Assembly has made its choice and that it is up to the Communists to make theirs. Accordingly, the United States will oppose reopening the debate in the Assembly and will make it clear that it is now up to the Communists to decide whether they want a conference or not.

The Western European and British Commonwealth powers are expected to side with the United States in opposing another Assembly debate on Korea. But most of them, including Britain, are not ready to say what they would do if the Communists served a flat notice that there would simply be no conference unless India—and perhaps others—were present.

II—COMMUNIST CHINA

The question of seating representatives of Communist China in the U. N. Assembly is certain to come up this session, for Andrei Y. Vishinsky, the Soviet delegate, already has said so. There is no veto in the Assembly and some authorities believe that only a simple majority would be required.

The opposition of the United States has been stated again and again, and, as far as anybody here knows, will continue regardless of the results of the conference. In fact, the United States is trying to get enough support for a resolution shelving the issue for the duration of the 1953 session.

Most of the Western European and British Commonwealth countries will side with the United States in opposing the admission of Peiping representatives for the time being.

But a majority of the two groups are not willing to commit themselves beyond that. If the armistice goes off smoothly, and Communist China does not turn against Indo-China or some other neighbor, there will be a strong movement after the conference in favor of seating its representatives.

The Soviet position is that the Communist Government should have had China's seat years ago, and that whatever arguments there were against this have been nullified by the Korean armistice. This stand will have the support of India and an undisclosed number of Asian and African countries.

The chances are that the Soviet move will be defeated at the start of the Assembly, but the outlook afterward, if the Peiping Government behaves itself, is uncertain.

III—COLONIAL ISSUES

The principal colonial issues will be the Arab countries' renewed attack on the French administration of Morocco and Tunisia. It will concentrate on Morocco as a result of the recent deposition of the Sultan, who had emerged as a supporter of Moroccan nationalism.

But India will also renew her attack, first made in 1946, on South Africa's racial policies, including discrimination against Indian residents of the Union. In fact, one remark going the rounds is that, aside from the Korea-China question, the only two issues before the Assembly will be North Africa and South Africa.

In the past the United States has tried to act as an honest broker in these colonial issues, using its influence to support gradual concessions to nationalism. However, the United States recently joined France and other colonial powers in keeping the Moroccan question off the agenda of the Security Council, and it may side this time with the colonial powers.

The other Western European and British Commonwealth countries are expected to side with France and South Africa. The Soviet Union will, of course, side with the Asians and Africans in accordance with the Kremlin's opposition to any kind of imperialism except its own.

IV—U. N. PERSONNEL

The U. N.'s loyalty problem will emerge as a result of a recent decision by the United Nations Administrative Tribunal upsetting the dismissal of eleven United States employes by Trygve Lie, the former Secretary General.

Of the eleven, seven said they did not want to come back, and the tribunal awarded them compensation. Dag Hammarskjold, Mr. Lie's successor, refused to take back the other four, so they also would be entitled to payment.

The money will have to be voted by the Assembly; and it is anticipated that the United States will oppose paying, or at least will try to cut down the amount. This belief results from the fact that such powerful Republican Senators as Alexander Wiley and Joseph R. McCarthy, have demanded that no compensation be paid.

Most of the Western European and British Commonwealth countries are strongly opposed to what they call "McCarthyism" in the United Nations, and think that compensation must be paid.

PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 83d CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

American Legion Report on UNESCO

OF

HON. A. S. J. CARNAHAN

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, June 2, 1954

Mr. CARNAHAN. Mr. Speaker, under permission to extend my remarks in the RECORD, I enclose a report on UNESCO. This report was prepared for the May 2, 3, and 4 meetings in Indianapolis, Ind., of the national executive committee of the American Legion by the American Legion special committee on covenant of human rights and United Nations. This distinguished committee is headed by a former national commander of the American Legion, Mr. Ray Murphy.

Included in this extension of remarks is section 2 of the report, which deals with UNESCO. A careful study of this factual report will clarify the purposes, aims, and the work of UNESCO:

LEGION CONDUCTED STUDY

The special committee on covenant of human rights and United Nations last reported to the national executive committee at the April-May 1953 meeting. Since that time, the committee has held 2 meetings—1 at New York City on December 21, 1953, the other at New York City on April 27, 1954.

SEC. 2. UNESCO: On August 25, 1953, a subcommittee of this committee, consisting of Robert R. Sugarman, William G. McKinley, and the chairman, met with representatives of the State Department and of the United States National Commission for UNESCO, at the offices of the United States Mission to the United Nations, 2 Park Avenue, New York City. A very thorough discussion ensued pertaining to the origin, purposes, and work of UNESCO. Since that meeting, members of the committee have given a very great deal of study to the subject of UNESCO, and have read and studied almost innumerable documents and publications relating thereto, including controversial subject matter emanating from various groups and localities within the United States.

NEEDS TO BE BETTER UNDERSTOOD

As a result of such study, it is fair to say that UNESCO is little understood by the very great majority of the people of this country. Accordingly, your committee believes it advisable to devote some space in this report to a discussion of UNESCO, what it is, how it is organized, what it costs, what is its membership, and what is the United States representation therein, and what are its purposes, programs, and methods, etc., etc.

UNESCO is 1 of 10 specialized agencies affiliated with, but not directly controlled by, the United Nations. It originated at a conference held in London in 1942, which was attended by the ministers of education of nine allied countries. Its present authority is found in article 55 of the United Nations Charter, which states that the members of the organization shall promote "international cultural and educational cooperation." The quoted phrase was recommended by American consultants who were representatives of business, agriculture, civic, labor, religious, and educational groups. On May 22, 1945, prior to the adoption of the United Nations Charter, the United States Congress unanimously adopted resolutions favoring the creation of a permanent international agency to promote educational and cultural relations. Members of the United States Senate attended a conference in November 1945, as members of a United States delegation. At this conference the Constitution of UNESCO was drawn. Authority for United States membership and participation in UNESCO, and for the establishment of a United States National Commission was approved by joint congressional resolution on July 30, 1946, by a vote of 264 to 41 in the House, and without dissent in the Senate (Public Law 565, 79th Cong., 2d sess.).

UNITED STATES CITIZENS EMPLOYED

UNESCO consists of a General Conference, an Executive Board, and a Secretariat. The General Conference meets at least once each year. Its functions are to determine the policies and main lines of work of the organization, and to make decisions on programs drawn up by the Executive Board.

The Executive Board consists of 18 members, and the United States has been represented continuously thereon.

The Secretariat is a permanent staff appointed by the Director-General, as chief administrative officer, who in turn is appointed by the General Conference on nomination of the Executive Board. Headquarters are in Paris. Some 67 United States nationals work at UNESCO headquarters, and about 35 with UNESCO missions throughout the world, including about half a dozen in New York.

THEY HAVE SECURITY CLEARANCE

The United States Government has a security clearance with UNESCO's Director-General, regarding the employment of Americans by the international agency. This action parallels the agreement worked out by the United States and the United Nations in this regard.

The current budget of UNESCO is about $8½ million, of which the United States pays about one-third, or $2.8 million. Any United States contribution is authorized and appropriated by the United States Congress, year by year, and is included in the appropriations for the Department of State. In addition, approximately $3 million is allocated for UNESCO use from the United Nations Technical Assistance Program. This is used for technical assistance principally in the field of education.

UNDER COMMUNIST ATTACK

UNESCO has some 67 member states at this time. The Soviet Union joined UNESCO only within the past 2 weeks or so. Three Communist satellite states, Poland, Hungary, and Czechoslovakia, have resigned from UNESCO—each in substance stating in its letter of resignation to the Director-General that UNESCO "has joined the camp that preaches hatred and war among peoples." Had placed itself at the service of the "American warmongers" and "had raised no protest against the shameful Anglo-American aggression in Korea." They charged UNESCO with being a "tool of the United States policy of aggression" and with having "become a refuge for all that is the negation of culture and science, a refuge of fascist barbarism." They deplored what they termed "the flood of worthless American films, broadcasts, publications, and other materials with gangsterism, worship of force, and glorification of war" imposed, as Poland said, on the culture of the people of the world. It will be noted that membership in the United Nations carries with it the right to membership in UNESCO, and that it is by virtue of such right that Russia has now joined UNESCO, where it appears she has already begun her usual obstructive tactics.

The United States National Commission for UNESCO consists of a group of 100 United States citizens, including 60 representatives of nongovernmental organizations, 10 Federal Government representatives, 15 representing State and local governments, and 15 members at large. This Commission meets twice annually. Its purposes are to advise the Government of the United States in matters relating to UNESCO, to act in consultative capacity with regard to the appointment of United States delegates to the General Conference of UNESCO, to advise with the delegations of the United States to the General Conference of UNESCO, to serve as an agency of liaison with organizations, institutions, and individuals in the United States interested in matters relating to UNESCO, and to promote an understanding of the general objectives of UNESCO with the people of the United States. The chief purposes of UNESCO are as follows:

CONTRIBUTES TO BETTER UNDERSTANDING

1. To eliminate illiteracy and encourage fundamental education;

2. To obtain for each person an education conforming to his aptitudes and to the needs of society, including technological training and higher education;

3. To promote through education respect for human rights throughout all nations;

4. To overcome the obstacles to the free flow of persons, ideas, and knowledge between the countries of the world;

5. To promote the progress and utilization of science for mankind;

6. To study the causes of tensions that may lead to war and to fight them through education;

7. To demonstrate world cultural interdependence;

8. To advance through the press, radio, and motion pictures the cause of truth, freedom, and peace;

9. To bring about better understanding among the peoples of the world and to convince them of the necessity of cooperating loyally with one another in the framework of the United Nations;

10. To render clearinghouse and exchange services in all its fields of action, together with services in reconstruction and relief assistance.

WE BENEFIT FROM UNESCO

The program centers around efforts to raise levels of education; the improvement of health, nutrition, and literacy; assisting in scientific research to improve living conditions; the exchange of students and teachers among nations; and, together with other international agencies, to aid in the development of healthy productive communities and citizens with a sense of self-direction and responsibility.

In carrying out its program UNESCO has evolved a number of methods, including meetings of experts, missions, seminars, pilot projects, the calling of international conferences and the submission of recommendations or international conventions to member States.

UNESCO canont operate in the United States without the aproval of our own National Commission. Its programs of educational and technical asistance, which are designed and fitting for less developed areas, are not conducted in this country. UNESCO supporters, however, believe that we benefit directly from UNESCO operations in three ways:

HELPS PRESERVE THE PEACE

1. In teaching the inhabitants of the underdeveloped areas modern techniques in science, education, and technology, it helps draw these regions closer to American ideas, standards and trade.

2. It benefits American science, education, and culture by facilitating the exchange of ideas and methods between American and foreign scientists and educators.

3. Any organization which helps to preserve the peace is to the interest of the United States which has the most to lose through war. In addition, however, in encouraging the idea of collective responsibility it increases the chances that we will not have to fight alone if we are again forced to fight against Communist aggression.

ATTACKS NOT JUSTIFIED

As is well known to the National Executive Committee, UNESCO has become involved in local controversies in some areas. There can be no doubt that some overzealous supporters of UNESCO have gone overboard in ascribing benefits to and from UNESCO which cannot be realized in fact. Such may have been the case in Los Angeles where a booklet called the E in UNESCO was attributed to UNESCO itself, when in fact the booklet was a production of the Los Angeles school system itself, and the controversy was local, involving the question of what should and should not be taught in Los Angeles schools pertaining to UNESCO and its programs and work. Similar situations have existed elsewhere. The public misunderstanding of UNESCO may be attributed in large part of the fact that few people, indeed, know what UNESCO is all about. This is not the fault of UNESCO itself, which is not of itself a propaganda organization. While Communist countries have criticized UNESCO as the tool of the United States, on the other hand, individuals and groups in the United States have attacked UNESCO on the basis that it has reflected ideals and philosophies alien to the American tradition. Among the attacks on UNESCO is one to the effect that UNESCO advocates world government. As a matter of fact, the constitution of UNESCO expressly forbids it "from intervening in matters that are essentially within the domestic jurisdiction" of the member states, and the United States National Commission for UNESCO states in substance that such charges have no basis in fact. President Eisenhower's committee to examine into UNESCO concluded, after an examination of a series of publications, Toward World Understanding, that "a careful study of them fails to reveal that this terminology connotes world government in any political sense." UNESCO has been attacked as atheistic, although none of its member nations except Yugoslavia is officially atheistic, and membership on our own national commission includes representatives of the National Council of Churches, the National Catholic Welfare Council, and the Synagogue Council of America. The Vatican has a permanent representative at UNESCO. The Catholic Church, which is hardly atheistic or communistic, has actively fought what it considers unwarranted attacks on UNESCO as atheistic.

OPPOSED BY GERALD L. K. SMITH

A principal charge against UNESCO is that it is subversive; that it is influenced or controlled by Communists, with the intention of undermining through its influence on American education, respect for the capitalistic system and private ownership of property in the minds of American schoolchildren; that it seeks to pervert the American teaching profession, and to destroy the worth and integrity of our public schools.

It may and should be said that the origin of at least a great deal of these charges is the American Flag Committee, and that due to such charges and to certain material issued by that group, and allegedly substantiating them, a small number of patriotic organizations, as well as the National Committee for the Abolition of the United Nations, headed by Gerald L. K. Smith, have taken stands in support of such charges. If true, the charges would certainly warrant the actions and positions taken by such groups.

This reporting committee holds no brief for UNESCO, but it is charged with the duty of reporting facts as it finds them. It reports certain facts in relation to charges of subversion by UNESCO of our public school system and of the minds of our schoolchildren as follows:

CONGRESSMAN CARNAHAN CORRECT

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of April 1, 1952, contains a statement by Congressman A. S. J. CARNAHAN, of Missouri, denouncing one of the supporting charges of the American Flag Committee, on which the positions taken by various other groups heretofore referred to have been based, as a complete fabrication, not to be found in any report, publication, or statement of UNESCO. The Congressman's statement of record further points out that the American Flag Committee has given as a literal quotation from a UNESCO publication consisting in fact of sentences lifted from context, whereby certain sentences from a certain page (58) are followed by phrases from another page (60), then joined to words from another page (58), then followed by more material from another page (59) then by other material from another page (60)—all put together as though it were one direct quote. It is this material on which the national executive committee apparently based its Resolution 33, at its meeting of April 29–May 1, 1953.

This reporting committee has given most careful study to this particular matter, and it finds that the charges of Congressman CARNAHAN in this respect are correct, this after thorough study of the publications of UNESCO involved. It should be pointed out that UNESCO issues many publications which are available for purchase, but which do not necessarily represent any policy view or program of UNESCO itself, and may be contrary or irrelevant thereto, as, for example, reports of educational seminars in which individual educators participate and express their own views, perhaps different from or even conflicting with views expressed by other educators at the same or like seminars or elsewhere. This reporting committee will continue observation and study of UNESCO as it has done with the Covenants of Human Rights.

INCREASES OUR KNOWLEDGE

It is the view of those who favor UNESCO that—

1. Any organization which by encouraging ideas of cooperation and understanding among the nations of the world, thus helping preserve the peace of the world, is to the interest of the United States.

2. Any organization that contributes to raising living standards throughout the world also contributes to the growth of the democratic way of life, and that in making known to the inhabitants of the underdeveloped areas the modern techniques of science, education, and technology contributes to the growth of democracy throughout the world.

3. UNESCO, in facilitating the exchange of ideas and methods between the United States and foreign scientists and educators, works directly toward increasing the knowledge and competency of our own scientists and educators.

LEGION SHOULD BE ACTIVE

Officials of the United States National Commission have indicated their desire that the American Legion be represented on the United States National Commission for UNESCO, as one of the 60 nongovernmental organizations comprising a part of the United States National Commission. This reporting committee believes that the National Organization should give serious consideration to the informal invitation extended to the American Legion to have representation on the United States National Commission. Other national organizations, such as the United States Chamber of Commerce, have taken an increasing interest in UNESCO for the purpose of knowing what it is and does, and this without any limitation on such organizations to criticize or disagree with any policy or program of UNESCO. Membership of the National Organization of the American Legion on the United States National Commission for UNESCO would in no way limit the right of the American Legion to express its views either for or against UNESCO, but would permit of a much closer observation of the work of UNESCO than is now possible. Such participation should not involve any substantial expense to the national organization.

As in the case of the Covenants of Human Rights, our first report on UNESCO is somewhat lengthy, and yet it is by no means fully exhaustive of the subject matter involved. It would be quite impossible in this report to cover all the study made by this committee and the material which it has examined.

Respectfully submitted.

INTRODUCTION

This compilation of registration and voting statistics is being published by the Information Center of the U.S. Commission on Civil Rights pursuant to the Commission's statutory function as a national clearinghouse for civil rights information. The figures reproduced here are those currently available in Commission files from official and unofficial sources. Since most states do not keep registration figures by race, more extensive information is not presently available.

In using or comparing these registration figures, the following should be observed:

The date of the registration figures must be taken into consideration. Such figures may change markedly between spring primary elections and the fall general election.

Current county population figures by race are not available. Accordingly, the county registration percentages given here are based on 1960 Census population figures. In general, the use of the 1960 population base leads to an overstatement of the registration percentage. In most cases the overstatement is relatively small. Census Bureau estimates of total statewide populations are available for November 1, 1964, and a comparative figure using this estimate is shown for each state.

Registration figures themselves vary widely in their accuracy. Even where official figures are available, registrars frequently fail to remove the names of dead or emigrated voters and thus, ~~report~~ figures which exceed the actual registration. Unofficial figures which come from a variety of sources are subject to even greater inaccuracies.

1. 1960 Census

2. Official figures. Texas does not have permanent registration. The figures given were furnished by the Texas Secretary of State. They represent poll tax receipts, exemption certificates and tax-free Federal Election receipts, and show registration as of November 3, 1964.

3. If the estimated total population as of November 1, 1964, (published by U. S. Bureau of Census in news release dated September 8, 1964) were used as a base, this percentage would be 49.6.

ABSTRACT OF PROCEEDINGS OF CONFERENCE
November 22, 23, 1943
WITH NEGRO LEADERS ON WARTIME PROBLEMS IN VENEREAL DISEASE CONTROL

The Conference with Negro Leaders on Wartime Problems in Venereal Disease Control grew out of both governmental and voluntary discussions of next steps leading toward reducing the number of syphilis, gonorrhea and other venereal disease cases and preventing new infections so far as possible.

It was recognized that these diseases attack people without distinction as to race, creed, color or national origin, and must in turn be fought in the open by all the people. It was also recognized that limitations of economic, social, medical and educational opportunities and facilities conspired to give these diseases special opportunities for spread among certain population groups, including Negro groups. It was known, too, that the Negro citizens are eager to do their utmost to eradicate these diseases from the nation, as an aid in War and for community life when peace is restored.

With these views in mind, it was proposed that the American Social Hygiene Association arrange a Conference for consideration of what might be done by united action at federal, state and local levels, to reduce the venereal diseases as a serious handicap to Negro health and efficiency. Accordingly, this Conference was held in New York City, under the auspices of the Association in its national office, November 22 and 23, 1943. A list of those attending is attached. A Continuation Committee was appointed to follow-up the Conference recommendations. The Conference membership is being proposed as a temporary section of the General Advisory Committee of the American Social Hygiene Association.

The meeting was called to order by the Chairman, in general session at ten o'clock Monday, November 22, 1943. The following points were suggested for consideration as a general basis for the deliberation of the members:

I. The prevalence and incidence of venereal disease among Negroes and specific problems involved in the control program.

II. The part, in the solution of this problem, that Negroes themselves can undertake through their voluntary organizations on a national, state and local level.

III. The assistance that these voluntary groups will need from public and private agencies on the national, state and local level.

As an introduction to the section meetings which had been agreed upon, the Chairman called upon the following members of the Conference for general statements on current venereal disease problems and the status of these diseases in relation to the armed forces, industrial workers, and the civilian population generally. These speakers pointed out how the facts, procedures, and programs to which they alluded affected Negroes, and what the latter could do to advance the campaign for eradication of these diseases.

I. Opening statement - by Dr. Walter Clarke, Executive Director, American Social Hygiene Association.

II. A general statement concerning the prevalence of venereal diseases among Negroes - by Dr. James Heller, Assistant Surgeon General, Division of Venereal Disease Control, United States Public Health Service.

III. Some specific problems resulting from the high rejection rate of Negroes because of venereal diseases - by Colonel Campbell C. Johnson, Executive Assistant, Selective Service System.

IV. Current venereal disease infection rate among men in the Army - by Lt. Col. Thomas Turner, Chief, Venereal Disease Control Branch, Office of the Surgeon General, United States Army.

V. Current venereal disease rates among men in the Navy - by Commander W. Schwartz, Office of the Surgeon General, United States Navy.

VI. Law enforcement problems in Negro communities - by Eliot Ness, Director and Raymond F. Clapp, Associate Director, Social Protection Division, Federal Security Agency.

The Conference then divided into three sections:

A. Committee on Medical Facts

As a basis for Committee discussion, the following points were mentioned:

1. A statement of facts on the prevalence and incidence of venereal diseases among Negroes, suitable for release to Negro newspapers and organizations.

2. The medical aspects of the venereal disease control program, taking into consideration all phases of this problem specially relating to the Negro population - such as the quality, quantity, availability and use of medical facilities and personnel.

3. Financial resources available through federal, state and local agencies for the improvement of such medical facilities and services.

B. Committee on Social Facts

The following points were suggested as a basis for Committee discussion:

1. A statement of progress in dealing with community conditions favoring the spread of the venereal diseases.

2. Social Protection policies and procedures of value, especially relating to the Negro population.

3. Financial and administrative aids through federal, state and local agencies for improving related social welfare facilities.

C. Committee on Action

As a basis for Committee discussion, the following points were offered:

1. How Negro voluntary organizations can promote the venereal disease control program.

2. What can official and voluntary agencies do to help these groups on the federal, state and local levels.

The Sections met during the afternoon of November 22 and the morning of November 23. At two o'clock on November 23, the membership again met in general session to discuss and act upon the reports of the Sections.

The report of the Committee on Medical Facts was presented by the Chairman, Dr. T. K. Lawless, with the following introductory remarks:

The venereal diseases are as old as the Middle Ages. The most largely accepted history of the prevalence of syphilis is that it had appeared in Europe in epidemic form in the fifteenth century and was spread to other lands through military campaigns, explorations and trade routes. There are other theories, but all emphasize the distant origin of the disease.

From this period through succeeding centuries and years, syphilis has infected, disabled and killed many millions of people of all continents, nations, peoples and races. Gonorrhea, though less dramatic in its origin and history, also is a very prevalent, serious, disabling venereal disease. There are other serious venereal diseases though less well known, such as chancroid, granuloma inguinale, and lymphopathia venereum* which are also disabling to civilian and military population.

The experience of the Negro people with communicable diseases has been similar to that of the white people of the civilized world. The present unfavorable position of the Negro, in the progress of control and prevention of venereal diseases and rates of infection is one of degree rather than of kind, for these diseases are a serious problem in both races and in military as well as in civil life. In part, this is due to disadvantageous social and economic conditions, to limited opportunities for utilizing medical and public health services, and in the case of syphilis, possibly to differences in susceptibility and resistance to the infecting organism. However, the trend of experience and control in the Negro population is following the general pattern of the earlier experience of the white population.

The current prevalence of the venereal diseases in the nation, at large, is of immediate interest, particularly because of the war emergency and the military and industrial manpower needs, and much attention and service is being directed to the problem of venereal disease control and venereal disease education for all segments of the population and all sections of the country.

* Also frequently called lymphogranuloma venereum

Hence, it is considered timely, desirable, and judicious to direct an adequate share of attention and available personnel and facilities for prevention, treatment, and control, to the Negro population, which authoritatively and admittedly has at present a comparatively high rate of venereal disease infection. The Negro should accept the opportunity and assume responsibility of contributing help and influence from within the race to the solution of the problem and the removal of whatever measure of stigma there is associated with it. Obviously, the Negro cannot solve this problem alone. It can be solved only by the support and action of the community as a whole.

THE REPORT RECOMMENDED WITH REFERENCE TO MEDICAL ASPECTS

I. A MANUAL OF FACTS

a. A manual of facts should be developed which could be used by various organizations interested in the reduction of venereal diseases.

II. TRAINING OF PROFESSIONAL PERSONNEL

Much progress has been made in the training of Negro professional personnel for venereal disease control. However, there is yet a great need for competently trained individuals, and every attempt should be made to increase their numbers and facilities for training. The following avenues of approach are suggested.

a. More Negro medical students should be admitted to the 75 medical schools in the United States, other than Howard and Meharry. Many of these schools have customarily received a few Negro students. The Army and Navy could be very helpful by encouraging this trend through assignment to these institutions, through their Specialized Training Program.

b. There should be continued improvement in the teaching of medical students at Howard and Meharry medical schools in matters pertaining to the venereal diseases.

c. The orientation courses which have been developed by the United States Public Health Service should be continued, and Negroes should continue to be enrolled as members of each course offered.

d. Post graduate courses for the training of Negro physicians, in practice, should be developed especially in the various southern states since their opportunities for intra-mural formal training are usually not available in this area.

The training of Negro personnel should not be limited to physicians only, but should apply to all personnel that may be connected with this program, such as nurses, health educators, social workers and laboratory technicians.

III. EMPLOYMENT OF NEGRO PROFESSIONAL PERSONNEL

a. Negro physicians, nurses, and others are being employed to some extent in venereal disease control programs. It is the opinion of the committee that this should be continued and expanded as rapidly as possible. In the employment of Negro professional personnel, consideration should be given to their training, experience and interest. Where it exists, the Merit System should be used to govern all appointments.

IV. MEDICAL SERVICES

Intensive support should be given to the private practitioner:

a. Provide opportunities for post graduate training both on the level of refresher courses and more especially on the level of formal university matriculation and training.

b. Provide drugs and laboratory facilities for indigent people, irrespective of location.

c. Provide for expert advice and counsel in complicated cases.

d. Provide for adequate follow-up services.

Progress has been made toward the provision of adequate medical facilities for diagnosis and treatment for Negro and white patients so that today there are over 3800 treatment centers in this country. The major responsibility for developing comprehensive venereal disease programs rests with the state and local official agencies and therefore they should provide the best medical services, for all groups.

Health education opportunities for patients should be provided at all treatment sources.

V. FINANCIAL RESOURCES

The committee was informed that at present there is available a sum of approximately twenty-two million dollars yearly from public funds for the development of venereal disease control programs. It is suggested that the State Health Departments should be advised to re-evaluate their programs in terms of the various groups in the population, and that further allocation of funds should be made on the basis of needs rather than on any basis of population ratios and other less important factors.

VI. THE REPORT RECOMMENDED WITH REFERENCE TO SOCIAL ASPECTS

I. The committee concluded, from an overall standpoint, that not enough real progress has been made, with respect to controlling community conditions favoring the spread of venereal disease to justify any statement about such progress.

II. Basically, the high venereal disease rate among Negroes is due to socio-economic factors, the correction of which will require time and involves questions beyond the purview of this Conference. Nevertheless, there are more immediate causes, many of which are susceptible to remedial action at this time.

III. Among the more immediate causes of high venereal disease rates among Negroes are the following:

a. Low wage income in the Negro population group; the necessarily large employment of mothers; and the resulting heavy dislocation of the family group, exposing the children to unguarded adolescent relations.

b. The low level of educational advantages available to the Negro population, with resulting wide-spread illiteracy and near illiteracy, and a lack of specific information concerning the venereal diseases.

c. An attitude of defeatism toward the problems of venereal disease control on the part of many white community leaders and of frustration among leaders in the Negro community.

d. Failure to enlist the support of the intelligent and able Negroes in each community for venereal disease control, and failure to develop effective collaboration between white and Negro leaders.

e. Inadequate housing, recreational and other community facilities for Negroes; also inadequate recreational and temporary-lodging facilities for Negro members of the armed forces on leave or liberty.

f. Failure to enforce laws against commercialized prostitution and allied activities in Negro communities. This is caused largely by a failure of law enforcement officials to practice a single standard of law enforcement, and to give appropriate training to law-enforcement personnel, in the problems and methods of law enforcement as related to Negro communities.

g. Insufficient utilization of Negro personnel in medical, educational and law enforcement aspects of the venereal disease control program.

IV. Considerable money is now available, through Federal and voluntary agencies, with which to effect a substantial improvement in various factors mentioned in the foregoing paragraphs, provided this money is allocated and used according to demonstrated need.

V. Improvement is needed in administrative practices in order to insure the most effective utilization of funds at the local level.

VI. There should be Negro representation on the Board and staff of organizations, both voluntary and official, which are concerned with planning and policy making in the field of venereal disease control.

MADE-TO-ORDER MATERIALS

Health Publications Institute and its predecessor, Venereal Disease Education Institute, have produced and distributed more than 15,000,000 items of education materials to every American State and many foreign lands. A full-time staff is continuously engaged in the production of new materials and in research and evaluation.

Many of these materials have been designed on a made-to-order basis to fulfill the specific needs of a particular state or organization. What are your problems? Do you need specialized types of education materials which are not now available? If so, Health Publications Institute would welcome an opportunity to work with you.

PAMPHLETS

VDgraphic 5. Out In The Open. A simply written and well-illustrated presentation of facts about the venereal diseases, including a description of symptoms and facts about treatment. 28 p. $6.00 per C, $50.00 per M.

VDgraphic 22. What Every Woman Should Know. Contains full information as to how syphilis and gonorrhea are spread, how to recognize early symptoms of the diseases, where to secure treatment and what the end-results of neglected infection may be. 14 p. $3.00 per C, $25.00 per M.

VDgraphic 23. A Letter from Janie. A unique booklet in the form of an informal letter from a patient at one of the Rapid Treatment Centers. Intended to prepare persons for admission to such treatment. 8 p. $2.00 per C, $15.00 per M.

VDgraphic 37. Solid Facts for Teen-Age Folks. A booklet on the high school level. Used and approved by school authorities in many places. Stresses the importance of proper sex conduct and suggests books for sex education. 12 p. $2.50 per C, $20.00 per M.

VDgraphic 45. Wanted Fifty-thousand Men and Women. A leaflet designed to stress the importance of finding the thousands of infected cases who are not being treated. A unique cover which resembles the Want Ad section of a newspaper creates a favorable impression. 4 p. $0.50 per C, $3.00 per M.

VDgraphic 46. Blood Will Tell. A leaflet emphasizing the importance of blood tests for the diagnosis of syphilis. Very useful in industrial campaigns. Now being distributed to policyholders by several insurance companies. 4 p. $0.75 per C, $5.00 per M.

VDgraphic 68. Wake Up! Stresses the importance of public information and suggests that parents teach their children the facts about venereal diseases. 24 p. $2.50 per C, $20.00 per M.

VDgraphic 80. Your Rapid Treatment Center. A booklet setting forth the advantages of rapid treatment in an institution for that purpose. 8 p. $2.50 per C, $20.00 per M.

VDgraphic 82. How Superstitious Are You? A whimsically illustrated booklet containing a concise summary of VD facts. 8 p. $2.00 per C, $15.00 per M.

VDgraphic 86. A VD Health Primer. A booklet resembling a first-reader. Produced because of numerous requests for a very elementary treatment of material for patients and others. 16 p. $3.00 per C, $25.00 per M.

SPECIAL GROUP FOLDERS

The eight items listed in this classification consist of leaflets designed for distribution among specific types or groups of people. The group in question is urged to coöperate with its local Health Department in disseminating information about the control and treatment of the venereal diseases. Brief statements of symptoms of both diseases are listed. The cover-page on each pamphlet is attractively illustrated in a manner applicable to the group in question. The following types are available:

VDgraphic 115. Bellboy. 4 p. $0.75 per C, $5.00 per M, local imprint extra.

VDgraphic 116. Bartender. 4 p. $0.75 per C, $5.00 per M, local imprint extra.

VDgraphic 117. Taxi Driver. 4 p. $0.75 per C, $5.00 per M, local imprint extra.

VDgraphic 118. Rooming House. 4 p. $0.75 per C, $5.00 per M, local imprint extra.

VDgraphic 119. Druggist. 4 p. $0.75 per C, $5.00 per M, local imprint extra.

VDgraphic 120. Barber Shop. 4 p. $0.75 per C, $5.00 per M, local imprint extra.

VDgraphic 121. Retail Liquor Dealer. 4 p. $0.75 per C, $5.00 per M, local imprint extra.

VDgraphic 122. Wage Earner. 4 p. $0.75 per C, $5.00 per M, local imprint extra.

COMIC BOOKS

Here are three 16-page comic books done in four colors, intended to teach the facts about VD. They contain all the elements of the popular comics, such as suspense, rapid progression, and proper termination, together with a considerable amount of scientific information. These books have been widely and effectively used by public health agencies throughout the United States.

VDgraphic 71. Doc Carter Comes to Carbiville, deals with syphilis. $5.00 per C, $40.00 per M.

VDgraphic 74. Little Willie — about Southern rural Negroes and the Rapid Treatment Center. $5.00 per C, $40.00 per M.

VDgraphic 102. Phil Mann Comes Home, deals with gonorrhea. $5.00 per C, $40.00 per M.

POSTERS

Each of the posters listed below is a color reproduction of artwork designed to convey a VD message. The quality of the art and the reproduction are of the same general type which featured the posters used throughout the world by the Armed Forces during World War II.

VDgraphic 4. America Needs Strong Men, 15" x 20", $2.00 per C, $15.00 per M.

VDgraphic 24. Your Future Depends on Regular Treatments, 15" x 20", $3.50 per C, $30.00 per M.

VDgraphic 27. An Elephant Never Forgets, 12½" x 16", $2.50 per C, $20,00 per M.

VDgraphic 28. The Healthy Shall Inherit the Earth, 15" x 20", $3.00 per C, $25.00 per M.

VDgraphic 30. Self-Control May Mean Self-Preservation, 20" x 28", $3.50 per C, $25.00 per M.

VDgraphic 31. Gonorrhea Can Be Cured, 15" x 20", $3.50 per C, $25.00 per M.

NATIONAL SOCIAL HYGIENE DAY

By
John M. Gibson, Director
Division of Public Health Education

Next Wednesday, February 2, will be National Social Hygiene Day. This special day will be widely observed in Alabama. The venereal disease problem will also receive special emphasis on that day in all other parts of the country.

Every year has its own slogan for this annual observance. The 1949 slogan is: "Protect the Family.....Stamp Out VD." This year's observance comes soon after this country's launching of its peacetime military draft. It is natural that the problem of protecting our young people in uniform should have had a prominent place in the planning of this observance. A spokesman for the American Social Hygiene Association has this to say about it:

"Social Hygiene Day 1949 finds the country facing many problems and adjustments caused by the development of the peacetime military draft. In this period of national peacetime defense, the united efforts of all branches of the Armed Forces, the Federal Security Agency and the United States Public Health Service, the USO and the American Social Hygiene Association--every state and local social hygiene society as well as other cooperating agencies--must be geared to the common goal: the most constructive and developing experience for the young men and women in the armed forces.

"Preparation for citizenship and leadership in both the family life and community life of the country tomorrow is stressed in every aspect of training for the armed forces today. This goal cannot be achieved by the efforts of the Departments of the Army, the Navy and the Air Force alone. Only the strongest community action, involving the cooperative efforts of citizens with those of organized community health, welfare, education and religious agencies, can do the essential job of complementing and supplementing the character guidance and citizenship training of the armed forces."

Every community, therefore, has a responsibility to the peacetime wearers of the uniform. It is up to the leaders of each neighborhood to see that it measures fully up to that responsibility.

That responsibility can be discharged in many ways. It can be discharged, for example, by seeing that stringent laws are passed against vice. A community can see that those laws are strictly enforced after being passed. It can see that the community cooperates to the fullest possible extent with the public health agencies seeking to keep venereal disease incidence at the lowest possible level. It can show a similar attitude of cooperation and helpfulness toward the unofficial agencies working to this same end. No doubt all these means of helping to curb the venereal diseases will receive considerable emphasis on National Social Hygiene Day.

There is one agency of attack which can be used with even greater effect on that special observance, however. I refer to venereal disease education. National Social Hygiene Day should be made the occasion for a particularly active campaign against ignorance. For knowledge is the chief enemy of smugness and contentment with things as they are. And things as they are are nothing to be smug or satisfied about, as far as the venereal diseases are concerned.

It is estimated that more than three million people in the United States have syphilis at this very moment. If you think that is an insignificant figure, remember that those estimated three million syphilis victims equal approximately the present population of the State of Alabama. An even larger number, a much larger number, are victims of that other major venereal disease, gonorrhea. America's present-day gonorrhea victims are estimated at ten million. These estimates, I might explain, are by the United States Public Health Service. Thus, approximately one American out of every ten probably has venereal disease.

"In 1947," says the American Social Hygiene Association, "for every person hurt in an atuo accident another fell victim to gonorrhea. For every work injury of more than casual nature tabulated by the National Safety Council, the U. S. Public Health Service received four reports of positive syphilis diagnoses. And as many more persons with syphilis and still others with gonorrhea failed, primarily through ignorance, to report for tests and treatments.

One bit of knowledge which your State Department of Health wishes to emphasize, on National Social Hygiene Day and at other times too, is that the venereal diseases are messengers of tragedy. They can, and do, bring death. They produce blindness. They turn healthy, brilliant minds into diseased minds. They rob eager parents of the fulfillment of their dreams of having children. They turn normal, efficient men, women and children into helpless cripples. They reduce working efficiency. They play havoc with output. They ruthlessly cut off incomes when salary checks are the only bulwark against cruel want. They require huge outlays for the hospitalization and institutionalization of their victims. They add heavily to the burden of mounting doctors' bills.

It is not quite correct to say that the venereal diseases can be entirely prevented by a strict avoidance of prosmiscuity. The tragic fact is that babies inherit syphilis from their infected parents and contract gonorrhea from their mothers during the act of birth. It is well known, too, that it is possible to acquire venereal disease from using towels, razors, etc. which have just been used by victims. Several cases of syphilis were traced some years ago to a "kissing game" at a party. So prosmiscuity is not exclusively responsible for our staggering venereal disease problem. However, if it could be entirely eliminated as a factor in it, the problem itself would shrink to an almost unrecognizably small pattern of itself. The flood of venereal disease cases, new and old, would slow up to a mere trickle.

But, tragically, there is little hope of making an immediate frontal assault upon the venereal diseases in that way, highly desirable as it would be in many ways. There are too many who have vested interests in this sorry business. Society has too tolerant an attitude toward the moral offender. Temptation is too strong among a large segment of our population.

But progress has been made. It is still being made. The powerful force of education is doing its work. Many of those who are unresponsive to appeals on moral grounds are willing to listen to, and heed, warnings regarding their health. More and more people are becoming convinced that promiscuity costs them heavily in money, in a feeling of general well-being, in the respect of their neighbors, in their chances of having happy and successful marriages and in many other ways.

There is also progress to report on the legislative front. It is gratifying to Alabamians that this state has taken the lead in that part of the fight. It was Alabama, you will remember, that put into effect the first compulsory statewide syphilis blood-testing program ever undertaken by any state. This state has long had numerous public health diagnostic and treatment clinics. It has long distributed free drugs generously to physicians treating such cases. One of the first intensive case-finding programs ever to be undertaken among Negores was conducted in Macon County in cooperation with the Rosenwald Fund. A little more than a year ago, Alabama began enforcing a strict premarital law. This requires both prospective bride and prospective bridegroom to submit blood samples for laboratory testing to determine whether they have syphilis. And Alabama has one of the first rapid treatment centers for venereal disease victims to be established on the American continent.

Other states of course have also been active on the legislative front against the venereal diseases. Let us take a brief glance at the legislative picture as it is presented by the American Social Hygiene Association:

Nineteen of the 48 states have what the Association considers adequate laws against most aspects of vice. Ten have laws against most aspects of it, laws which are considered adequate, except for their failure to take sufficiently drastic action against those who encourage vice by their patronage. Seventeen states have laws against some aspects of vice, including its exploitation by outsiders. Two states--Nevada and Arizona--have laws against exploiters of vice but fail to deal adequately with those who engage in it directly and personally.

Thirty-six states have laws requiring blood tests for syphilis from both the prospective bride and the prospective bridegroom. (So does the Territory of Hawaii.) Two states have laws making it necessary for one or both of the intended contracting parties (usually the groom only) to be examined by a physician for venereal diseases or to produce medical certificates showing freedom from such diseases. Those two states are Texas and Louisiana. Their premarital health laws differ from those just mentioned in that no blood test is required. Finally, ten states and the District of Columbia "grant marriage licenses without regard to venereal disease infection." Alabama of course belongs to the first-named group, which require blood tests for syphilis of both prospective grooms and prospective brides.

The spokesman for the American Social Hygiene Association has this comment upon premarital health legislation, as it affects the venereal disease problem:

"Physicians and health authorities report that by the application of the premarital examination laws many syphilis infections are being discovered among persons who did not know that they had the disease. The genereal purpose of this legislation is not to prevent, but to postpone marriage of infected persons while the disease is in a communicable stage."

Thirty-eight states, Hawaii and the Virgin Islands require prospective mothers to be blood-tested for syphilis. Those 38 do not include Alabama. The nine other states not requiring such tests are North Dakota, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Maryland, Virginia, Tennessee, Mississippi, Texas and New Mexico.

The Alabama State Department of Health has long favored the general objectives of the prenatal blood-test. However, many of those who would be benefitted by such legislation are being aided by other types of venereal disease control legislation, particularly the statewide compulsory blood-testing legislation and the premarital blood-testing law.

Let us take another brief glance at the nationwide venereal disease picture. Let us consider especially some examples of progress. Again your speaker is indebted to the American Social Hygiene Association for his facts and figures:

In 1937 there were only 965 clinics for the treatment of the venereal diseases. Last year there were 3,000. In 1937 there were no rapid treatment centers. Last year there were 60 (including one in Birmingham, remember). In 1937 only 2½ million blood tests for syphilis were given. Last year such tests numbered 20 million. In 1937 only 15 per cent of all the syphilis cases found were in an early easily cured stage. Last year that percentage of early-stage cases had exactly doubled. In 1937 only 30 per cent--less than a third--of the early syphilis cases completed treatment. Last year 99 per cent did so. Deaths attributed to syphilis in 1937 represented 16 out of every 100,000. Infant deaths from congenital syphilis per 100,000 live births dropped from 69 in 1937 to 16 in 1948.

All these evidences of progress would be encouraging at any time. They are particularly cheering on the eve of National Social Hygiene Day. But we must keep up the fight. It is a campaign that must be carried on from year's end to year's end. But it should receive particular emphasis on the one day chosen for the focusing of national attention upon the venereal disease problem. Let us make Alabama especially venereal disease conscious on February 2.

SOLID FACTS

for 'teen-age' folks

"VD? NOT ME — I CAN ALWAYS TELL BY JUST LOOKING AT A GIRL"

WWH

He's Wrong!

Nobody can tell by looking at a girl.

Pick-up girls and prostitutes are exposed again and again to the venereal diseases and most of them are infected. Sexual relations outside of marriage always mean taking a risk.

If you are infected, get treatment at once.

Quick cure is now possible.

"VD? WHY YOU CAN TREAT IT AT HOME, BUB..."

WWH

He's Wrong!

Syphilis and gonorrhea cannot be cured by self-treatment or quack doctors.

Untreated syphilis may cause paralysis, blindness, heart failure, death.

Untreated gonorrhea can cause serious damage.

If you think you have a venereal disease go at once to your family doctor or a public health clinic.

Quick cure is possible now.

VD graphic-90

She's Wrong!

Not knowing about syphilis and gonorrhea is why many people have these diseases.

A woman can have syphilis or gonorrhea without knowing that she has it. Only a medical examination can tell.

Untreated syphilis or gonorrhea in a woman often does serious damage and makes necessary a surgical operation.

She's Wrong!

Syphilis and gonorrhea are everywhere.

Women can catch these diseases innocently.

The first signs of venereal diseases are easily unnoticed by women. Know the facts about them.

VD graphic-92

"TELL ME ALL ABOUT VD"

She's Wrong!

Don't ask your friends—get your information from those who know.

The two common venereal diseases are syphilis ("bad blood," "pox," "syph") and gonorrhea ("clap," "strain").

Syphilis and gonorrhea are spread through sexual intercourse.

If you have been exposed, see your family doctor or a public health clinic at once.

VD graphic-93

"AS A MATTER OF FACT, I THOUGHT I HAD VD ONCE — BUT THE SYMPTOM WENT AWAY"

WWH

He's Wrong!

The first symptoms of syphilis or gonorrhea do go away without treatment, but the disease is not cured.

The first sign of syphilis is usually a sore on the privates.

The first sign of gonorrhea is usually a burning while urinating, and a pus discharge.

If these signs show up on you, go at once to your family doctor or a public health clinic.

Quick cure of V. D. is now possible.

VD graphic-94

He's Wrong!

Quack doctors, patent medicines and home treatment do not cure syphilis and gonorrhea

Modern scientific treatment given by a doctor can cure the venereal diseases quickly.

"OF COURSE, MY DEAR, REALLY NICE PEOPLE JUST DON'T HAVE..AH..VD"

She's Wrong!

Nobody is safe from syphilis and gonorrhea and the first signs of these diseases may go unnoticed.

Women are often the innocent victims.

If you need advice or treatment see your family doctor or go to a public health clinic.

BOY! THIS MOVING IS MORE OF A JOB THAN I THOUGHT!
EEEE

GOOD MORNING! YOU'RE THE NEW DOCTOR, AREN'T YOU? CAN I HELP YOU?
YES, I'M THE NEW DOCTOR, AND I COULD SURELY USE SOME HELP. COME ON IN.

WHY AREN'T YOU IN SCHOOL TODAY? AND BY THE WAY.... WHAT'S YOUR NAME?
KIT. SCHOOL'S CLOSED A MONTH EARLY. RAN OUT OF MONEY FOR THE TEACHERS.

THAT'S A GOOD NAME. I'LL HAVE TO HANG ON TO YOU... DOCTORS NEED A "KIT". SORRY YOUR SCHOOL HAD TO CLOSE WELL, I'M NOT. BUT THE TOWN'S PLENTY SORE THEY SAY THE "RING" GRABS ALL THE TOWN MONEY.

I WANT TO HEAR ABOUT THE "RING", KIT, BUT HOW ABOUT SOME LUNCH NOW?

PRETTY GOOD LUNCH, KIT. SAY, WHO IS THE LEADER OF THIS RING?
MARBY... THERE HE IS NOW! "BOSS" MARBY.

NICE LOOKING GIRL. WONDER WHY SHE BOTHERS TO TALK TO MARBY
WHY THAT'S MISS MALONE, MY TEACHER. I'LL BET SHE'S AFTER HER BACK SALARY. THEY SAY HE CONTROLS THE CITY PURSE STRINGS

HOW ABOUT INTRODUCING ME TO HER, KIT?
SURE... LOOKS LIKE MARBY IS GIVING HER THE BRUSH OFF.
LUNCH

MISS MOLLY, THIS IS OUR NEW DOCTOR... DR. CARTER. I'M SHOWING HIM THE SIGHTS.
I'M GLAD TO KNOW YOU DOCTOR, AND I GUESS I DO LOOK LIKE A SIGHT, KIT. THAT MR. MARBY SIMPLY UNNERVES ME!

A VERY PRETTY SIGHT, THOUGH, MISS MALONE. MARBY DOES LOOK LIKE A HEEL. KIT TOLD ME OF THE TROUBLE YOU TEACHERS HAD. COULD I HELP IN ANY WAY...?

THANKS, BUT I DON'T SEE HOW YOU COULD.

I HAVE BEEN WORRIED ABOUT MY BROTHER TED, DR. CARTER
WHAT SEEMS TO BE WRONG?

I DON'T KNOW. HE SEEMS SICK, DEPRESSED, UNHAPPY. . .

UMM... HAVE YOU CALLED A DOCTOR?
WHY NO— THERE'S REALLY NOT A DOCTOR IN CARBIVILLE, EXCEPT DR. CROOKE

HAVE HIM STOP IN TO SEE ME TOMORROW.
OH THANK YOU DR. CARTER, AND I DO HOPE YOU WILL LIKE CARBIVILLE... SEE YOU LATER.

WHO IS DR. CROOKE, KIT?
WELL, FOLKS SAY HE WORKS FOR MARBY. HE'S A "QUACK", I GUESS, NOT A REAL DOCTOR ANYWAY. NO ONE HAD HIM WHEN OLD DR. SMITH WAS ALIVE.

DR. CROOKE GETS MOST OF HIS BUSINESS FROM THE... THE... "RED LIGHT" DISTRICT.
SO THAT'S MARBY'S RACKET, HUH? WELL, I THINK I'LL JUST STICK MY NECK OUT AND LOOK INTO THIS BUSINESS. THIS TOWN NEEDS A GOOD CLEANING UP!

LATER THAT NIGHT
SO THIS IS THE RED LIGHT DISTRICT.
I GUESS THAT FELLOW DOESN'T WANT TO BE SEEN AROUND HERE.
OF ALL THE LOUSY MISMANAGEMENT! ALLOWING A "RED LIGHT" DISTRICT.
HERE YA ARE, AL.
SURE IT'S ALL HERE MAC? DA BOSS HAS BEEN GROWLING LATELY.
ELM
WHAT D'YA MEAN IS IT ALL THERE?
CUT IT! DON'T YA SEE DAT GUY MOVE ON!
A GUILTY LOOKING PAIR IF I EVER SAW ONE. THEY SURE GOT OUT OF THE LIGHT WHEN THEY SAW ME.
FOR PETES' SAKE! A HUNDRED DOLLAR BILL. A WONDER THAT PAIR DIDN'T SEE IT RIGHT UNDER THE LIGHT HERE.
GUESS I HAD BETTER PHONE AN AD IN TO THE LOST AND FOUND BEFORE I GO TO BED.

NEXT DAY
MAC? THIS IS MARBY... NOW MY DEAR BOY, YOU WERE A HUNDRED DOLLARS SHORT LAST NIGHT. I SINCERELY HOPE YOU HAVE AN EXPLANATION.
I SWEAR I TURNED IN EVERY CENT, BOSS!

NOW, NOW, NOW, MAC – PLEASE CALM YOURSELF. I WOULD SUGGEST THAT YOU READ THE LOST & FOUND SECTION OF THE PAPER... A DR. CARTER... HONEST FELLOW... FOUND A ONE HUNDRED DOLLAR BILL IN YOUR SECTION OF TOWN ABOUT NINE O'CLOCK LAST NIGHT. I REALLY HOPE YOU'LL NOT BE GREEDY AND TRY TO CLAIM IT.

OK BOSS.
GEES...! A HUNNARD BUCKS. I COULD SURE USE IT. MAYBE...

HELLO KIT. YOU TOLD ME YESTERDAY THAT YOUR DAD, DOWN AT THE BANK, WOULD LIKE TO HELP US? COULD YOU MEET ME AT THE BANK IN ABOUT TEN MINUTES... I THINK I HAVE AN IDEA!

AFTER TALKING TO KIT'S DAD —
LET'S GET BACK TO MY OFFICE, KIT. I'M EXPECTING TED MALONE, AND, I HOPE, ANOTHER VISITOR.
BANK OF C

DR. CARTER? I'M TED MALONE. MY SISTER SAID YOU'D SEE ME
HI TED — GLAD TO KNOW YOU. COME ON IN.
C

NOW TED.. WHAT SEEMS TO BE THE TROUBLE
203

WELL, DR. CARTER, I JUST FEEL BAD AND THEN THIS RASH HAS BROKEN OUT...
UMM... TELL ME TED, HAVE YOU BEEN EXPOSED TO VENEREAL DISEASE?
YES DOC, I GUESS I HAVE. SOME OF US FELLOWS WENT DOWN TO GOLDIE'S PLACE — I'M WORRIED.
DID YOU NOTICE A SORE ON YOUR BODY A FEW WEEKS AFTER?
YES I DID, BUT IT WENT AWAY — SO I FIGURED IT WAS OK. YOU SEE, I DON'T KNOW MUCH ABOUT VENEREAL DISEASE
WELL TED, WE CAN'T BE SURE YOU, OR ANYONE, HAS V.D. UNTIL WE MAKE A THOROUGH EXAMINATION. I WILL, HOWEVER, GIVE YOU A FEW FACTS ABOUT SYPHILIS IF YOU'D LIKE.
I WISH YOU WOULD, DR. CARTER.
TED, SYPHILIS IS EVERYWHERE... IT CAN, AND DOES, STRIKE ANYONE — GOOD PEOPLE AND BAD, RICH AND POOR. AT LEAST 18,000 AMERICANS DIE OF SYPHILIS EVERY YEAR, AND PROBABLY MORE THAN 3,200,000 HAVE IT NOW.
BUT DR. CARTER — IF IT'S THAT BAD, WHY DON'T WE SEE MORE PEOPLE WHO HAVE IT?
WELL TED, YOU DO SEE 'EM, ALTHOUGH FOLKS HAVE TRIED TO HIDE SYPHILIS. FALSE MODESTY, YEARS OF "HUSH-HUSH" HAVEN'T STOPPED SYPHILIS. IT'S HERE ALRIGHT... HERE ARE SOME EXAMPLES.

"EVERY YEAR A GREAT MANY AMERICANS DIE OF HEART FAILURE CAUSED BY SYPHILIS."

"AT LEAST EIGHT PERCENT OF ALL INSANITY IS CAUSED BY SYPHILIS."

"OVER 30,000 BABIES CATCH SYPHILIS AND DIE BEFORE BIRTH IN AMERICA EACH YEAR."

— AND 34,000 OTHERS ARE BORN INFECTED. ALMOST ALL COULD BE SAVED BY MEDICAL CARE BEFORE BIRTH."

"SYPHILIS CRIPPLES, BLINDS, AND DEAFENS THOUSANDS —"

HOW CAN PEOPLE KNOW IF THEY'VE CAUGHT SYPHILIS ?
BY TAKING A BLOOD TEST — AT A PUBLIC HEALTH CLINIC, OR FROM A REAL DOCTOR. AND I MEAN A DOCTOR — NOT A "MEN'S DOCTOR", OR "QUACK."
BUT ISN'T THERE SOME WAY OF KNOWING IF YOU'VE JUST CAUGHT IT... A SORE, OR SOMETHING ?
WELL TED, THE FIRST SIGN OF SYPHILIS MAY BE A SORE THAT APPEARS WHERE THE GERM ENTERED THE BODY.
THIS SORE, EASY TO NOTICE ON A MAN, IS SOMETIMES DIFFICULT FOR A WOMAN TO KNOW ABOUT, AS IT IS FREQUENTLY INSIDE HER BODY. IF AN UNUSUAL SORE IS NOTICED AT ANY TIME ... SEE A GOOD DOCTOR AT ONCE, BECAUSE DIAGNOSIS CAN BE MADE BY USING A MICROSCOPE.
AS I UNDERSTAND IT THEN, DR. CARTER, A FELLOW HAS TO BE MIGHTY CAREFUL.
THATS RIGHT, OLD BOY — WITHOUT A BLOOD TEST, OR MICROSCOPIC EXAMINATION, NOT EVEN A DOCTOR CAN BE SURE ABOUT SYPHILIS. A GIRL MAY LOOK CLEAN, BUT IF SHE'S "EASY" FOR YOU, THE ODDS ARE SHE HAS BEEN EXPOSED TO SYPHILIS. AND ANOTHER THING — NOT JUST FELLOWS HAVE TO BE CAREFUL .....
..... LOTS OF GIRLS HAVE CONTRACTED SYPHILIS FROM NECKING AND PETTING WITH FELLOWS WHO HAVE BEEN OUT WITH INFECTED GIRLS. SO YOU SEE IT'S BEST TO WAIT FOR MARRIAGE.

NOW TED, I'M TAKING THIS BLOOD TEST TO KNOW FOR SURE IF YOU HAVE SYPHILIS.

IN THE EVENT YOU DO HAVE SYPHILIS, WE CAN START TREATMENT AT ONCE. YOU HAVE EVERY THING IN YOUR FAVOR — AN EARLY START, AND THE LATEST MEDICAL DISCOVERIES. THE SAD THING ABOUT SYPHILIS IS THAT ALL PEOPLE WHO HAVE IT COULD BE HELPED. EVERYONE SHOULD HAVE A BLOOD TEST.

NOW DON'T WORRY TED — EXCUSE ME.. THERE'S THE PHONE RING-G-G-G

DR. RICHARD CARTER SPEAKING. YES, I RAN THE AD. YES — THAT'S RIGHT — ELM & NORTH WALNUT. WHY CERTAINLY IT WILL BE CONFIDENTIAL. YOU CAN COME RIGHT AROUND.

GUESS I'D BETTER SHOVE OFF
NO ~ STICK AROUND. I WANT YOU AND KIT HERE. I'M EXPECTING ONE OF MARBY'S MOB AND I MAY NEED HELP . . . AND A WITNESS.

IF I KNOW MARBY'S KIND, THERE'LL BE TROUBLE . . . IF WE PLAY OUR CARDS RIGHT, AND WITH LUCK, WE MAY HOOK 'EM.

203

COME IN, COME IN.
NAW DOC ~ JUST GIMME TH' "C" NOTE. I'M TH' GUY.. ELM & N. WALNUT, 9 O'CLOCK LAST NIGHT. THANKS A LOT DOC.. THANKS.

WELL, FELLOWS, COULDN'T GET HIM IN. TOUGH LUCK, BUT I'M NOT LICKED — LET'S TRAIL HIM!

UNLESS I MISS MY GUESS, THAT FELLOW WILL HAVE TROUBLE WITH MARBY... IF THERE'S A LINK BETWEEN THEM.

KIT—TED, HOLD IT! I DIDN'T MISS MY GUESS!

OH, OH! DAR'S MARBY

WHY MAC ~ I DIDN'T KNOW YOU WERE ILL. BUT PERHAPS YOU WERE JUST MAKING A SOCIAL CALL ... OR PERHAPS A .. AH ... BUSINESS CALL ?
NOW BOSS

ALRIGHT, GENTLEMEN, GET THAT MONEY... AND NOT TOO GENTLY.
OWWW
SOC

LET'S GO GET HIM FELLOWS ... I THINK MAYBE HE'LL TALK.

THANKS A LOT DOC. THEM DIRTY BUMS.. BUT I'LL FIX 'EM.

YOU CAN FIX THEM RIGHT NOW MAC, AND SAVE YOURSELF TOO. JUST TELL US WHAT YOU KNOW ABOUT MARBY.

DOC, IT'LL BE A PLEASURE.

LATER
DOCTOR CARTER? THIS IS KIT'S DAD... THAT MARKED BILL TURNED UP IN MARBY'S DEPOSIT...
THANK YOU SIR. JUST HOLD IT... YES...
LONG DISTANCE? GET ME THE STATE OFFICE OF THE FBI... THAT'S RIGHT.
YES SIR... I THINK I HAVE THE EVIDENCE YOU NEED.
WELL FELLOWS... THAT'S THAT KIT, TED.... I'M GOING TO GIVE A LITTLE LECTURE ~ ABOUT EASY GIRLS, PROSTITUTES, AND FELLOWS WHO GO OUT WITH THAT SORT. BUT MAYBE WHAT'S HAPPENED HERE WOULD MAKE A BETTER LECTURE AT THAT...

...AS YOU CAN SEE, IF YOU GO TO A "HOUSE" YOU ARE GOING TO COME IN CONTACT WITH CRIMINALS, DISEASE, AND TROUBLE. YOU WILL ALSO BE AIDING AND SUPPORTING A GROUP OF LEECHES ON YOUR CITY.
C

A FEW DAYS LATER . . .

RICHARD...YOU'VE DONE SO MUCH FOR CARBIVILLE, AND SO MUCH FOR TED. MAYBE TED WOULDN'T HAVE SYPHILIS IF HE HAD JUST KNOWN. HIGH SCHOOL BOYS AND GIRLS SHOULD KNOW EVERYTHING ABOUT VD.

IT WAS A LUCKY DAY FOR CARBIVILLE WHEN YOU CAME HERE, RICHARD.

I'M THE LUCKY ONE, MOLLY.

HELEN? IT'S PHIL---- I'M HOME!
SURE... HOME FOR GOOD... SEE YOU TONIGHT— EIGHT O'CLOCK.
EIGHT O'CLOCK

I GUESS I DON'T HAVE TO TELL YOU HOW NICE IT IS TO BE HOME... NOW WE CAN GO ON WITH OUR PLANS, DARLING.

PHIL, THIS LAST YEAR HAS SEEMED LIKE AN AGE ... I'VE MISSED YOU SO MUCH!

OH PHIL — I FORGOT TO TELL YOU ~ JIM'S HOME TOO.

SWELL ~ I'LL BE GLAD TO SEE THAT GUY. GUESS HE'S THE BEST PAL I'VE GOT. FINISHED SCHOOL, UH ?
YES ~ GOT HOME LAST WEEK.

WHERE TO SUGAR?
LET'S GO TO THE DRUG STORE ... LET THE GANG SEE YOU.

OK, PHIL

HELLO JIM ... DIDN'T WAKE YOU UP, DID I? LISTEN FELLOW — I'M IN TROUBLE... CAN I SEE YOU QUICK? SODA SHOP — TEN MINUTES.

AT THE DRUG STORE
JIM, YOU'VE BEEN AROUND A LOT — KNOW ANYTHING ABOUT VENEREAL DISEASES? I'VE GOT IT! — OR ONE OF THEM — WHAT AM I GOING TO DO ???
TAKE IT EASY, PHIL
SURE IT IS --- BUT WORRYING WON'T HELP — HOW DO YOU KNOW YOU'VE GOT IT ?
WELL —
BUT JIM, THIS IS SERIOUS . . .
RIGHT AFTER I GOT TO WORK THIS MORNING I WENT TO THE TOILET AND NOTICED A BURNING SENSATION WHEN I URINATED --- HURT LIKE THE DEVIL!
FROM WHAT I'VE HEARD FELLOWS SAY PHIL . . . . SOUNDS LIKE YOU HAVE GONORRHEA (CLAP)
THEN I'VE GOT IT!

WAIT A SECOND PHIL... NO ONE CAN TELL IF YOU'VE GOT IT, EXCEPT A DOCTOR.
WELL LET'S GO OVER TO RIDGEWAY AND SEE A DOC ... I HEARD THERE WAS A "MEN'S DOCTOR" OVER THERE - YOU'RE PRETTY DUMB PHIL... DON'T YOU KNOW THIS IS A SERIOUS THING ?
...YOU DON'T WANT TO GO TO JUST ANYBODY — A "QUACK"... SEE YOUR OWN FAMILY DOCTOR, OR YOUR HEALTH DEPARTMENT.
GUESS YOU ARE RIGHT... AND DOCTORS DON'T TALK... I'M GOING TO SEE DR. CARTER!
LET'S GO THEN...
NOW ?
SURE... THE QUICKER YOU SEE A DOCTOR, THE BETTER CHANCE HE HAS OF CURING YOU. "RUN, DO NOT WALK..."
OK —
MAYBE I SHOULDN'T ASK, BUT DO YOU KNOW WHERE YOU GOT IT ?

SURE... SAME OLD STORY, I GUESS — Days
Phil tells Jim his story...

WON'T YOU SIT DOWN?
THANK YOU.
"YOU CAN TELL... AT LEAST I THOUGHT I COULD... ANYWAY — SHE WAS A STRANGER IN TOWN, AND ONE THING LED TO ANOTHER... I GUESS I WAS CRAZY..."
— I'VE JUST BEEN HERE A WEEK — YOU'RE SO FRIENDLY... I FEEL LIKE I'VE ALWAYS KNOWN YOU.
THAT'S HOW I MET HER — YOU KNOW THE REST —
YEAH, YEAH, I KNOW. I STILL SAY YOU WERE A DOPE.
AT DOCTOR CARTER'S OFFICE
HELLO PHIL... GLAD TO SEE YOU HOME. HERE FOR GOOD?
I GUESS I'M HOME TO STAY—

WHAT'S THE MATTER PHIL?
DOC... I THINK I'VE GOT GONORRHEA
MAYBE NOT, PHIL. STEP INTO THE LABORATORY AND LET'S MAKE AN EXAMINATION.
DON'T TAKE IT SO HARD—
LATER
YOU WERE RIGHT, PHIL... YOU DO HAVE GONORRHEA.
OHHHH—
WE HAVE A NEW DRUG THAT WILL CURE YOU IN A FEW HOURS.
YOU WERE SMART TO COME TO SEE ME AS SOON AS YOU NOTICED SOMETHING WRONG.

AS YOU KNOW, PHIL, YOU GOT THIS DISEASE FROM SOME GIRL YOU'VE BEEN OUT WITH.
IF YOU WILL GIVE ME HER NAME AND ADDRESS, WE CAN FIND AND CURE HER.... THAT IS HOW WE STOP THE SPREAD OF VENEREAL DISEASE.
WHO ELSE HAVE YOU BEEN OUT WITH DURING THE PAST WEEK ?
NOBODY.
NOBODY?
...WELL... BUT I'M SURE I DIDN'T GET IT FROM HER —
SHE MAY HAVE GOT IT FROM YOU, PHIL, AND SHE MUST BE TOLD ABOUT IT. DO YOU WANT TO TELL HER ?
BUT, DOC... WE'VE GOT TO KEEP HER OUT OF THIS... IT'S THE GIRL I'M ENGAGED TO... YOU KNOW HER.

WELL, I SEE... ALL THE MORE REASON WHY SHE MUST BE PROTECTED ...
YES... BUT... I... I JUST CAN'T TELL HER -
WELL, PHIL, YOU AND I ARE THE ONLY PEOPLE WHO KNOW THAT SHE HAS BEEN EXPOSED. AND GONORRHEA OFTEN DOESN'T SHOW UP IN WOMEN UNTIL IT'S TOO LATE ... ANY WOMAN WHO HAS BEEN EXPOSED TO IT SHOULD HAVE AN EXAMINATION.
DR. CARTER, I JUST CAN'T TALK ABOUT IT TO HER... COULDN'T YOU TELL HER FOR ME?
YES, I CAN HANDLE IT. JUST LEAVE IT TO ME.
THANK YOU, DOCTOR; THANK YOU
.... I'LL TELL YOU WHEN YOU GET HERE, HELEN ... FIFTEEN MINUTES... ALL RIGHT.
PHIL, WAIT IN THE NEXT ROOM — I WANT TO TALK TO HELEN ALONE.

. . . So Doctor Carter tells Helen what happened to Phil . . . and that Gonorrhea is a most serious disease in women because: many women do not know that they have it until the disease has done serious damage to their reproductive organs.

... SO YOU SEE, HELEN, PHIL WAS REALLY TRYING TO PROTECT YOU WHEN HE TOLD ME ABOUT YOU.... HE HAS ALREADY TAKEN TREATMENT AND WILL BE CURED ... I KNOW HE LOVES YOU ... AND I WOULDN'T LET ONE MISTAKE LEAD TO A GREATER ONE ... TRY TO UNDERSTAND HIS SIDE OF IT.
THANK YOU, DR. CARTER —— I'LL TRY TO UNDERSTAND.

NOW, HELEN, I'LL HAVE TO EXAMINE YOU FOR GONORRHEA —— MISS GORDON WILL TAKE YOU INTO THE EXAMINING ROOM.

After the examination
WELL, HELEN, MY EXAMINATION SHOWS THAT YOU HAVE GONORRHEA IN ITS EARLIEST STAGE ... I'LL GIVE YOU THE SAME TREATMENT I GAVE PHIL, AND THEN YOU'LL BOTH BE ALL RIGHT.

HELEN RECEIVES PENICILLIN
THANK YOU, DR. CARTER YOU'VE BEEN VERY KIND.
JUST A MOMENT, HELEN...
PHIL'S IN THE NEXT ROOM HE WANTS TO SEE YOU...
DR. CARTER TOLD ME ALL ABOUT IT... AND SOMETHING ELSE PHIL... I HAD SOME DATES WHILE YOU WERE AWAY... I WAS LONELY... AND IF I HAD GONE AS FAR AS YOU DID, I COULD HAVE GOTTEN A DISEASE...
HELEN I...
DARLING PLEASE— I UNDERSTAND
LOTS OF YOUNG PEOPLE MAKE MISTAKES THESE DAYS... BUT I GUESS WE'VE LEARNED THE HARD WAY THAT IT PAYS TO BE DECENT.
CAN YOU EVER FORGIVE ME, HELEN?
YES, I FORGIVE YOU.
OH— EXCUSE ME

MY FOLLOW UP EXAMINATION SHOWED THAT BOTH PHIL AND HELEN WERE COMPLETELY CURED. THEY MADE A MISTAKE — SEXUAL RELATIONS BEFORE MARRIAGE USUALLY LEAD TO SERIOUS CONSEQUENCES. FORTUNATELY FOR THIS YOUNG COUPLE EARLY TREATMENT SAVED POSSIBLE SERIOUS PHYSICAL DAMAGE. ALL YOUNG PEOPLE SHOULD KNOW THE TRUTH ABOUT SEX AND VENEREAL DISEASE.

How SUPERSTITIOUS are You?

Do you believe that black cats cause bad luck?

We won't argue about that—but there is no mystery about syphilis and gonorrhea. These diseases are caused by germs which pass from one person to another in close bodily contact, almost always during actual sexual intercourse.

Do you believe that finding a four-leaf clover will change your luck?

We won't argue about that—but it is a scientific fact that a sore on the sex organs, a "lip sore" which does not quickly heal, or a chronic sore throat, and a body rash may mean that you have caught syphilis. A burning sensation, while urinating, or a discharge from the sex organs may mean that you have gonorrhea.

Do you believe that a rabbit's foot means good luck?

We won't argue about that—but we want you to know that syphilis and gonorrhea cannot be cured by a rabbit's foot, by patent medicine, or by quack doctors. Don't depend on them.

Do you believe that a horseshoe wards off bad luck?

We won't argue about that—but you should know that untreated syphilis can cause heart disease, paralysis, insanity, and death. Untreated gonorrhea can lead to crippling and sterility (inability to become a parent). These ills cannot be warded off by horseshoes, but they can be prevented scientifically if treatment is taken in time.

Do you believe that Friday the 13th is an unlucky day?

We won't argue about that—but any day is a "lucky" day for a blood test and a thorough physical examination. If you think you may have syphilis or gonorrhea, go at once to your doctor or the public health clinic.

Don't be superstitious about venereal diseases!
BE SCIENTIFIC!

Science Knows That:

1. Syphilis and gonorrhea are not caught from toilet seats, drinking fountains, or casual contacts, but are spread by sexual relations.
2. The first signs, or symptoms, of syphilis and gonorrhea may go away without treatment, but this does not mean that the disease is at an end.
3. Patent medicines and quack doctors never cure syphilis and gonorrhea.
4. New drugs being used for the treatment of venereal diseases can cure early syphilis in approximately ten days and early gonorrhea in a few hours. If you suspect you have either of these diseases see your family doctor or go to your public health clinic AT ONCE.

January 24, 1953

Dear Sirs:

We had a lynching, or maybe a murder, in our county that will go unnoticed if we Negroes do not bring it to the attention of the public. I am hoping that through your assistance and through publication that we can get an investigation. This is the story:

On January 17, 1953 at the Houston and Dooly County line, approximately three miles from Unadilla, Georgia (Headquarters for the local KKK) Mr. A. B. Burnam, age 20, was killed by two white men, Mr. J. E. Scott and Charles Karson.

The following was told to me by an eye witness:

A. B. Burnam went to his wife's home on Friday night, January 16, at 7 p.m. His wife, Mrs. Mae Lizzie Haugabrooks Burnam lives on the place of J. E. Scott (white). She was not in, but had gone out with another fellow, Buck Kendrick, a boy friend (colored). Burnam went back three or four times looking for her. She finally came in with Buck Kendrick. When Buck embraced her on the front porch, Burnam stepped up and began a heated argument with his wife which led to a fight between the two of them. Buck Kendrick walked away to another house when they began to fight. Mrs. Alice Saunders, mother of Mrs. Burnam also left the house when her daughter and son-in-law began to fight. She went to the home of a neighbor just across the road and asked the neighbor, Johnnie Watkins (colored), to stop the two from fighting. He went to the house with Mrs. Saunders and Burnam's wife came out and told him that she and her husband had fought and that she wanted her husband to leave the house. Johnnie Watkins talked to Burnam , Mrs. Saunders, and Mae Lizzie Burnam and persuaded Burnam to get into the car with him and leave. Burnam went to the home of Mrs. Zeffie Letson (colored) where he lived. Early Saturday morning, Burnam returned to his wife's house on the J. E. Scott place and sent word to her that he was leaving her for good and that he wanted to get his clothes from the house. His wife said that she was afraid for him to come and get his clothes, and asked Johnnie Watkins to tell Mr. Scott, in Unadilla, to come down to her house, so she could give Burnam his clothes. Watkins told Mr. Scott what had gone on during the night, and told him that A. B. Burnam was a bad fellow and he would have to do something so that the woman could go home. Mr. Scott had been seeing Burnam's wife for several years, and it was understood that he wanted to do something to Burnman because he wanted Burnam's wife. Scott did not call the police, but rounded up a fellow-KKK named Charles Karson, RFD, Elko, Georgia. They armed themselves with rifles and a pistol and went after Burnam. They found him seated beside the road. The two men jumped out of the car and Karson shot Burnam in the stomach twice. Burnam turned and started to run up the road. Scott grabbed his rifle and shot him in the back. Burnam fell, and Scott walked up and shot him twice in the back while he was on the ground. (The eye-witness was in a house about fifty feet from the scene, and saw the whole incident. He said that the white men placed a knife in Burnam's hand after they had shot him. This was to establish that they had shot in self-defense.)

We know what the story will be about the killing, but we would like for you to help us publish the facts, and maybe we can get some one to bring these men to justice. It would mean much if the right people will get this information, for this is the third killing of this sort in the vicinity in the last two years.

Very truly yours,

DURING Brotherhood Week the South can note with great gratification that the lynching evil has almost disappeared and that the Ku Klux Klan as a flogging instrument of terror belongs to the past. There were no lynchings in 1952. The Ku Klux Klan received death blows due to the co-operation of Federal, state and local authorities and the deep interest of church groups, the press and the general public. For the first time since Reconstruction days the mask and the hood worn by the night-riders are no protection for them from jail terms but rather help to get them into jail.

Alabama, Florida, Georgia, South Carolina, Virginia and 52 key southern communities have passed anti-mask and anti-cross-burning laws and ordinances. But it was the penitentiary sentences given to floggers and terrorists wearing the robes which really signed the death warrant of the night-riding crowd during the past two years.

THOMAS L. HAMILTON, imperial wizard of the Carolina klans, was sentenced to four years at hard labor in a state court at Whiteville, N. C. He was one of 72 klansmen tried for the kidnaping and assaulting of a Negro woman, Mrs. Evergreen Flowers, her husband, Will, and a white neighbor, Mrs. Bessie Page, on the night of Jan. 18, 1951. Seventeen other klansmen were sentenced to prison terms ranging from 18 months to six years and the others, all of whom had pleaded either guilty or nolo contendere, received fines totaling $16,500 and suspended sentences.

THE Federal Government in the U.S. District Court at Wilmington, N. C., prosecuted 11 klansmen of Fairbluff, N. C. The Fairbluff klansmen flogged a number of people. In one case they made the mistake of carrying their victim, Mrs. Dorothy Martin, and her 40-year-old friend, Ben Grainger, across the state line into South Carolina, where the floggings were administered. This made them liable under the Federal kidnaping law. The indictment also charged the klansmen with "setting themselves as self-appointed arbiters of the morals of the community."

On the stand Mrs. Martin said that because of her blindfold she could not see her assailants but she recognized several of their voices, including that of Early Brooks. Federal Judge Gilliam acquitted one of the 11 defendants and found 10 guilty. Early Brooks was sentenced to five years in the Federal

Four of the defendants received three years each, while another drew a two-year term. The remaining four got off with suspended sentences.

THESE two trials, of course, ended the klan in the Carolinas. All over the South there were local prosecutions of masked floggers. In Chattanooga, klansmen got workhouse sentences for violence, though a lenient judge shortened their terms.

Bill Hendrix, grand dragon of the southern Knights of the Ku Klux Klan whose field of operations is chiefly Florida, is ending a three-year suspended prison sentence this month for misuse of the mails.

Apparently, Hendrix will not try to revive klan terrorism. He has now established what he calls the American Confederate Army. This attempt to trade on southern tradition has been tried elsewhere with little success. It is reported that for $5 a person can became a colonel in Bill Hendrix's Confederate Army. The new Confederate Army will not wear klan robes as Hendrix's followers have done in past years. They will wear "Confederate caps and ties," instead.

Hendrix claims that commissions in his Confederate Army have been handed out in 36 states. Actually, thus far, Hendrix's efforts to recruit "new Confederates" at so much a head has produced no observable result.

FOR a while Federal officials were balked in their investigations of the bombing of Miami, Fla., homes and churches in 1951. But finally on Dec. 10, 1952, a Federal grand jury indicted three "alleged members of the Ku Klux Klan" for making false statements under oath. Also indicted for perjury was Mrs. Helen Russell, Miami civic leader, who was accused of falsely denying that she had consulted with a committee of klansmen on ways and means of preventing Negroes from moving into a housing development.

The prison sentences given out by Federal and state courts have put courage into local law enforcement officials, down to the level of deputy sheriffs and constables. The disintegration of the Invisible Empire as a force for terrorism and lawlessness seems complete. Of course, there are vicious racketeers who will always try to dupe ignorant people and to get money from them in return for the privilege of wearing some sort of insignia which makes an ignorant man feel important.

But the day has passed in the South when such groups can assault innocent people without paying the penalty behind prison bars. That certainly is something that ought to be noted during National Brotherhood Week.

'Stupid Ignorant' to Join Klan, Says Ex-Leader on Way to Jail

RALEIGH, N. C., Feb. 28—(AP)—A disillusioned former Ku Klux Klan leader was taken to Petersburg, Va., Saturday to begin a four-year federal sentence for conviction on flogging charges.

Early L. Brooks, 44, one-time Fair Bluff police chief and Columbus County constable, had his North Carolina prison sentence reduced Friday to time served. He would have gotten out Nov. 7, with time off for good behavior.

"I was ignorant, just stupid ignorant" to join the Klan, Brooks declared. He said he thinks the secret order is dead because "anybody would be a fool to join an organization they knew would send them to prison."

Brooks was exalted cyclops of the Fair Bluff Klavern. He admitted he was present at floggings that led to a federal-state crackdown last summer, but insisted he "never used a lash on anyone."

CASES OF VIOLENCE PROBED IN FLORIDA

Much of 'Reign of Terror' Never Publicized, Says Miami Newspaper

MIAMI, Fla., March 2 (AP)—The Miami Herald says "a reign of terror perhaps unprecedented in Florida's history" is being investigated here by a Federal grand jury.

In a story by Dave Kraslow for the Tuesday edition, the paper says the "reign of terror" involves "numerous acts of violence in the central part of the state," most of which never have been publicized.

"These incidents include beatings of whites and Negroes, men and women, deaths in some cases resulting from injuries received in beatings, and dynamiting of an Orlando store," the Herald reports.

Kraslow said the jury is probing into the activities of two Ku Klux Klan Klaverns in Orlando, one in Apopka and one in Winter Garden.

One of the Orlando klaverns is affiliated with the Southern Knights of the KKK. The other three belong to the Association of Georgia Klans.

Conversation with grand jury witnesses, Graslow writes, indicated "it all hasn't been sunshine and citrus groves in the Orlando area, one of the state's most publicized garden spots. He said some of the witnesses were admitted klansmen.

Decline Comment

L. E. Broome and Emory S. Akerman, special assistants to the attorney-general who have been directing the jury's study, declined comment.

The grand jury has been investigating the bomb killings of a Negro couple at Mims, Fla., dynamiting of the Carver Village Negro housing project in Miami and attempted dynamitings of synagogues and a Catholic church in Miami.

"During the earlier phases of the Carver investigation," the Herald reports, "the jurors heard testimony from more than 25 former or present members of a klan klavern in Hialeah.

"Bill Hendrix of Tallahassee, grand dragon of the Southern Knights in Florida who reportedly resigned recently, also testified.

"Then the jury swung the spotlight to the Christmas night, 1951, blast at the Mims cottage of the Harry T. Moores.

"Moore, state co-ordinator for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, was killed instantly as he slept in his bedroom. His wife was fatally injured.

"Eight witnesses subpoenaed for Wednesday — including six from Apopka and two from Plymouth—are expected to be asked questions about the Mims incident, among others.

New Blast Rocks La. Strike Area

ELIZABETH, La., March 11—(AP)—A dynamite blast, the 57th incident in connection with a strike here, destroyed an auto today and the mayor of nearby Oakdale called for more state troopers to control "a situation that is verging on civil war."

Ten heavily armed state police already patrolled the 16-mile road of almost nightly violence between Elizabeth and Oakdale. AFL paper workers have been on strike at two mills since last fall, seeking a contract.

Oakdale Mayor C. H. Fenstermaker, comparing the situation to imminent civil war, said "I could tell you more but I am afraid of being dynamited. We need more help here."

A state trooper who surveyed the area said the people were so charged with explosive tension that "the backfire from a truck would blow this place right off the map."

The latest dynamite blast, the fifth in as many nights, destroyed a car owned by Leon Simon, Negro employee of the Calcasieu Paper Co., one of the two mills involved in the strike. The other is the Southern Industries, Inc., both owned by C. G. McGehee Sr. of Jacksonville, Fla.

No one was injured in the early morning blast.

The union sought a 25-cent hourly wage increase, but said its main goals were seniority, grievance and differential benefits.

Klan Enters Macon Row Over Contest

ATL WORLD 3-13-53

MACON, Ga. — (SNS) — No official action has been taken to stop William H. Dunn, 47-year-old Negro from running for water commissioner, although a white candidate has pleaded with white citizens "to wake up," and rumors are spreading that the Ku Klux Klan might intervene.

Dunn's announcement Tuesday that he would be a candidate for public office in Macon, set off a wave of surprise at first and later white citizens sought ways to stop him.

The candidate, who is the first to announce for public office in the county since Reconstruction, declared "I don't intend to withdraw," but admitted he might be forced to.

It was also announced that a faction of prominent Negro citizens might urge Dunn to withdraw. The Klan favored following this course of action also, it was revealed.

Meanwhile, City Attorney Ed. S. Sell, Jr., asserted, "It seems doubtful the city as an agency has the right to contest an individual's right to seek office. but some individual might have the right."

But one of Dunn's opponents isn't waiting for official action. E. L. Dyer, one of 16 white candidates, called a meeting at the City Hall in hopes of consolidating the white contestants.

Dyer, fearing a Negro bloc vote might sweep Dunn into office, urged that some of the candidates drop out in favor of white supremacy.

However, none of the candidates wanted to give up his chance, and the group adopted a "wait and see" attitude, until it was learned whether Dunn could be knocked out because of an alleged police record.

"I'm asking the white people to wake up," Dyer declared, and added he will challenge Dunn's right to run in Tuesday's meeting of the City Council.

Dyer, key opposition since Tuesday when Dunn announced he would run, said he discovered the Negro's past record while in the City Hall where he is employed.

Commenting further on means to halt Dunn from seeking office, the city attorney pointed out that "All qualifications or disqualifications relate not to the running but the holding of office."

Accord Sought In Mill Strike

ELIZABETH, La., March 14—(UP)—Paper mill officials talked of giving "yes or no" answers to two unions Saturday in another conference seeking the settlement of a bitter six-month strike.

Negotiators for both sides were meeting in this off-the-highway company town in southwest Louisiana where violence exploded last week end.

Since Sept. 13, when 500 workers walked out at the Calcasieu Paper Co. and Southern Industries, Elizabeth has reeled under the blows of hit and run dynamite terrorists.

Few persons were hurt, but cars and homes were wrecked.

States police armed with shotguns maintained heavy patrols.

MACON, March 17—(INS)—A 6-foot cross was burned last night in front of the home of a Negro city water commission candidate in Macon whose right to seek the office was challenged yesterday in a law suit.

Police said the crude cross was wrapped in burlap, soaked in gasoline and set afire. It was left on a crude stand in the street in front of the home of William H. Dunn.

Dunn was not at home when the cross was burned.

Federal Grand Jury Reports On State 'Catalog of Terror'

Inquisitorial Body at Miami Probing Racial Violence and Klan Activity Makes Public Findings

FLA TIMES UNION 3-26-53

MIAMI, March 25 (AP)—A federal grand jury investigating racial violence and the Ku Klux Klan in Florida today brought in a report of what it called a "catalog of terror that seems incredible."

The partial report was made public after it was submitted to Judge John W. Holland by grand jury Foreman Hugh Purvis.

The 12-page report also was signed by L. E. Broome and Emory S. Akerman, Washington, special assistants to the attorney general who have been directing the probe since last Oct. 6.

After detailing acts of violence for which the grand jury said the Ku Klux Klan was responsible, the report said:

"It is founded on the worst instincts of mankind. At its best, it is intolerant and bigoted. At its worst it is sadistic and brutal. Between these two poles it has its existence.

"The KKK has been placed on the list of subversive organizations prepared by the Justice Department. Its place there is well deserved.

"In its own perverted way it is as destructive of basic American liberties as communism itself, and its very existence is calculated to breed more communism."

Most of the terroristic outrages listed in the report occurred in Central Florida where, the jury commented, "such things have been going on for years." The remainder occurred in Miami.

Like the Carver Village bombings in Miami and the bomb murders of Harry T. Moore and his wife at Mims, some of these incidents, the jury said, "are already bywords. Others are brought to light for the first time."

The jury recommended to the State Legislature, which convenes in April, that a law be enacted "with comprehensive requirements and with real teeth" to control the use of dynamite. This explosive was used in Carver Village, Mims and Miami synagogue bombings.

The jury probed activities and organizations of at least five Klan klaverns—the John B. Gordon Kalvern at Hialeah, two units in Orlando and one each in Winter Garden and Apopka.

"We deem it proper to give a brief account of the acts of terror and violence that have come under our scrutiny," the report said. "Not all of them are attributed to casion. "Reason for beating: union activity."

On Easter Sunday, 1950, an orange picker of Winter Garden was taken out by a group of men and was later found with a fractured skull.

In April, 1951, a Negro was pulled from his bed at a home in Winter Garden by a group of unidentified men. He was driven to a lonely spot in an orange grove and severely beaten. He was reported missing the next day, was found and taken to a hospital in Orlando.

"There it was found," the report added, "that he had not only been beaten but shot—in the back. He died."

In November, 1951, a creamette in Orlando was bombed after the management had been warned to provide a window each for its white and Negro trade.

A janitor of the First National Bank in Winter Garden was beaten by unidentified persons and in 1952 a cab driver of Winter Garden was flogged by klansmen. An employe of an ice plant in Sanford was beaten. Reason unknown.

Some of the Miami indicents:

About nine klansmen, in May, 1947, from the Gordon klavern, visited a Hialeah resident and "discussed' with him certain domestic difficulties he was having at the time. "The discussion was not friendly."

In 1947, the home of Mamie Woodward was burned to the ground. The house was in a white residential area but was occupied by a Negro family.

Four klansmen, from the Gordon chapter, in 1946, burned a cross in the front yard of a fellow member "because he had been talking too much. It was a warning and a threat."

A number of large "K's" were burned in various locations in Miami on July 14, 1951, by members of the Gordon klavern. The burnings were in or on the fringe of Negro residential areas.

In April, 1950, klan stickers were found plastered on a picture show in Ft. Lauderdale, which was then

Not all of them are attributed to the Klan.

"The plaintive wail has often been heard that the Klan does not stand for lawlessness but is blamed for acts committed by others.

"We therefore do not attribute any act to the Klan, or to its members, except in instances where one or more of its members have admitted participation."

The jury said that two years before the Moore murders on Christmas night, 1951, a floor plan to the Moore house was exhibited at a meeting of a Central Florida klavern. It added that newspaper clippings of Moore's activities were read at klavern meetings and that mention of him was made on other occasions and in other places.

The jury added that Central Florida klaverns were "known to have evinced a malevolent interest in Moore."

Moore, a Negro, was state coordinator for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People at the time he and his wife were killed in an explosion that wrecked their home at Mims.

The jury listed these terroristic acts in Central Florida:

A white man was beaten near Oviedo in 1943 by six klansmen.

A white man and woman were beaten near Winter Garden in 1943 by three klansmen, "perhaps others."

Near Winter Garden in 1944, a white man was beaten by five klansmen. The reason given was drinking and neglecting his family.

In 1945 near Winter Garden, a white man was beaten by four klansmen for "molesting a girl."

Two white girls in 1947 were taken from a secluded lake near Ocee by five klansmen, "driven to a lonely spot in an orange grove and severely beaten. It was nighttime and the reason given was 'they were bathing in the nude'."

Near Ocoee in 1948 a white woman was beaten by five klansmen.

In 1949 a large group of klansmen participated in the burning of a shack near Apopka because the occupant, a white man, was said to be molesting girls. "Later the same group undertook to administer a 'treatment' but the victim escaped through the woods."

A Negro man in 1949 near Apopka was beaten by five klansman for "sassing white women."

In 1950 two attempts were made to beat a Negro near Apopka, "each time by the approximately same group of klansmen." They were successful on the second occin Ft. Lauderdale, which was then running a movie by the name of "Pinky." The picture dealt with crossing white and Negro blood.

The jury said this "catalog of terror . . . is not complete. Details grow monotonous through sheer repetition."

It said "one man withdrew from the hooded order because he drew a line at flogging white people, and another was sometimes restrained even by his fellow klansmen because he was too brutal. Another withdrew because the klansmen indulged in practices for which they punished others."

Commenting on these acts, the jury said "It is obvious that they are primarily within the jurisdiction of the state police power. Federal jurisdiction where it exists is only incidental to some other offense and is wholly inadequate. It is inherently a problem for state and local authorities."

Broome and Akerman said the jury's recess would last about six weeks. After it returns, the jury will hear more witnesses and "consider criminal aspects over which there may be federal jurisdiction," they added.

4 Convicted In Picket Line Attack

A jury convicted four CIO meatpackers Tuesday in the ambush beating of three employees who tried to cross picket lines at Star Provision Co., 1200 Howell Mill Rd., N. W.

Criminal Judge Luther Alverson said he will fix sentence at 11 a.m. Wednesday. Maximum penalty is 18 months in jail and a $1,000 fine.

A five-man jury was told:

1. The three victims, none of them union members, started to cross a picket line at 7 a. m. Jan. 23.

2. A cry of "go get 'em boys" sounded in the line.

3. The four men leaped from behind a sign-board wielding an iron pipe, a brick and heavy meat hooks.

4. They alternately held and beat the three nonunionists.

The jury brought in its verdict in 20 minutes.

The convicted men all are members of the CIO's United Packinghouse Workers of America, Local 111. They are:

Golden Thornton, 1063 West Peachtree St., N. E.; Sam Murchison, 553 Griffin St., N. W.; Allen Horton, 433 Fourth St., N. W., and Frank Thompson, of a Lawson Street, S. W., address.

The two-month strike at Star ended in mid-February.

Attorney, White Employee Receive Threatening Notes

AR WORLD 4-8-53

KNOXVILLE, Tenn. — (SNS) — Crude crosses were burned last week in front of the residences of Attorney George W. McDade and Miss Beulah Boston, a white employee of the wealthy lawyer.

Mr. McDade was arrested in Miss Boston's apartment on March 13 and both were charged with common law lewdness.

Typewriten notes were reportedly found at the scenes of the burnings. Police said the notes were written on official looking stationery bearing KKK insignia. The note reportedly found in Mr. McDade's yard read :'Stay away from white women." The one found at Miss Boston's said: "We do not approve of your recent act. This is your first and final warning."

McDade's trial was originally set for April 3, but was re-set for April 24. The arresting officers said that the attorney was fully clad and Miss Boston was in pajamas.

The attorney maintained that he went to the woman's apartment to take food since she had been ill and was unable to work.

Besides his real estate holdings, McDade owns and operates several tourist homes for white only, and has several white men and women as managers of these courts.

Mrs. Fredda Staples, daughter of Mr. McDade, gave the following account of the Cross burning. She said: "A neighbor saw an old model black car careen down the street and set the cross out then speed away. It was wrapped with burlap, which was gasoline soaked. When I saw the burning cross I immediately called my father and he instructed me to put it out. Fortunately a garden hose was connected and I turned it on and put out the fire; then threw the remains in the gutter. Shortly after I returned to the house, firemen, policemen, reporters, and photographers came, and neighbors begin to mill around. The cross was taken from the gutter, and held by two policemen while pictures were taken of it. Then the firemen used an extinguisher on the remains, to make sure it was out," stated an officer."

NO CALLS

"I did not call the fire department, police or any one. I questioned all the neighbors and no one had reported the incident. How did all of these people know of the incident within minutes of its happening?" she said.

Mrs. Staples further stated that she was the first to reach the scene; that she extinguished the fire and threw the remains in the gutter, and that she did not see a note on the cross or in the street and that no officer enter her property. "Where did the note come from," she queried. I inquired of an officer (I do not know his name, neither did I take his badge number) "Why all the fanfare over a small incident." He was rude and loud in telling me to mind my own business ... later another officer apologized for his conduct.

CROSS BURNED ON MORNINGSIDE

Thursday night, April 2, a crude burlap wrapped cross was burned on the edge of the yard of two elderly white ladies on Morningside Drive a short distant from the scene of the April 1 incident. Mrs. Shannon a neighbor and longtime merchant on Vine Avenue said, "the neighborhood is shocked over this incident, why should anyone want to harm two women who have done good in a community for many years? These women are christians and good neighbors; one of whom is ill, and to have upset them in this manner, without just cause, is deplorable."

Several police cars answered the call, but no arrest was made. It is thought the incident was the work of pranksters.

Candidate Warned By Note, Cross Burning

SMITHFIELD, N. C. — In spite of the burning of a cross in his yard and the leaving of a note under the mat on his front porch warning him to withdraw, Walter Sanders Jr., remains in the campaign for a seat on the town board. He is the first Negro in the history of Smithfield to seek a post on the town's governing body.

"You are not wanted as a town commissioner. You had better withdraw your name, if you know what is good for you," the note warned the undertaker.

MEANTIME, Mrs. Dollie Sanders, wife of the candidate and former school teacher, said: "We've received many telephone calls from white and Negro friends telling us they regretted the incident happened and urged my husband to stay in the race. It was a shock to us, of course."

Chief of Police Bill Norton said a heavy downpour of rain after the cross was ignited washed away clues, "but we're doing everything we can."

HE RULED OUT the cross burning as work of the Ku Klux Klan and said he had never heard of any Klan activity in Smithfield. The chief recalled that he grew up here and had been engaged in law enforcement work for nearly two decades.

Chief Norton decided the incident apparently was not the work of a prankster in view of

Blasts Continue In Struck Town

ELIZABETH, La., April 16—(AP). State police said Thursday one car was dynamited and another fired upon in the third straight night of violence in this strike-truobled papermill town.

A dynamite blast demolished a car owned by Dallas Walker, papermill worker, and Ernest Johnson told state police his truck was fired upon while driving near his home at nearby Pitkin last night.

Walker's car was parked near his home when the dynamite blast occurred, but police said no injuries were reported.

State police said Johnson is neither a striker nor a worker at the strikebound Valcasieu Paper Co. or the jointly owned Southern Industries, Inc.

The strike began at both papermills last September in a dispute over a work contract.

The workers are members of the International Brotherhood of Pulp, Sulphite and Papermill Workers, both AFL.

The unions have said that wages are not an issue in the dispute.

I Quit Fla. Klan, Hendrix Repeats

AP CONST 4.30.53

TALLAHASSEE, Fla., April 29. (INS)—Bill Hendrix today made one of his numerous announcements that he has resigned as head of the Ku Klux Klan in Florida.

Hendrix, who said last fall that he would cease being the leader of the hooded order on Jan. 1, said today's action should be considered his final resignation.

He claimed to have severed "all connections or affiliations with any Klan group."

Hendrix' order was known as the Southern Knights of the Ku Klux Klan. He claimed the organization now has ceased to exist since its program, as established in 1948, had been carried out.

Anti-Klan Bill Defeated In North Carolina

RALEIGH, N. C. — (INS) — The North Carolina Senate defeated by a two-vote margin Wednesday a bill which would have outlawed the Ku Klux Klan and the Communist party in the state.

The measure, which had been repeatedly amended in committees to overcome objections of fraternal organizations and labor unions, was beaten down by a 20-18 vote.

However, since 11 Senators were absent when the ballot was taken, there is a good possibility sponsers will seek to have the vote reconsidered and have it passed before the legislature adjourns next week.

Sol. Clifton L. Moore, of Burgaw, who sent some 80 Klansmen to jail when the hooded order was smashed in Columbus County last year, drew up the bill.

The measure would have prohibited secret meetings and the wearing of hoods or any disguises except by children and at costume parties.

Sen. Hamilton Hobgood, of Franklin County, read the solons a letter from Junius Scales, of High Point, and acknowledged leader of the Communist party in North Carolina.

Klan Trial For 19 More Set Monday

WILMINGTON (AP).—The federal government, which joined state officers to break a wave of Ku Klux Klan terrorism in the Carolinas last year, will call 19 more alleged Klansmen to trial here Monday.

The men, accused of flogging a white South Carolina farmer during the reign of terror that gripped the Columbus County, N. C., and Horry County, S. C., areas, have been indicted on two counts—kidnaping and conspiracy.

They are charged with seizing George Kemper Smith at his home near Nichols, S. C., in October of 1951, taking him to a point near Fair Bluff, N. C., and flogging him with thick belts attached to pick handles.

Seven of the defendants were convicted in a similar case last year during which Federal Judge Don Gilliam spoke out repeatedly against Thomas L. Hamilton, Imperial Wizard of the hooded order. Hamilton, later convicted in state court, is now serving a four-year sentence. Two of the defendants will have sons standing trial with them.

No Klan activity has been reported since the FBI, aided by state and county officers, rounded up about a dozen Klansmen early last year. Their arrests were followed by a series of raids in North Carolina during which scores of Klansmen, many of them convicted, were rounded up. The state has since outlawed the KKK.

The five defendants who are now serving time were identified by the FBI as Early L. Brooks, former Fair Bluff police chief; Horace S. Strickland, former Columbus County deputy sheriff; Pittman Strickland, a Cerro Gordo farmer; Eddie Carl Richardson, Fair Bluff farmer; and Hezikiah Ross Enzor, Fair Bluff farmer.

Two others, Bobby Brooks, a son of Early, and L. C. Worley, are on probation in another Klan case.

Five defendants are South Carolinians. They are George English Cook, Leo Walter Harrelson and Troy Leon Gerald, all farmers from near Mullins, John Gordon Neeley, a Green Sea farmer; and Gilbert Enzor, a Nichols farmer.

The other seven, all North Carolinians, are Carroll D. Grainger, Fair Bluff farmer; Robert L. Hammond, Cerro Gordo; James Edwin Brooks, Raleigh, another son of Early; Simon T. Enzor; Ed Floyd Rogers Jr., John A. Shaw and his son, John Porter Shaw, all Fair Bluff farmers.

19 Ruled Guilty in Flog Case

WILMINGTON, N. C., May 18—(AP)—Nineteen men declared to be Ku Klux Klansmen were convicted on charges of kidnaping and conspiracy here today. The charges stemmed from a wave of Klan terrorism that gripped the Carolinas.

The men were accused of flogging a white South Carolina farmer during the reign of terror that gripped Columbus County, N. C., and Horry County, S. C.

They were charged with seizing George Kemper Smith at his home near Nichols, S. C., in October, 1951, taking him to a point near Fair Bluff, N. C., and flogging him with thick belts attached to pick handles.

Federal Judge Don Gilliam sentenced three defendants to three-year prison terms. Four received one-year sentences and seven were placed on probation.

Five other defendants, now serving prison sentences following their conviction in a similar case last year, escaped without additional punishment. Judge Gilliam said he had already punished them for their "Klan activities in general."

Actually, they drew short sentences which, in each case, will run concurrently with the time now being served.

Eighteen defendants pleaded no defense to the charges today. Robert L. Hammond of Cerro Gordo pleaded innocent to the kidnaping charge but waived a jury trial. The judge found him guilty after hearing testimony of three government witnesses.

Drawing three years each were John A. Shaw of Fair Bluff, Leo W. Harrelson and Troy L. Gerald, both of near Mullins, S. C.

6 MEN ARE INDICTED IN FLORIDA TERROR

Accused of Perjury in Denying They Were Members of Klan or Had Joined in Violence

Special to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

MIAMI, Fla., June 3—Six men were indicted on charges of perjury in Miami today by the Federal grand jury investigating terrorism and bombings in Florida. They were ordered to surrender in Miami June 19 for arraignment in Federal District Court.

They were charged with perjury when they denied to the grand jury that they were members of the Ku Klux Klan or that they had taken part in a series of violent acts in Middle Florida from 1949 to 1952.

A seventh man, identified by the Department of Justice as Simon Smith Manning, 50 years old, of Orlando, was indicted on two counts of perjury in applying for a job at the Orlando Air Base.

The six named in the perjury indictments are:

William J. Bogar, 54, of Apopka, former exalted ruler of the Apopka Klavern, and a member of its executive committee.

Harvey S. Reisner, 30, exalted cyclops of the Apopka Klavern in 1952.

T. J. McMennamy, 25, and Emmet M. Hart, 30, members of the Apopka Klavern.

Robert L. Juday, 31, of Winter Garden, member of the Winter Garden Klavern.

Ernest Glenn Morton, 23, of Apopka.

Bogar is charged with eight counts of perjury in his grand jury appearance. One involved his denial that he had taken part in the attempted abduction of two Negro lawyers and two Negro newspaper reporters near Mount Dora Aug. 4, 1949, after a trial at Tavares of defendants in the so-called Groveland rape case.

The Groveland case involved the raping of a 17-year-old white farm wife by three Negroes in August, 1949, at Groveland, Fla., an incident that touched off a wave of terrorism in Florida.

The testimnoy revealed that

Negro lawyers and two Negro newspaper reporters near Mount Dora Aug. 4, 1949, after a trial at Tavares of defendants in the so-called Groveland rape case.

The Groveland case involved the raping of a 17-year-old white farm wife by three Negroes in August, 1949, at Groveland, Fla., an incident that touched off a wave of terrorism in Florida.

The testimnoy revealed that Horace Hill, of Daytona Beach, Franklin Williams, New York City attorney for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Romona Lowe of The Chicago Defender and Ted Poston of The New York Post, had been riding from the trial in an automobile when a group of Klansmen attempted to waylay them.

The four escaped in a wild chase that continued almost to Orlando.

Beatings Are Cited

Bogar, Hart and McMennamy are charged with taking part in the chase, although they denied it. Morton is charged with knowing of the plot and being in the group, although he was said to have left before the events took place.

Morton gave a detailed statement to agents of the Federal Bureau of Investigation investigating the incident, the indictment declares, but reversed his statements when he appeared as a grand jury witness a few weeks later.

Other incidents involved in the indictments, in which one or more defendants were named, were the beating of Albert Boykin, an Apopka Negro, for union activities, in the summer of 1950, a previous unsuccessful attempt to abduct Mr. Boykin, and the flogging of Ivan Eilbeck after his abduction from his home in Apopka.

Juday and Reisner were identified as participants in the floggings and Bogar was connected with the burning of a shack on the outskirts of Apopka, occupied by a man accused of molesting small girls.

The killing of Harry T. Moore, Negro educator, and his wife, in a bombing at Mims, Fla., Dec. 25, 1951, was mentioned by the grand jury only as having been investigated.

The indictments set out that the grand jury, which is headed by Hugh Purvis, had been studying the activities and organization of the Ku Klux Klan to determine whether it had a policy of advocating or approving acts of violence to deny constitutional rights to any individual, and if any Federal employes were members. The Klan has been on the Attorney General's list of subversive organizations since 1947.

In a previous report, the grand jury detailed a long list of incidents it called "a catalog of terror that seems incredible." The indictments Wednesday were in connection with events listed in this report.

After making its report without comment, the jury recessed. L. E. Broome and Emory S. Akerman, Special Assistants to the Attorney General, who have directed the jury investigation, will return to Washington pending the development of further evidence by the Federal Bureau of Investigation.

2 Newspapers Earn Pulitzer Prizes For Fighting the K. K. K.

6 Indicted In Florida Klan Probe

ATL CONST 6-4-53

MIAMI, Fla., June 3 (AP)—Six persons, five identified as Ku Klux Klan members, were indicted on perjury charges today by a federal grand jury winding up a long investigation of racial terrorism in Florida.

Defendants were ordered to surrender here June 19 for arraignment in Federal Court. They were charged with lying under oath when they denied that they were Klan members and that they took part in Klan violences in Central Florida in 1949 and 1950.

The jury identified those indicted as:

William J. Bogar, 54, of Apopka, head of the Klokan committee of the Apopka Klavern in 1949 and its exalted cyclops in 1950.

T. J. McMennamy, 25, of Apopka, a member of the Apopka Klavern.

Robert L. Judah, 31, of Winter Garden, a member of the Winter Garden Klavern.

Harvey S. Reisner, about 30, of Apopka, exalted cyclops of the Apopka Klavern in 1952.

Emmet M. Hart, about 30, a member of the Apopka Klavern.

Ernest Glen Morton, about 23, of Apopka.

A seventh man, Simon Smith Manning, 50, of Orlando, was indicted on charges that he made false statements in applying for a job at the Orlando Air Base in 1951 when he said he had never been convicted and was not a Klan member.

Klan Second To M'Carthy, Daniels Jabs

ATL CONST 6-11-53

NEW YORK, June 10—(UP)—Editor and author Jonathan Daniels said today that the evil spirit of the Ku Klux Klan is not as bad as the intolerant attitude shown by some U. S. senators.

Daniels, editor of the Raleigh (N. C.) News & Observer, said "patriotism for politics" is a more dangerous force than "country hoodlums" masked in "bedsheets."

In an apparent reference to Senator McCarthy (R., Wis.), Daniels said:

"The senator who wore congressional immunity like a mask when he dared question the loyalty of General Marshall was meaner and more cowardly than any dolt in a sheet or a sack. The same is true of those who bring unsupported charges against men, organizations and universities."

"In terms of tolerance in America today," he said, "all of us live close to danger."

Daniels spoke at a luncheon at which the Sidney Hillman Foundation presented awards for outstanding journalism to two Southern newspaper editors for their successful fight against the Ku Klux Klan.

Awards went to Willard Cole, editor of the Whiteville, N. C., News Reporter; W. Horace Carter, editor of the Tabor City, N. C., Tribune; and Jay Jenkins, special writer for the Raleigh News & Observer, for exposing Klan activities leading to the convictions of 100 leaders.

Florida Klan Trial Seen in September

MIAMI, June 20—(UP)—Six central Florida Ku Klux Klansmen charged with lying to a Federal Grand Jury probably will be brought to trial here in September, a government attorney said Saturday.

The six pleaded innocent when arraigned Friday before Federal Judge George W. Whitehurst. They were indicted June 3 in a climax to the most concerted federal action ever taken against the Klan in Florida. The Grand Jury investigated acts of terrorism in central Florida and Miami two years ago.

Five were reputed members of the Apopka Klavern of the KKK. They are William J. Bogar, T. J. McMennany, Emmet Hart, Harvey A. Reisner and Ernest Glen Morton. The sixth was Robert L. Jodah of Winter Garden.

Ex-Dragon Says Klan Is Extinct

Hiram W. Evans, national leader of the Ku Klux Klan in its prime, said Sunday that the hooded order "is practically extinct . . . and there's little need for it anyway."

Bill Hendrix, a Tallahassee contractor and former grand dragon of the Florida KKK, announced Saturday night that Klan representatives from six states met at Columbus to revive the Klan to fight non-segregation.

Evans, imperial wizard of the Klan from 1922 to 1939, when it was a potent political force and claimed a membership of 8,000,000 at one time, said that such meetings were "little abortive things."

"I don't think there's any need for the Klan anymore," he said. "We are pretty well united and we have a good president."

When asked if he was invited to attend the meeting, Evans said the only thing he knew about it was what "I read in the newspapers."

Hendrix called non-segregation "a Communist program to take over America," and he said the 299 Klansmen and sympathizers purportedly attending the meeting vowed to oppose the National Council of Churches, "modernist" preachers, the new Bible, the Anti-Defamation League and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

"We will fight by every means to protect our constitutional rights, even if we are forced to bear arms," Hendrix said.

Representatives from Georgia, South Carolina, Florida, Ohio, Missouri and Pennsylvania elected him imperial emperor at the meeting, he added.

He said the KKK was organized to conduct a nationwide "educational campaign" against non-segregation, which he said is a communist program to take over America."

Cross Burned In Front Of Negro Candidate's Home

ATL WORLD 9-2-53

MACON—(SNS)— Apparent resentment over a second Negro running for water commissioner flared Monday night when a blazing cross was seen in front of the home of Edward B. Brown.

Brown, who announced his intention to run for public office recently, passed his home at 316 Emery Highway where a crowd had gathered while the flames were being put out, but continued to another destination.

Unidentified terrorists had placed the six-foot high cross, which was wrapped in gasoline-soaked burlap, in the walkway of the house.

Police questioned about 20 people, but reported all denied seeing anyone place the cross in front of the house. No one had seen any autos or trucks in the vicinity, police said.

However, Chief of Police Ben T. Watkins, said an ninvestigatio would continue.

Watkins, said an investigation

Brown was later quoted by police as saying he didn't know what the trouble was when he passed his house. He said he was going over to East Macon to pick up his wife when he passed his own home.

A cross was burned in front of William Dunn's home last spring when he was a candidate for water commissioner. No one was ever arrested in connection with that cross burning.

White Leader Flogged; Defied Jim Crow Policy

ATL WORLD 9-8-53

JACKSONVILLE, Fla.— A white union staff member who defied his Dixie Director's Jim Crow policy was brutally beaten this week in front of a CIO union hall.

Ku Klux Klan-like violence against the bold equal rights policy of the United Packinghouse Workers of America, CIO, broke out here just as thousands of delegates to the 54nd National Elks Convention in Atlanta voted unanimously to back up that union's anti-discrimination program.

Jack Telfer, UPWA program coordinator who reported the ousting of Negro members from a union banquet by A. O. McKinney, Director of UPWA's eight-state District 9, was flogged by foour hoodlums led by an agent of the Director.

UNION'S EQUAL RIGHTS

Beaten and warned to "leave town," the savage attack upon the white representative who upheld the union's equal rights policy was led by Archie Brookins, a former UPWA field representative.

McKinney is officially charged with violating the union's dynamic equal right's policy and has opened a "secession" movement among local unions in the Southern District in an effort to avoid facing a trial which may lead to expulsion from UPWA.

A strong resolution passed by the recent Elk's convention's Civil Right's Committee and adopted by the entire convention noted the Dixie Director's attempt to "pull out" of the meat packing union and placed that powerful fraternal organization solidly in support of the civil rights fight conducted by UPWA.

LABOR MOVEMENT

"We wholeheartedly endorse the militant equal rights campaign being waged by the United Packinghouse Workers of America, CIO." The Elks resolution stated, "we condemn any attempt to destroy or sabotage this much-needed campaign.

"The Packinghouse Workers, CIO, have placed the Director of one of their Southern Districts under charges of violating the union's civil rights policy," the resolution continued and pointed out that this was "the first time in the history of the labor movement that steps have been taken to expel a leading official because of anti-Negro activities."

FROM ITS RANKS

Noting that "The outcome of this unprecedented attempt by the Packinghouse Union to clean out all discrimination from its ranks sets a precedent which may become the pattern for other organizations in the field," the Elks convention described UPWA's anti-discrimination drive as "pioneering."

Telfer, treated for contusions by Dr. John Black of Jacksonville, Fla., refused to "leave town." He spoke to members of a local union here who had mistakingly turned some $1,000 of their treasury over to a "McKinney Defense Fund" and had disaffiliated from UPWA. They voted unanimously to correct their mistake and to regain affiliation.

Meanwhile, the giant National Baptist Convention, USA, Inc., meeting in Florida were set to throw the bulk of their weight into a demand for community and national support for the equal rights program of the packinghouse union.

4 Capital Indictments Returned in Bus Blasting

AUGUSTA, Sept. 10—(AP)—Four men, charged with dynamiting a Negro church and Augusta Coach Co. property, were indicted on capital charges today by the Richmond County Grand Jury and returned to jail to await October trial when their bail appeal was denied.

In all, a total of 15 felony indictments were returned against the quartet and a fifth person, Richard Dyson, who is out on bond as his charge was not a capital offense punishable by death.

The grand jury indicted Harold W. Carswell of Augusta (an ex-fireman and co-organizer of the Union Cab Co.) on one charge of wilfully damaging the Spring Branch Baptist Church by explosives. That is a capital offense.

The grand jury also indicted Carswell for the unlawful possession of tools used in commission of crimes in violation of the law. The indictment specified dynamite and caps. He was also indicted for the assault with intent to murder W. M. Hunt on Aug. 17.

Indicted along with Carswell on the capital offense charges were E. S. Knox, a striking union bus driver; Emory Grayson Boatright, a former employee of plant Urquhart, and R. S. Dixon, secretary-treasurer of the striking bus union.

Lodged against these latter three are also two charges each of the unlawful possession of tools used in the commission of crimes in violation of the law. This charge is also made against Dyson.

Striking Oil Was Too Much for Her Heart?

ABERDEEN, Miss., Sept. 10 — (AP) — Excitement over a promising oil discovery on her barren 80-acre farm apparently was too much for Mrs. J. B. Snow, friends said today.

The 70-year-old woman died last night—three weeks after the oil discovery and one week after a heart attack.

LAUNDRY HEAD BRUTALLY HITS WOMAN WHO DIDN'T ANSWER HIM WITH DEMANDED 'YES, SIR'

By Lewis K. McMillan

ORANGEBURG — The McCoy Laundry of Orangeburg was thrown into an uproar Wednesday afternoon, when the proprietor struck a young Negro woman empolyee back of the head with a solid stick.

The blow is said to have been so hard that it broke the rough stick in two, leaving an ugly wound back of the head just above the ear.

Didn't Say "Yes Sir"

Mrs. Lue Emma Burgess, the victim of her employer's fury, gives this version of the incident:

Mr. McCoy asked the young woman working next to her if the Carolina Courts clothes had gone out. The answer was "Yes sir.." He then asked Mrs. Burgess if the Magnolia Courts' clothes had gone out. She answered "Yes." Thereupon McCoy ordered her to answer him always "Yes sir." "Don't you answer me, 'yes', You must say, 'Yes sir' to me." "Well, I am sorry I didn't know that kind of answer would take such an effect," continued Mrs. Burgess, "but that is the way I answer everybody."

"If you can't say, 'Yes sir,' get the hell out of here," repeated Mr. McCoy several times, according to the statement of Mrs. Burgess.

The anger of the employer seemed to rise to white heat. After punching the clock, Mrs. Burgess returned to look for her belt and one or two other objects which she had left behind in the excitement, she says that McCoy struck her across the the lower part of her head, breaking in two something like a two inch square solid stick.

answer would take such an effect," continued Mrs. Burgess, "but that is the way I answer everybody."

"If you can't say, 'Yes sir,' get the hell out of here," repeated Mr. McCoy several times, according to the statement of Mrs. Burgess.

The anger of the employer seemed to rise to white heat. After punching the clock, Mrs. Burgess returned to look for her belt and one or two other objects which she had left behind in the excitement, she says that McCoy struck her across the the lower part of her head, breaking in two something like a two inch square solid stick.

Mrs. Burgess says that she reported the incident to the Police Department, but instead of informing her how to swear out a warrant for the arrest of the attacker, she was given the name of some lawyer "across from the Post Office." The name of the "lawyer across from the Post Office'" Mrs. Burgess could not recall. She reports however that he asked her, "Why didn't you answer Mr. McCoy the right way?"

So that ended Mrs. Burgess' interview with the lawyer. The Police Department, so far as she knows, has done nothing about the matter. She finds the answer in the fact that her attacker is a white man and she, a colored woman. There is, of course, no doubt as to the action the Police Department would have taken, had Mr. McCoy been a Negro man and Mrs. Burgess a White woman.

Most of the McCoy Laundry's help are Negroes: About 24 colored women or over against 3 or 4 white women; 4 Negro men or over against 1 or 2 white men.

Other Women Protest

The Negro employee sdid no more work the afternoon of McCoy's alleged attack on Mrs. Burgess. There was about one hour remaining before knocking off time. That was Wednesday. Thursday morning all the Negro employees returned, but the women(Negro) are said to have demanded a group conference with the proprietor before they would return to work.

They sent word to him, when he was reported out of town at his Dixie Laundry in Columbia, that they were going home, and would not work until he met with them and apologized to Mrs. Burgess. They went home, all of them (or, so it is alleged), demanding a conference with McCoy Friday morning, together with their week's pay. The appointed time came Friday morning, and yet no McCoy.

Finally he is said to have met with colored employees 4 o'clock Friday afternoon, when a number of the women are said to have spoken out freely and boldly to the boss. One went so far as to say, "Now, Mr. McCoy, Lincoln freed the slaves long ago. You have no right to strike any Negro, especially a Negro woman."

This reporter interviewed Mrs. Burgess and a number of the other employees Saturday evening. Mr. McCoy was out of town and could not be reached. From all appearances Negro employees would return to work Monday morning—that is, most of them. A few seemed out for keeps.

This incident took place Wednesday afternoon. Late Saturday evening no representative from either of Orangeburg's Negro Greek Letter organizations had bothered to visit Mrs. Burgess for the purpose of understanding what had happened and helping to punish any violent wrong against her. There are more of these organizations in Orangeburg than you can shake a stick at. Nor had any representative from the numerous men or women's clubs visited Mrs. Burgess in more than three full days, not even the NAACP.

The Sunday, September 13, meeting of the NAACP produced a few strong statements and some possible action. Mrs. F. H. Pierce, a very active woman in the civic affairs of the city, declared that "In striking Mrs. Burgess, Mr. McCoy was striking every Negro woman in Orangeburg, including me. And we cannot rest until some strong action is taken."

Rev. John D. Rhodes spoke in a similar vain, and so did several others. Rev. J. O. Bryan and Rev. Chappelle Davis had expressed similar views on Saturday.

A committee was appointed to investigate the incident, and report back to the local chapter of the NAACP in a special meeting Thursday evening, September 17.

John Burgess, the husband of Mrs. Burgess has for four years worked in the State A and M College's Boarding Department. They have helped a sister of Mr. Burgess through college. They are both high scool graduates, and are a fine upstanding couple who wear sparkling clean clothes and maintain a nice clean home and work for a living.

A number of Orangeburg Negroes have declared that they no longer patronize the McCoy Laundry.

It's Always Easiest To Accent the Negative

The Florida Ku Klux Klan has invited Negroes to join the club, though on a segregated basis. This is just about the last gasp of the Klan.

The Klan, once so strong on a national basis that it was a serious danger to the American way, has divided into a series of local groups. Obviously these groups are having a hard time signing up new members.

The strong Klan of the 1920's was founded on hatreds and held its members together under the banner of intolerance. It withered and died under the combined attack of literacy, higher living standards and men and women of high and Christian principles.

The old Klan hated foreigners, Catholics, Jews, Negroes; anything and anybody that appealed to popular prejudices. It grew wealthy, it had great political power, and when it became obvious that it was a racket for the enrichment of its leaders, members began to fall away.

The Florida Klan, by announcing its Negro division, announced in effect that it didn't hate anybody much anymore. This is an admirable attitude, but will get it nowhere.

It's easy to bring people together and unite them against something. Organizing them in favor of a constructive cause is another story entirely.

SEEKS PAROLE

Wizard Renounces Klan In Prison, Asks Breakup

WHITEVILLE, N.C., Oct. 22 (UP)—The imprisoned imperial wizard of the Carolina Ku Klux Klan, now seeking a parole, renounced the Klan today and urged that it be disbanded.

Pudgy ex-grocer Thomas L. Hamilton of Leesville, S.C., who wore the golden robes of the Carolinas Assn. of Ku Klux Klans, called on "all my friends everywhere to disband the Klan wherever it exists."

SERVES TERM

Hamilton is serving a four-year sentence for conviction of plotting a reign of night-riding terror in Columbus County, S.C.

"I am through with the Ku Klux Klan and believe all my former associates will best serve themselves and society as a whole by taking a similar stand," Hamilton said.

From a prison camp at Castle Hayne, N.C., Hamilton wrote a 700-word letter to Pulitzer-prize winning Editor Willard G. Cole of the Whiteville News-Reporter, declaring he would "never again join or be active in any movement which is not open to any reputable citizen and whose membership is not available to the forces of law and order."

TRULY SORRY

"I want to say to the people of Columbus County that I am truly sorry for the sufferings and heartaches which the Klan brought to them," he said.

"With the help of God in Whom I believe, I shall strive to atone for my share in these sad experiences," he said.

Hamilton, whose Klansmen numbered in the thousands, said, "It has not been easy for me to come to a parting of the ways with many loyal followers who felt they had a duty to perform in the interest of society. I know they are as dedicated to the principles of honesty and decency as I tried to be. However, I have prayed over the matter and I'm sure that God would want me to stay aloof from any organization which presents an opportunity for a person to hide himself behind a mask and commit a crime."

Starting that he will ask for a review of his case by the State Board of Paroles, Hamilfon said, "I hope no one will doubt my humility and repentance."

Solicitor Clifton L. Moore of Burgaw, N. C., the prosecutor who sent Hamilton and 23 followers to prison and convicted 58 others in Columbus County, said he would give "serious consideration" to Hamilton's parole request. Moore may make a recommendation to the State Paroles Board.

Dixie, 1953: Slave or Starve

By MITCHEL LEVITAS

A grim, little-known union battle that may be a turning point in modern labor history is now being waged in the sugar cane fields of southern Louisiana.

The union is the National Agricultural Workers (AFL) whose 3,000 members of Local 317 have been on strike since Oct. 12.

The employers, who own some 75 huge plantations in the "sugar belt," have refused to recognize the union, saying that because agricultural workers are not named in legislation such as the Taft-Hartley Act, they are forbidden to organize into a union.

The growers' latest step is to move for a court injunction against the union as a "conspiracy in restraint of trade"—a charge dating back to the middle ages of organized labor.

The Catholic Committee of the South, which is playing an active pro-labor role in the strike, calls the employers' position "a basic denial of human rights" and "criminally unjust."

Rev. Jerome Drolet, whose parish at Thibodaux, La., is in the center of the sugar belt, is now in New York seeking support for the workers.

The priest calls anti-union businessmen "white-collar, two-armed bandits." An active figure in the labor movement of the region, Father Drolet was interviewed here in the offices of the National Sharecroppers Fund, a group devoted to raising the living standards of farm workers.

This is the clergyman's story of the strikers:

The walkout began at daybreak on Oct. 12, after several rebuffs by employers to discuss union recognition led to an overwhelming strike vote.

Within 48 hours, 50 plantations were shut down.

A week later, 75 plantations were closed and the entire area was an armed camp.

Overseers were deputized. They carry sidearms on public and company roads. State highway patrolmen are on the prowl inside the plantations at night. Strikebreakers imported from Mississippi and Alabama operate tractors with rifles at their elbow. A loudspeaker truck makes rounds, broadcasting back-to-work appeals. The truck is guarded by an armed convoy.

The corporations' big stick is eviction notices from company-owned shacks. So far, about 150 notices have been threatened, affecting 1000 persons. Evictions are brought for reasons such as joining the union or refusing to withdraw from the union.

Owners on some plantations have cut off gas, light, and water.

Many company stores have called in outstanding bills . . . the same debts that made virtual slaves of the workers.

Other growers have held back wages through sudden deductions.

The case of Albert Washington has become familiar throughout the area. Washington has 10 children. He was owed $44.47 for 59 hours' work. Insurance deductions amounted to $2.69. A deduction marked 'cash" came to $41.78. Total take-home pay for Albert Washington: $00.00. The check stub was marked "void."

Medical attention has been denied to many strikers and their families. One overseer announced that in cases of physical contact between workers and strikebreakers medical aid will be refused to union members.

Appeals to the Justice, Labor and Agriculture departments so far gone unanswered.

The president of the American Sugar Cane League, the employer organization, is J. P. Duhy, GOP National Committeeman from Louisiana. The League is the backbone of Dixiecrat strength.

The union says this is the first time since 1879 that plantation workers have been organized. A strike led by the Knights of Labor was broken that year by state militia after workers were marched to the fields under guard and several strike leaders were shot.

Success would mean a long step forward toward organizing the millions of agricultural workers in the South and elsewhere who have lived at near-poverty levels for generations, the union says.

Father Drolet has made the trip to New York at his own expense, on his vacation.

His reason for aiding the strikers is simple: "God's law should be recognized in economic life."

Postal Worker Admits KKK Membership

N.Y. WORLD 10-29-53

MIAMI—(INS)— A postal employe admitted before a federal court in Miami yesterday that he lied to a postal department loyalty board concerning his membership in a chapter of the Ku Klux Klan.

Harvey G. De Rosier, who is charged with lying to the board, admitted that a previous sworn statement made to the board was "false."

De Rosier, in his statement, told the board that he never attended a meeting of the Hialeah chapter of the Klan after May, 1950. Yesterday's admission that thestatement was false came during cross-examination by L. E. Broome, special assistant to the Attorney General.

Before De Rosier took the stand, two greater Miami clergymen and an associate at the Hialeah post office appeared as character witnesses for the defendant.

In yesterday's opening session, In Tuesday's opening session, an undercover FBI agent who posed as a Klan member said that De Rosier was appoined librarian of the Hialeah chapter in October, 1950.

Strange Things Happening In Florida Klan

Staff Correspondence

People who were looking for a laugh last week were furnished with a side-splitting one in the announcement that the Ku Klux Klan in Florida is making a bid for colored members.

With membership slated to cost $1 each, the organization is scheduled to launch into a recruiting program to form colored Klaverns with the traditional Cyclopses and Grand Dragons being named to head them from among the colored ranks.

* * *

ALREADY AN estimated 100,000 strong, the Klan, according to Grand Dragon C. L. Parker of River Junction, Fla., is renouncing lawlessness and planning to drop the white sheets and fiery crosses.

The organization, said the Grand Dragon, has as its purpose fighting segregation and Communism. Our main purpose, he continued, is to keep the Negro from intermarrying with the whites - the law of God. The Negroes have a purer race than we have. We are mongrels, we would like to convince the Negro that he has a pure race and to keep it pure.

* * *

DESPITE THE appeal, however, no great hordes of Negroes were reported lining up to pour their dollars into the till of the KKK. In Florida, as throughout the south, most Negroes were remembering the floggings and the terror of night riders, and thinking of the day when the ride of the Klan usually meant that some one was scheduled for hanging or other maltreatment at the hands of the hooded ones.

Signs that new order of Kluxism was even more widespread than Florida came from Whiteville, N. C., on the heels of the River Junction announcement.

* * *

THOMAS L. HAMILTON, former chief of the hooded order in North and South Carolina, renounced the KKK, according to International News Service, and urged his former associates to work wholaly out in the open for their objectives.

He is currently serving a four year term for allegedly plotting an assault on a Columbus County Negro woman.

* * *

IN A LETTER to Willard Cole, Whiteville, N. C. editor who won a Pulitzer prize for helping bring about the downfall of the Carolina Klans, the 47-year-old ex-grocer said he was through with the Klan and asked former associates to drop the KKK also.

Said the fallen Klansman, . . . the possibilities for evil more than offset any good which might be accomplished by such secret orders.

Cross Burned In Front Of Macon Minister's Home

AR WORLD 11-7-53

MACON — (SNS) — In the third such incident this year, a fiery cross was discovered burning Thursday night in front of the home of Rev. E. D. Curry, a candidate for city alderman.

Rev. Curry discovered the cross at approximately 6 a. m. — some 45 minutes after police were informed. In fact, the police were already on the scene and in possession of the still-burning cross.

Confronted with this sight, Rev. Curry immediately telephoned the mayor and reported that three uniformed police officers were burning a cross in front of his home while a fourth man, in plain-clothes was ringing his doorbell.

Meanwhile the officers were seeking some means of putting out the fire and finally found two buckets of water on the Curry porch. With the fire extinguished, the party returned to police headquarters — still without having gotten anyone to answer the door.

Shortly after their return to headquarters, Mrs. Curry called for someone to come out to the home to be informed of the matter. She was told by the desk sergeant receiving the call that the officers had already been there.

The officer who had led the investigating party, and knocked on the door, then took the telephone and asked Mrs. Curry why someone had not answered the door when he knocked.

Mrs. Curry replied that the family was afraid of violence and had decided to keep the door locked. Macon Police Chief Ben Watkins stated that a full investigation would be made.

Can't Pay Augusta $24,000, Union Says

AR JNL-CAST 11-15-53

AUGUSTA, Ga., Nov. 14 (AP)— City councilmen were faced with the problem today of whether a union must pay for all emergency protection provided by the city during a bus strike.

Richmond County Superior Court has ordered the striking bus drivers union to repay approximately $24,000 to the city and the Augusta Coach Co. for damages and emergency protection costs.

The court said all costs must be paid before it would consider any application for bail for convicted union official R. S. Dixon.

* * *

THE UNION, through its attorney, I. S. Peebles, told the city council's finance committee it did not have enough money to pay the costs.

The union involved is the Amalgamated Association of Street, Electric and Motor Coach Operators of America (AFL).

Peebles appeared before the committee in an attempt to arrive at some agreement which would fulfill the terms of the court order.

Some members of the city council said neither the council nor the finance committee has authority to compromise the terms of the court ruling.

NEVERTHELESS, committee members told Peebles they would be glad to hear from him again after he conferred once more with union leaders and was prepared to make a definite offer. They refused to assure him, however, the offer would be accepted.

The five-month-old bus strike is still on but buses are operating on schedule, manned by nonunion drivers.

COLUMBUS COUNTY, N.C., Nov. 28—It was Sunday afternoon, July 22, 1950, and farmers ambled along Railroad Street in Tabor City, N.C. Others propped against the wall of the feed store, talking and taking things easy. July is a slow season in Tabor City; the farmers are just a month away from auctioning their tobacco.

COLUMBUS COUNTY, N.C., Nov. 28—It was Sunday afternoon, July 22, 1950, and farmers ambled along Railroad Street in Tabor City, N.C. That afternoon, sort of close and sultry, eased on to sundown and it was dark when the siren sounded. Folks opened the doors of their homes and looked out, but there wasn't any fire and they wondered why the siren wailed.

One fellow heard the beckoning cry and told his wife, "Believe I'll walk down and see what's causing all the fuss." He was W. Horace Carter, editor of the Tabor City Tribune. He was 30 at the time.

The lead car in the parade, its siren sounding, had a blazing neon cross riveted to the front bumper. It rose high, telling the people that the Ku Klux Klan had come. There had been rumors about the Klan organizing over in South Carolina, just a mile across the line. Now the rumors were true and the Klan was riding into Tabor City where young Carter lived.

CARTER, COLE WON AWARD
Pulitzer Prize Medal

The motorcade eased by, the dome light in each car burning, hooded men inside peering out. The siren kept wailing. The cars moved past, 32 of them.

Farmers stood still, staring as the last tail-light blinked out. Negroes grabbed their children and hurried away, clutching their Saturday night groceries and getting out of town.

Carter told his wife what he'd seen and throughout that night, sleepless, he figured what to do. Was the Klan coming back to devil the South again, after it had been stomped out in so many places—Alabama, Mississippi, Georgia, the Carolinas? Was it coming back?

And what was he to do? Would the next issue of his paper carry a paragraph mentioning the parade? He was sweating at daybreak when he pledged himself to risk his paper, himself, and the safety of his family to fight the damnable thing that had defiled his town. A newspaper worth its ink dares everything in battling evil; no matter the risks it runs.

Young Carter told his wife what he wanted to do. She said go ahead. He pointed out the threat to their nestegg which, to the last penny, was invested in the paper. She said go ahead. He told her of the danger to himself, to her, their home and their children. She said go ahead.

In fulfillment of the newspaper code, his next issue trumpeted the truth about the Klan and The Tribune's defiance:

"In this democratic country, there is no place for an organization of the calibre of the Ku Klux Klan. An organization that works outside the law is unfit for recognition in a country of free men. Saturday's episode is a black eye to our area and an admission that our law enforcement is inadequate . . ."

Another Speaks Out

Sixteen miles away in the same county, in the town of Whiteville, was another editor, Willard G. Cole, of the News Reporter. Cole, some months before, had heard talk of the Klan organizing and he spoke out against it.

Now he joined Carter and, together, the two men strode into one of the nastiest, meanest fights ever fought by newspapers against a bunch of hooded cowards who, bold in their gang strength, terrorized a countryside, dragged men and women—most of them white, with only now and then a Negro—from their homes and beat them with straps cut from sawmill belts. Beat them bloody.

The two editors never backed down. Almost every time their papers went on the streets of Tabor City and Whiteville, into the homes of Columbus County, the brutalities of the Klan were recounted and the indictment of the hooded organization was repeated.

Threats came to Carter and to Cole by letters. Men stopped them on the street and spoke their warnings. The head of the Klan visited Carter and in a letter ordered him to stop his editorials. Cole was notified that if he didn't stop writing editorials, he might get fixed so he couldn't write anything.

The two editors published the threats and, in adjoining columns, continued their editorials calling for all decent men to join in ending this flouting of democracy, this dare to law and order.

LESLIE S. THOMPSON
He Risked Paper, Safety in Fight

Carter's three-year-old son asked his father: "When is the Klan going to beat you?"

Family Makes Pact

Cole and his wife and their sixteen-year-old boy joined in a frightful pact. The wife had a shotgun. The son had a carbine. They pledged among themselves, Cole insisting on it, that if the Klan came to the house and dragged him away, his wife and his son would start shooting and no matter who fell, not even if Cole himself went down, they would fire so long as a single Klansman stood on his feet.

This was the spirit of the two Southern editors, a pair of country boys, running country newspapers, a weekly in Tabor City and a semi-weekly in Whiteville.

They kept fighting until the state sent in its agents. The FBI moved in: some of the beating victims had been carried across the Carolina line.

The end of the fight can be seen today in state and national prisons; in one, in particular, where the Imperial Wizard is a flabby-fleshed kitchen helper, flour-smeared and stinking of grease and tallow, as he cooks for a gang of convicts. The Grand Titans and the Great Giants, jerked out of their green robes with the red and golden crosses on their backs, now sweep out cells and scrub jail corridors.

Smashed as an organization, the Klan showed up in court without its hoods. And the Klan was just a bunch of yokels and yahoos, individual cowards, who had a grudge against somebody and, swaggering in mob power, dragged them out and beat them for spite, beat them for the fun of watching them writhe under the strap and hearing their pleas for mercy.

First Klan Convictions

They stood in court, the bedraggled country thugs, and pleaded guilty. Some were sent to the roads and some to prison—and some of them still are there. Others were fined. Others were given suspended sentences.

For the first time in the United States, Klansmen were convicted for Klan activities, convicted in both state and federal courts. It was the first time Klansmen had failed to influence and manipulate officers of the law and juries, both grand and petit, in such a way as to go scot-free, shaming the due process of law. It was the first time that Klansmen walked into court and were hauled away to prison.
